money in grants, contracts, and cooperative agreements. In the 2009–2010 fiscal year alone, the university received $388.2 million. Gregory has also succeeded in doubling the number of endowed faculty positions, and he has seen student enrollment grow to record numbers—28,682 in the fall of 2010.

Gregory will certainly be missed on the Iowa State University campus. He will be remembered by students as being easy to relate to, accessible, and visible at university events. He will be remembered by faculty for his communication skills and management style that brought out the best in those around him. Gregory will be remembered by community leaders and business members for his efforts to build and improve direct relationships between the academic world and the business world. More than anything, however, Gregory will be remembered for making Iowa State an admirable university with a cutting-edge reputation both in Iowa and around the world.

I thank Gregory Geoffroy for his many years of service to the students and employees of Iowa State University. It is an honor to be his representative, and I know that my colleagues in the United States Congress will join me in wishing him happiness and good health in his retirement.

TRIBUTE TO PAUL J. WIEDORFER

HON. JOHN P. SARBANES

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 2, 2011

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Paul J. Wiedorfer, Maryland's last surviving World War II Medal of Honor recipient. Mr. Wiedorfer passed away on May 25th at the Baltimore VA Medical Center. He was 90 years old.

Paul, the son of a German immigrant, was born in Baltimore, Maryland in 1921. He attended St. Andrew's School and went on to graduate from Baltimore Polytechnic Institute. He worked for Baltimore Gas & Electric Co. as an apprentice power station operator, until he enlisted in the Army in 1943.

Serving in a unit from General George Patton's 3rd Army, he experienced his first day of combat during the Battle of the Bulge on December 25, 1944. On that Christmas Day in an operation near Chaumont, Belgium, his company was ambushed. In the fight that ensued, Mr. Wiedorfer darted across an open field of enemy fire and single-handedly destroyed two German machine gun nests, while taking several prisoners. Amazingly, he was unharmed. That same afternoon he was given a battlefield promotion to sergeant.

On February 10, 1945, while crossing the Saar River in Germany, Mr. Wiedorfer was seriously injured when mortar shrapnel tore into his stomach and broke his left leg and two right fingers. While recuperating at hospital, in England, one of the other patients informed Mr. Wiedorfer that the newspaper Stars and Stripes was reporting he would receive the Medal of Honor for his heroic actions in Belgium. Mr. Wiedorfer later told the Baltimore Sun "To be perfectly honest, I wasn't really sure what the hell [the Medal of Honor] was because all I was, was some dogface guy in the infantry."

Mr. Wiedorfer spent more than three years in the hospital recovering from his wounds. He was discharged from the Army in 1947, having reached the rank of master sergeant. His other decorations included the Purple Heart and Bronze Star. He returned to his life and job in Baltimore and retired in 1981. Paul and his wife, the former Alice Staufer, had four children: Nancy Mazer, who passed in 2010, Gary Wiedorfer of Cocoa, Florida, and Rande Wiedorfer and Paul J. Wiedorfer Jr., who both currently reside in the Congressional District I represent.

Mr. Wiedorfer led a fulfilled life. I would like to take this moment to thank him for his service to the United States, and to pass along my condolences to his proud family. He was a true American patriot and a Baltimore treasure.

RECOGNIZING SGT SHINYEI "ROCKY" MATAYOSHI ON EARN- ING THE DISTINGUISHED SER- VICE CROSS FOR EXTRAORDINARY HEROISM DURING ACTION IN WORLD WAR II

HON. MAZIE K. HIRONO

OF HAWAII

Thursday, June 2, 2011

Ms. HIRONO. Mr. Speaker, on June 7th, 2011, former Technical Sergeant Shinyei Rocky Matayoshi will go the Hall of Heroes at the Pentagon to be awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for extraordinary heroism during World War II as a member of the famed 442nd Regimental Combat Team of the United States Army. This marks the 29th Distinguished Service Cross awarded to the 100th Battalion and the 442nd Regimental Combat Team.

Rocky was born in 1924 in the sugar plantation town of Koloa on the island of Kauai. He was a senior at Kauai High School when Japan attacked Pearl Harbor. Shortly after the attack, Rocky's father was arrested and sent to a detention center for Japanese Americans in Santa Fe, New Mexico. Rocky left school to work for the sugar plantation to help with the war effort and support his family.

When the call for volunteers for the 442nd Regimental Combat Team was announced in February 1942, Rocky was one of three in his community to volunteer. He hoped that by volunteering and demonstrating his loyalty, his father would be allowed to come home to care for his five other children. Unfortunately, that didn't happen.

Rocky was assigned to Company G, 2nd Battalion of the 442nd. He began as a private and through diligence and hard work was promoted to Technical Sergeant of the 3rd Platoon. Following his training at Camp Shelby, Mississippi, Rocky went with his unit to Italy in June 1944. He participated in every campaign in Italy and France and reported for roll call every day except for two days when he was confined to the field hospital for illness.

Rocky's combat philosophy was to serve as his own scout—and to take the highest risk assignments for himself. He led by example, displaying courage and leadership, which his men accepted and respected.

I quote from the citation awarding the Distinguished Service Cross to Technical Sergeant Shinyei "Rocky" Matayoshi:

For extraordinary heroism in action:

Technical Sergeant Shinyei Matayoshi distinguished himself by acts of gallantry and intrepidity above and beyond the call of duty while serving as a Platoon Sergeant in Company G, 2d Battalion, 442d Regimental Combat Team during combat operations against an armed enemy on Mount Belvedere, Italy. On 7 April 1945, Technical Sergeant Matayoshi ordered his Platoon to advance up the steep slopes of Mount Belvedere to seize the heavily fortified forest areas that were under enemy control. As the Platoon approached the elevated ridge line, Technical Sergeant Matayoshi's Platoon was attacked by intense machine gun fire from at least five enemy machine gun nests from frontal, left and right flanks. Technical Sergeant Matayoshi did not waiver despite enduring an overabundance of devastating automatic and small arms fire while attacking the first machine gun nest. While suppressing the enemy with his Thompson machine gun and throwing hand grenades, he killed four enemy soldiers and took one prisoner. Despite the intensive barrage of enemy firepower, directed against him, Technical Sergeant Matayoshi moved forward leading the direct assault destroying three other machine gun nests, killing or wounding approximately fifteen enemy soldiers, some at as close as a five meter range. Technical Sergeant Matayoshi secured the key terrain, which paved the way for the Battalion's pursuit of the retreating enemy soldiers. Technical Sergeant Matayoshi's selfless leadership, courageous actions, and extraordinary devotion to duty are in keeping with the finest traditions of military service and reflect great credit upon himself, Company G, 2d Battalion, 442d Regimental Combat Team, and the Army of the United States.

When I read this, I am struck by the courage and willingness to sacrifice shown by Sgt. Matayoshi and all the other young Japanese American men under his command. At age 21, with his father held in a detention camp for the crime of being of Japanese ancestry, Rocky willingly offered his life in defense of liberty and, most important, of the United States. These young men were patriots in the true sense of the word.

In addition to the Distinguished Service Cross and the Congressional Gold Medal recently bestowed on all members of the 442nd and 100th Battalion, Rocky received the Silver Star with Oak Leaf Cluster, the Bronze Star Medal for Valor, the Bronze Star Medal for Meritorious Service, the Purple Heart Medal, a Presidential Unit Citation, a Meritorious Unit Citation, the American Campaign Medal, the Asiatic-Pacific Campaign Medal with one Bronze Service Star, the European-African Campaign Medal with 4 Bronze Service Stars and one Arrowhead, the World War II Victory Medal, and the Combat Infantryman's Badge.

Rocky married Elsie Goya of Honolulu, and they have four children. After attending Wilson Community College and the Illinois Institute of Technology, Rocky worked in an auto body shop and part-time at a gas station. His children all earned full scholarships to fund their undergraduate degrees. Two of his children earned doctorates—one in physiology and the other in biophysics—and another earned a masters degree in biology, all on fellowships.

Congratulations, Rocky, on receiving this overdue recognition. You and your brothers in arms taught America a vital lesson that is still valid today. Being an American is not a matter of one's ethnic heritage or race—it is defined by patriotism and a willingness to sacrifice for one's country. Anyone who questions the patriotism of Americans of different ethnic backgrounds must confront the example of the Japanese American heroes of World War II.

Thank you for your selfless service to our nation.

A TRIBUTE TO PRINCIPAL

HON. TOM LATHAM

OF IOWA

Thursday, June 2, 2011

Mr. LATHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and congratulate The Principal Financial Group, led by CEO Larry Zimbleman, for being recently being named a 2011 Freedom Award Recipient. The Freedom Award is the highest recognition by the Department of Defense given to employers that display exceptional support of their employees serving in the Guard and Reserve.

Principal employee Major Kerry M. Studer nominated Principal for this award. Major Studer is also a recent recipient of the Bronze Star Medal for his noble service as Commanding Officer of the 443rd Transportation Company in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Major Studer nominated Principal Financial Group for this award because of the "the extraordinary lengths" his company went in order to support him and his family while he was away defending our freedoms. While he was away, his coworkers looked closely after his family and would gladly accompany his wife and children to school and sporting events that he was unable to attend. Principal also "adopted" Major Studer's unit and mailed them hundreds of PT uniforms, t-shirts and countless care packages.

Principal is one of only 15 companies to receive this prestigious award amidst the 4,049 nominations submitted. Principal and the other 2011 honorees will be recognized here in Washington later this year at the 16th annual Secretary of Defense Employer Support Freedom Award Ceremony. Principal Financial Group joins an elite class as only 145 employers have attained this honor in the last 15 years.

Mr. Speaker, Major Studer's commitment and courage during his service coupled with his company's unwavering support serves as an important example of American patriotism in the heartland as well as the battlefield. I commend Major Studer, Larry Zimbleman, and all the employees of Principal for their selfless dedication to a cause greater than their own. It is my honor to represent Major Studer, his family and all Iowans in the United States Congress and I know my colleagues will join me in congratulating them for their accomplishment.

BRENT BESHORE

HON. BLAINE LUETKEMEYER

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 2, 2011

Mr. LUETKEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize a locally coordinated, social media-based fundraiser that was held recently in Columbia, MO, for the Joplin tornado relief effort that raised more than $1 million.

This story begins on Sunday, May 22, 2011 with Brent Beshore, a Joplin native turned Columbia entrepreneur, who immediately after the tornado struck Joplin began to call, email, text and Facebook family and friends to ensure they were safe. Wanting more information, but without anywhere to go, Brent created a Facebook page titled "Joplin, MO Tornado Recovery" so others would have a place to get and share information. Brent then began pulling information from a Twitter feed set up to track Joplin and tornado keywords, information and requests and sharing it with the group. The Facebook page grew almost instantaneously from 60 likes, to 600, then to 6000 and continued to grow at an almost exponential pace. The group currently has over 170,000 likes.

Brent reached out to Tim Rich, executive director of the Heart of Missouri United Way and a former staff member for my predecessor, Congressman Kenny Hulshof, to set up a fund for relief efforts. Tim without hesitation set up a special fund that would go one hundred percent of its proceeds to Joplin tornado relief. Within hours of the tornado, Brent and Tim had established the world's first dedicated tornado relief fund for Joplin. They quickly established an ambitious fundraising goal of $500,000. KOMU-TV, the NBC-affiliated television station for Mid-Missouri also played a key role in getting the word out about the fundraising efforts and even held a telethon to assist Joplin.

Through these efforts donations came in from small towns in Missouri to as far away as Saudi Arabia, Sweden and South Africa. A simple idea had quickly turned into a global operation.

Brent was in contact with politicians, musicians, disaster relief experts, and Fortune 500 charitable foundations. Social media was constantly updated and organized.

The results were nothing short of astonishing. By Thursday May 26, their fundraising efforts surpassed their greatest expectations, taking in over $1 million. The team had executed a flawless event including an on-air prime time telethon and had collected donations from around the world. The Facebook page was referenced as a go-to resource by most national media outlets. The relief efforts were even re-tweeted by Oprah Winfrey.

The idea of one man, executed with the help of his friends and his community, has benefited so many. I ask my colleagues in joining me and thanking all the volunteers who made this effort a resounding success. I also ask my colleagues to continue to keep all of the people impacted by this disaster in their thoughts and prayers.

HONORING THE RETIREMENT OF SERGEANT CRAIG BERRY, AFTER 20 YEARS OF DEDICATED SERVICE TO THE NORWICH POLICE DEPARTMENT

HON. RICHARD L. HANNA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 2, 2011

Mr. HANNA. Mr. Speaker, I proudly pause to recognize Sergeant Craig Berry of Norwich, NY. Sergeant Berry recently retired after 20 years of dedicated service in the Norwich City Police Department.

Sergeant Berry began his career with the Norwich Police Department at the age of 25, on March 17, 1991. Twenty years later, the department honored the retirement of one of its finest officers on April 16, 2011. Berry not only played an important role in the community, but was also especially appreciated for his help with modernizing the department's technology.

Law enforcement officers must be recognized for the true bravery and selflessness that they display on the job every day. Sergeant Berry is yet another example of this, an honorable American, who has dedicated 20 years of his life to the improvement and safety of his community.

Mr. Speaker, I proudly ask you to join me in honoring Sergeant Craig Berry for his 20 years of exemplary service on behalf of the Norwich community and Police Department.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentlewoman from California (Ms. CHU) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Ms. CHU led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain up to five requests for 1-minute speeches on each side.

AMERICAN FAMILIES NEED JOBS

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, this morning's announcement of an increase in the unemployment rate indicates yet again that the President's economic policies are failing American families. The out-of-control spending is killing small business job creation.

Sadly, more than 14 million people are still without jobs, and the average price of gasoline is almost $4 a gallon. The President pledged to reduce unemployment to 8 percent and failed. He pledged to skyrocket energy costs and he succeeded. This is a failure of leadership on job creation and gas cost. American families are at risk.

Earlier this week, the President asked Congress to increase the debt limit by $2.4 trillion with no meaningful reforms. Reforms are needed because American families need jobs. The President's request was defeated in a bipartisan vote.

House Republicans presented the "Cut and Grow" congressional plan. It's a commonsense plan: first cut spending, then the economy will grow. That's how to create jobs.

In conclusion, God bless our troops, and we will never forget September the 11th in the global war on terrorism.

REPUBLICAN PLAN TO END MEDICARE

(Ms. CHU asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. CHU. Mr. Speaker, House Republicans are trying to sell America's seniors a false bill of goods. Republicans claim that seniors won't be impacted by their plan to end Medicare. That simply isn't true.

What's true is that insurance bureaucrats will be placed in between seniors and their doctors. What's true is that a senior in my State of California will be forced to pay $6,000 extra in out-of-pocket expenses; then, once the Republican plan to end Medicare takes full effect, those out-of-pocket expenses will double. Imagine our seniors being turned away at the pharmacy. Imagine seniors having to reach deeper into their wallet after a doctor's visit.

The GOP plan to end Medicare is unacceptable. We must keep our promises to our seniors.

COMMENDING NORTH DAKOTA VOLUNTEERS

(Mr. BERG asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BERG. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend the countless volunteers who have given time and resources in the wake of unprecedented flooding.

As thousands of North Dakotans fight to protect their homes and communities, North Dakotans have come together to fill sandbags, to help those in need, providing food for volunteers and shelter for those who have been displaced by flooding.

This has truly been a team effort, working together with Senator CONRAD and Senator HOEVEN, Governor Dalrymple, mayors and Federal officials to ensure that North Dakota receives the vital support to fight this flood and rebuild as soon as the flood is over.

I commend State and local officials and the North Dakota National Guard for the tremendous work that they have done, working tirelessly to prepare for this flood and quickly responding to those who need help, and most importantly, to the tens of thousands of volunteers who embody North Dakota's spirit and show that in times of hardship that they will pull together and get the job done.

Again, I thank all the volunteers, and our hearts go out to those who are fighting the flood.

DON'T END MEDICARE

(Mr. TONKO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TONKO. Mr. Speaker, my constituents are wondering when the House majority will hear their cries: Don't end Medicare. In fact, a recent CNN poll showed opposition to the Road to Ruin budget that ends Medicare, with the highest amongst those being senior citizens at 74 percent opposed to the plan.

In addition, the voters in the 26th Congressional District of New York recently made their voices heard when they elected Representative KATHY HOCHUL to be the newest Member of Congress. Their top concern was that the Republican budget threatens to end Medicare. They know that under the plan, anyone under the age of 55 will be forced to save an extra $182,000 just to pay for their future health care costs in retirements. That number rises to a startling $400,000 for those in their thirties. These statistics are even more astounding when you consider the billions of dollars in tax breaks Republicans have given away to our country's wealthiest individuals as well as Big Oil companies.

Enough is enough. If Republicans are serious about protecting our Nation's seniors, they would work with us to strengthen Medicare, not end it.

THE PLAN TO END MEDICARE

(Mr. PALLONE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, Republicans are doubling down on their plan to end Medicare, voting this week for a second time on their Road to Ruin budget that ends Medicare. Republicans instead should listen to the will of the people, who overwhelmingly oppose their Medicare plans, and instead work in a bipartisan way to address deficits and strengthen Medicare.

The Republican budget more than doubles costs for future generations and puts insurance companies back in charge. According to the CBO, in 2022 the average senior will see their costs increase by more than $6,000, and the Republican budget also cuts benefits for today's seniors. It reopens the prescription drug doughnut hole, increasing costs for the estimated 4 million seniors who fall into the coverage gap by as much as $44 billion over the next decade, including $2.2 billion in 2012 alone. It also increases costs for preventive care and eliminates the annual wellness benefit.

The Republican budget has the wrong priorities and makes the wrong choices for seniors and middle class families.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H. RES. 292, REGARDING DEPLOYMENT OF UNITED STATES ARMED FORCES IN LIBYA, AND PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H. CON. RES. 51, LIBYA WAR POWERS RESOLUTION

Mr. SCOTT of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 294 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 294

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order without intervention of any point of order to consider in the House the resolution (H. Res. 292) declaring that the President shall not deploy, establish, or maintain the presence of units and members of the United States Armed Forces on the ground in Libya, and for other purposes. The resolution shall be considered as read. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution to its adoption without intervening motion or demand for division of the question except one hour of debate, with 40 minutes equally divided and controlled by the chair and ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, 20 minutes equally divided and controlled by the chair and ranking minority member of the Committee on Armed Services.

SEC. 2. Upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order without intervention of any point of order to consider in the House the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 51) directing the President, pursuant to section 5(c) of the War Powers Resolution, to remove the United States Armed Forces from Libya, if called up by the chair of the Committee on Foreign Affairs or her designee. The concurrent resolution shall be considered as read. The concurrent resolution shall be debatable for one hour, with 30 minutes controlled by Representative Ros-Lehtinen of Florida or her designee and 30 minutes controlled by Representative Kucinich of Ohio or his designee. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the concurrent resolution to its adoption without intervening motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOMACK). The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SCOTT of South Carolina. For the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCGOVERN), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SCOTT of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days to revise and extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT of South Carolina. House Resolution 294 provides for a closed rule for consideration of two measures, House Concurrent Resolution 51 and House Resolution 292.

This rule allows for the consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 51, consistent with the War Powers Act, and provides for an alternative measure introduced by the Speaker of the House. I support the Speaker's resolution and the ability to have up-or-down votes on both resolutions.

This approach is consistent with the Speaker's and our conference's goal of a more open and transparent process, allowing the House to work its will on both resolutions. Members can vote for one of the resolutions, both of the resolutions, or neither of them.

The underlying legislation addresses the administration's actions in Libya. Mr. Speaker, on March 19, 2011, President Obama ordered U.S. military intervention in Libya as a part of a multinational coalition. Well over 60 days later—let me say that one more time—over 60 days later the President has still not asked for, nor has he received, authorization from Congress to commit troops to such action.

Mr. Speaker, article I of our Constitution states that Congress, and only Congress, has the power to declare war. This point was made best in 2007 by then-Senator Barack Obama, who said: "The President does not have power under the Constitution to unilaterally authorize a military attack in a situation that does not involve stopping an actual or imminent threat to the Nation."

Just in case we missed that, the current President got it right in 2007 when he was a Senator. I want to quote him one more time. He said that "the President does not have power under the Constitution to unilaterally authorize a military attack in a situation that does not involve stopping an actual or imminent threat to the Nation."

While the United States must play offense in the war on terror, and we should not have to wait for threats to materialize before acting. It is not clear, it is simply not clear that Libya posed a threat to our Nation that justified the use of troops, the United States' troops.

It is undeniable that Qadhafi is one of the most notorious terrorists of our time, and the world will be a better place when he is gone. But at the same time, there is no shortage of dictators who should be removed from power. Syria's Assad is butchering his own people as we speak. Iran, under Ahmadinejad, sponsors terrorism around the world, he persecutes religious minorities, and is working to develop a nuclear bomb.

Moreover, the President has not outlined the purpose or the scope of our action in Libya. Is the objective the removal of Qadhafi from power? If so, who will replace Qadhafi? And what assurances do the American people have that the alternative will be any better than Qadhafi?

House Resolution 292 accomplishes four objectives. First, it establishes that the President of the United States, President Obama, has not asked for congressional authorization for a military involvement in Libya, and that Congress has not granted such authority. Second, the resolution reasserts that Congress has the option to withhold funding for any unauthorized use of the United States Armed Forces, including such activities in Libya. Third, the resolution requires the President to provide within 14 days information to Congress which should have been provided from the start. Fourth, the resolution reaffirms the vote that Congress took just last week that says that there should be no U.S. troops on the ground in Libya unless they are there to rescue American troops.

It is unfortunate, it is very unfortunate that our President has made this resolution necessary. Yet at the same time, we are mindful that the congressional action must consider our responsibilities to our allies, including those that are currently in harm's way. America keeps its promises. We keep our commitments. And we stand by our soldiers and our allies. I encourage my colleagues to vote "yes" on the rule.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from South Carolina for yielding me the customary 30 minutes, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, last week the House spoke quite clearly on the question of Libya during the debate on the fiscal year 2012 National Defense Authorization Act. By a vote of 415-5 on a bipartisan amendment offered by Congressman CONYERS, the House voted against U.S. deploying ground troops in Libya. So the House has clearly stated its position on U.S. military operations in Libya.

But that vote did not touch upon two serious matters, each very much connected to the other. First is the fact that the President did not seek a congressional authorization for a U.S. military operation in Libya in coordination with our NATO allies; nor did the leadership of this House insist on one or pursue one.

Second, under the War Powers Resolution, the President has not sought the authorization of Congress during the required time period to maintain U.S. Armed Forces in military operations in Libya. Simply put, under the War Powers Resolution, the President must obtain congressional authorization for military action that lasts longer than 60 days. If Congress does not authorize military action, the President must withdraw troops within 30 days.

The 60-day authorization deadline expired on May 20, and the 30-day withdrawal deadline expires on June 19. Therefore, the Congress now has the responsibility to call for the end of U.S. military operations in the absence of a clearly defined authorization for U.S. military operations in Libya.

Last night, Mr. Speaker, the Rules Committee considered two resolutions: one offered by Representatives KUCINICH, BURTON and CAPUANO, which clearly addresses the violation of the War Powers Resolution and would require the withdrawal of U.S. forces from military operations in Libya. If passed by the House and the Senate, it would have the force of law. The other, offered by the Speaker of the House, is a simple H. Res. a nonbinding resolution, a document which is simply advisory in nature and relevant only as a statement of the House, which reprimands the President for failing to seek proper authorization for our military operations in Libya, asks for reports to provide the House with necessary information regarding national security interests and costs of the Libya operation, and then does nothing. Nothing, Mr. Speaker. It again shirks the responsibility of this House and this Congress as a whole to either take up and pass an authorization for U.S. military operations in Libya, or pass a resolution requiring a withdrawal of U.S. forces and an end to U.S. military operations in Libya.

Mr. Speaker, it's easy to complain, it's easy to lay blame, but it takes leadership to own up to our own responsibilities and take appropriate action, and it takes leadership to handle this process in a responsible way. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, this process does not do that. The Republican leadership rushed their resolution through the Rules Committee without any hearings and without any markup, violating their 3-day pledge to allow people to read the bill. So much for the new, open House of Representatives.

This would be sad, Mr. Speaker, if it weren't so important. War is a serious issue. Whether we are sending unmanned drones, armed jets or American soldiers into harm's way, war must be debated and considered by the Congress in a responsible manner. The Republican leadership, however, is not treating this issue the way it deserves to be treated. This debate deserves better, quite frankly. The American people deserve better.

I urge my colleagues to defeat this rule.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SCOTT of South Carolina. Just one clarification: The concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 51, does not become law.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. WILSON).

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. I am honored to be here with the newly elected freshman member of the First District of South Carolina, TIM SCOTT. I appreciate his leadership on the Rules Committee. The people of South Carolina are very proud of his service. The people of the First District of South Carolina are noted for their strong support of the military. They elect Members to Congress like TIM SCOTT who work for a strong military, a strong national defense in the tradition of Ronald Reagan, of peace through strength.

In the First District, the Congressman has the Citadel, the military college of South Carolina; the Charleston Air Force Base, the Naval Weapons Station, SPAWARS. In fact, I actually grew up there adjacent to a U.S. Coast Guard base, so we know the value of a strong military.

Personally, in fact, Congressman SCOTT's brother was the Command Sergeant Major at Landstuhl, one of the largest military hospitals in the world in Germany. Through his Army experience and family connection, we know that TIM SCOTT is for a strong military and understands as I do how important it is that military force should only be used when it is in America's vital interests.

I have the perspective of being the son of a World War II veteran, a Flying Tiger. I served 31 years in the Army National Guard. I have four sons currently serving in the military. I want our military to be used properly. When the President is right, as he was to follow the advice of General David Petraeus to add troops, the surge in Afghanistan, the resulting success that we see in Afghanistan today, we're happy to support him. But this resolution is very important, because we have not seen from the President of the United States, there has been a failure of leadership in regard to explaining why military forces are being used in Libya.

I'm very pleased with the resolution. The key point that the American people need to know is declaring that the President shall not deploy, establish, or maintain the presence of units and members of the United States Armed Forces on the ground in Libya. To put troops on the ground, I believe, is highly irresponsible. A case has not been made of why this is in America's vital interests. We know there is great conflict as to who the rebels are. What are these rebels? Are these al Qaeda elements that are attacking the Qadhafi forces? The Qadhafi forces themselves? What would happen if we got involved with troops on the ground? These issues need to be resolved on behalf of the American military, on behalf of the American people, and we urge through this resolution that the answers be provided to the American people, to the American military, to our allies, why are we there? What is America's vital interest?

And so I urge support of the rule and commend the freshman Congressman from South Carolina for his leadership.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Again, just so we're all clear here, under the War Powers Act, if a concurrent resolution is passed demanding that the troops are removed from a particular country, then they will be removed, if you believe that the War Powers Act carries any weight, and I believe that the War Powers Act is relevant here. That's what the resolution by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH) does.

What the resolution my friends in the Republican leadership have drafted does is nothing. Your resolution doesn't even have to go to the Senate. It won't go to the Senate. It directs the President to do a whole bunch of things that, quite frankly, he can ignore, because this bill doesn't mean anything. What this is—and let's be clear about what this is—is this is a way for some of my friends on the other side of the aisle to kind of cover their back sides, to be able to say to their constituents, We did something tough on Libya. Let me read to you how tough the language is in the bill that the Speaker of the House has drawn up. A lot of tough language. It sounds good. Except when you look a little bit more closely, you realize that this is an H. Res, which doesn't mean a thing.

So if you're into symbolism, if you're into therapy, you know, vote for the Boehner resolution. If you are interested in action, if you are interested in actually living up to our responsibilities as lawmakers in the United States Congress, then I would suggest that you look at the resolution that the gentleman from Ohio has drafted.

You can talk all you want about how the Republican alternative here is somehow meaningful, but it really isn't. Again, I shouldn't be surprised. No one should be surprised here, because most of what they have done since they assumed control of the Congress has been meaningless, has been symbolic. Whether it's dealing with health care or jobs, which they don't want to talk about, you name it, a lot of it has been mostly symbolic. I think on the issue of war, we should take it more seriously and be more honest with the American people as to what we're doing.

At this point I would like to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman New York (Mr. NADLER).

Mr. NADLER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, what we are confronted with today is not primarily a question of foreign policy or even of war policy. We are presented with a question of constitutional law and of the prerogatives of the United States Congress. Shall the President, like the King of England, be a dictator in foreign policy? Shall the President have the unfettered right to take this country to war without so much as a "by your leave" from Congress as the King of England could do without authorization from Parliament?

The authors of our Constitution answered that question in the negative. They said, "No, we don't trust kings, we don't trust executives to make a decision to go to war. We want that to be the prerogative of the people as represented by the Congress."

A whole series of Presidents since World War II have forgotten that, starting with Harry Truman in the Korean War and Lyndon Johnson in the Vietnam War right up to the present.

Now, there are reasons for this, and I will go into that when I speak on the Kucinich resolution a little later. I would simply observe now I am going to vote for the Boehner resolution, but I am also going to vote for the Kucinich resolution.

The Boehner resolution is fine as far as it goes, but it doesn't deal with the basic problem. The Boehner resolution says the President has failed to provide Congress with a compelling rationale based upon U.S. security interests for current United States military activities, that is true. Frankly, I do not understand why we are in Libya.

The Boehner resolution then says the President shall transmit to the House of Representatives all kinds of information, basically saying why we are there, and that's good. You should have done that before we went there, but it's good that we demand this information now. But then the Boehner resolution stops.

All it demands of the President is that he gives us his reasons. And his reasons, maybe we will agree with him, maybe we won't. Maybe they are sufficient, and maybe they are not.

Then it says, "Findings."

"(a) The President has not sought, and Congress has not provided, authorization for the introduction or continued involvement of the United States Armed Forces in Libya."

That's true.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MCGOVERN. I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. NADLER. I thank the gentleman.

"(b) Congress has the constitutional prerogative to withhold funding for any unauthorized use of the U.S. Armed Forces, including for unauthorized activities regarding Libya."

That's also true, but so what. It doesn't direct anything. It doesn't say that what the President did was outside his powers. It doesn't direct that the activity stop. It doesn't do anything. I think we should do something, because if in this situation we do not reclaim congressional powers, I can think of no set of circumstances under which the President cannot go to war without going to Congress first, no set of circumstances. And that turns the Constitution and the intentions of our Framers and the intentions of our whole constitutional law system on its head.

Therefore, I urge a vote of "yes" on the Boehner resolution and a vote of "yes" on the Kucinich resolution, which, unlike the Boehner resolution, actually does something about the situation we find ourselves in.

Mr. SCOTT of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. DENHAM).

Mr. DENHAM. You know, this could not be any more serious. It's important for us to debate what our servicemembers are doing in foreign conflicts.

The War Powers Act, it is important to make sure that the President understands from Congress exactly what we are willing to do with our American troops and where we are willing to fight.

But I do agree he has to give us his reasons. In Desert Storm, we knew why we were there. We knew what our role was, we knew what our goals were, we knew what our exit strategy was.

These are the very reasons that we are looking for before we appropriate funds, before we put our troops at risk, before any boots go to the ground, before this conflict escalates any further, before a new government comes into play, we expect these answers to be given to us. We expect the President to do his job, to show leadership, to address Congress and explain why he is committing American servicemembers.

So this is very serious. It is very serious and it's long overdue. The President should have come here first. He certainly should have come here within 60 days. It is long overdue, it is very serious, and the time to demand answers is now.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 seconds.

I hear a lot of talk on the other side about the Boehner resolution requires the President to do this, it directs him to do that, he must do this, he shall do this. But the way you have presented this in this H. Res. form, the President doesn't have to do anything. So let's not fool ourselves, and let's not fool the American people that somehow this is meaningful.

I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON LEE).

Ms. JACKSON LEE of Texas. This could be no more a somber debate than what we are doing here today, and I thank the manager, Mr. MCGOVERN, and the gentleman from South Carolina for recognizing, through the leadership of our House, that the American people must be engaged in the constitutional duties that have been set out for the three branches of government.

Under the Constitution, the war powers are divided between Congress and the President, and among other relevant grants, Congress has the power to declare war and raise and support armed forces while the President is the Commander in Chief.

The congressional duties fall under article 1, section 8, and the Commander in Chief can relate his or her duties to article 2, section 2.

It is generally agreed that the Commander in Chief role gives the President power to utilize the armed services to repel attacks against the United States. But there has long been a challenge or controversy over whether he or she is constitutionally authorized to send forces into hostile situations abroad without a declaration of war or congressional authorization.

And so here we are today indicating that it is important for the Commander in Chief, no matter how much respect there is, to be able to respond to the call of the Congress. There are now two resolutions that swirl around the violence and horrific acts in Libya. Compounding the problem is a continued violence, an assault on the people of Libya.

So for a moment let me focus on General Qadhafi to ask him the question, is he reasoned, and does he recognize that the slaughter of his people must stop? The President of South Africa engaged in peace talks with General Qadhafi, and many of us thought that the white flag would be raised and that there would be an opportunity for resolution. We see that not coming.

So my message to General Qadhafi is to stop this senseless and violent war, to allow your people to accumulate the privileges of human dignity, that is to be able to live in peace and hopefully to secure democratic rights for themselves. But at the same time we in the United States cannot stand by and watch as violence proceeds. We must have procedure. We must have process.

I believe the Boehner amendment gives at least some tracking as to what you are asking the President for, but I still quarrel with the debate and the question as to whether or not that is enough.

I am supporting this rule so that we can move forward to begin to debate this question of the War Powers Resolution, and it is important that the branches of government understand you cannot roll over the Constitution. The Constitution does not allow us to ignore the Supreme Court's decisions on war. It does not allow us, in essence, to ignore the responsibilities of Congress.

So I rise today to support this debate and to support the premise that Congress must exercise its authority to declare war.

Mr. SCOTT of South Carolina. I yield 2 minutes to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER).

Mr. DREIER. I thank my friend for yielding and congratulate him on his management of this extraordinarily important rule.

Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by saying that I listened to my friend from Worcester. I was upstairs, and I want to express my appreciation to him for his very sincere institutional commitment, his commitment to our recognizing the preeminence of the first branch of government, and the fact that we, Mr. KUCINICH, and Mr. BOEHNER, all of us, Democrat and Republican alike, recognize that the President of the United States, under article 2 and article 1, has the responsibility, the responsibility, Mr. Speaker, to, in fact, engage the United States Congress.

Now, I think that a little clarification may need to be made at this juncture because, as I listen to the debate there seems to be quite a bit of confusion. People often talk about the "War Powers Act."

Mr. Speaker, there is no such thing as the "War Powers Act." There was a War Powers Resolution that passed that does not have the power and the strength of an enacted law.

Similarly, Mr. KUCINICH's resolution, which we will be considering and this rule makes in order, is a measure that will not have the force of law. Yes, it is true that it is an H. Con. Res, meaning that it will be considered in the Senate as well, assuming it passes this House, but it does not have the force of law. And no one, Mr. Speaker, should try to make that claim.

Similarly, the H. Res. that Mr. BOEHNER has offered I personally believe is more responsible because the notion of our calling for withdrawal within 2 weeks is something that virtually everyone has said cannot be done. That's why I believe that Mr. BOEHNER's resolution is a more responsible one than the one offered by my good friend from Ohio. But it, too, does not have the force of law.

So, as we proceed with this debate, I think it's very important for us to recognize that the terms that are being used need to be used correctly.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Just, again, we want to make sure everybody has got the right terminology correct and we are clarifying the RECORD. The H. Res. that Mr. BOEHNER has introduced, that my friends on the Republican side are touting as something substantial, gives the appearance of doing something, when in reality it does nothing.

Mr. DREIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCGOVERN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DREIER. I thank my friend for yielding.

Let me just say that the characterization that my friend just made of Mr. BOEHNER's resolution would also have to apply to the resolution offered by our friend from Ohio. We're talking about resolutions here. We're not talking about measures that have the power of law. This is not an act. These are resolutions, which are statements being made by this institution.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Reclaiming my time, I'm sorry that the gentleman has such a low opinion of the War Powers Resolution, but I think it carries more weight than he does.

But I would again say to my colleagues that what Mr. BOEHNER has proposed here has all this tough language in it requiring the President to do this, directing the President to do that, when, in fact, if we pass this, the President is under the obligation to do nothing.

At this point I would like to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, because the Constitution vests the authority to declare war in the Congress, I oppose the administration's decision to dispatch American troops into hostilities in Libya without coming here first. I think that was an error. But because I take those constitutional obligations very seriously and because each of us should take them very seriously, I oppose this rule and the underlying resolution from Speaker BOEHNER.

I find it ironic that, at a time when the institution is trying to assert its rightful constitutional place, the Speaker has proposed a resolution which is wholly ineffective and purely symbolic. This resolution pursues a gravely important objective in a rather frivolous and ineffective way.

If we believe that the conduct of a military operation is inappropriate for the country, there are tools available to us under the Constitution. Each one of those tools, whether it involves ceasing appropriations or involves other types of remedies, requires the consent of both the House and the Senate. To be effective, we must be bicameral. And to be bicameral, we have to put a resolution on the floor, the passage of which would lead to consideration by the Senate. The Boehner resolution, by its own terms, does not do that.

So the question the Members ought to be asking themselves here, whether they are for or against the incursion in Libya, whether they think it should cease or continue, is: What is the effect of passing the Boehner resolution?

As a practical and legal matter, the effect is nothing—nothing. All of the items the President would be directed to do, any of the steps the President would be prohibited from taking are meaningless if the Boehner resolution passes because the Boehner resolution does not contemplate being considered by the Senate.

So I would offer this to Members, that if they are looking for a resolution that, in fact, has effect and meaning, Mr. KUCINICH's resolution has real effect and meaning because it is a due exercise of the constitutional authority of the Congress.

The Speaker's resolution, which I take certainly in good faith, has none of that effectiveness and none of that practical consequence. So I would urge a "no" vote on the rule precisely because of the principle of congressional authority.

If you believe that we should exercise our constitutional authority, then let's really exercise it. Let's put something before the body that has real and practical meaning.

I would urge a "no" vote.

Mr. SCOTT of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, our friends on the left continue to call House resolutions frivolous and meaningless. My good friend Mr. MCGOVERN himself just last term had House Resolution 278, Global Security Priorities Resolution.

The fact of the matter is the House needs to position itself so the American people understand what this House is trying to convey to the President of the United States. The fact of the matter is this President continues to do things that, as a Senator, he said were inconsistent with the Constitution. So we are making sure that this House and the people who voted in this House are represented in the public forum.

I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DUNCAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to talk about our Constitution and the specific role that it grants this Congress.

My constituents back in the Third Congressional District of South Carolina know that I carry a United States Constitution with me every day, and the first time I spoke on this floor, it was to read a portion of this great document. Specifically, I read the article that we're talking about today, Article I, section 8, clause 11, the enumerated power of Congress and of Congress, alone, to declare war.

Our Founders did not give that right to the executive branch. They invested that responsibility with us. Now, previous Congresses have delegated some of that responsibility with the War Powers Resolution. That's what's being used by this President. But I think the time has come for us to have the debate about the wisdom of that and the constitutional obligation our Founders defined for Congress.

Over the past few years, our country has seen a renewed appreciation for the Constitution, a recognition of the wisdom and divine guidance our Founding Fathers had when they crafted this sacred document. The Constitution lists our rights, these rights which were given us directly by God, but also contains the mechanisms to protect our rights from being trampled upon by man.

Among the most important of these protections is the separation of powers. Seeing firsthand the tyranny that can arise from a corrupt centralized power, our Founding Fathers sought to divide the power of government into three independent branches that serve as checks on one another.

Mr. Speaker, we in the Congress need to know: What is the national interest at stake in Libya? The President cites humanitarian needs, regional stability, and supporting the international community as his justification. I do not believe that these reasons suffice as national security interests. We did not go into Libya with a clear, attainable objective. The risks and costs do not appear to be fully analyzed.

As the President said, we would only be in Libya for days, not months. We've been there days. As a matter of fact, we've been there 73 days. Seventy-three days after we've gotten involved, we still don't have that answer. We don't know who we're supporting. We don't know whether we have a viable end game, and we don't have a congressional declaration of war or an authorization of force.

And yet this President chooses to continue to risk American lives, American servicemen and -women, and he continues to spend American treasure at the whims of the United Nations. This President should not be able to simply have wars of choice. He said this action in Libya would be limited.

Our troops have, once again, as always, performed admirably and done the job the President gave them to do. But we now have to do ours.

Mr. Speaker, the Constitution is very clear. Only Congress has the power to declare war. If this Congress allows our President to make wars of choice without the rule of law to guide him, we will be just as guilty in not upholding our constitutional obligations.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

My colleague, Mr. SCOTT, talked about the fact that I have supported House resolutions in the past and that, therefore, we should have more respect for the document that Mr. BOEHNER has put together. I have no problem with House resolutions. They state the views and the beliefs of Members of the House of Representatives.

But what I have a problem with is anybody coming to the floor and holding up the Boehner resolution and saying that it does something that it does not. What the Boehner resolution simply does is it just expresses the view of Congress. Even though it has pretty strong words in it, it doesn't require the President to do anything. He doesn't have to do anything if this thing passes.

The other thing I want to say, the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee came on the floor here and just kind of pooh-poohed the War Powers Resolution as if it were just some other mere resolution. Quite frankly, I am stunned by his characterization. It is astonishing to me that he would come on the floor and say such a thing.

The fact of the matter is the War Powers Resolution is a joint resolution of Congress, passed by the House and the Senate. It was vetoed, and then it was overridden. It has the power of law. It is not just a mere resolution. So let's not put this on the same level as what the Speaker of the House has brought to this floor. It is two different things.

What Mr. KUCINICH does is he responds to the obligations that Congress has under the War Powers Resolution. This is serious stuff. This is important stuff. If we are going to get our terminology straight, we ought to get it straight.

With that, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. COURTNEY), a member of the Armed Services Committee.

Mr. COURTNEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the rushed, hyper-partisan process that we are watching today on a very serious issue of war resolution. It is absolutely a given that Congress has a role to play in terms of the President's action that it should be scrutinized and that we should have the opportunity to weigh in on it. Our Armed Services Committee has been meeting on a regular basis, holding administration officials' feet to the fire on those very questions. We had a hearing yesterday.

The fact of the matter is, though, just because Congress has the right to weigh in doesn't mean that we should pass a resolution for resolution sake. The batting average of Congress in terms of rushed resolutions, frankly, folks, is not very good. The Gulf of Tonkin Resolution was rushed through the Congress, and we know now today that historians have uncovered the fact that misinformation was presented to the Congress. The Iraq War Resolution in 2002 was rushed through this Congress with bad information.

And we are now seeing today language which was drafted literally overnight being presented to the Members of this body and being asked to weigh in in a deliberative fashion. This is a polemic we are voting on. This is not a carefully balanced, bipartisan process which the people of this country and the people who wear the uniform of this country deserve.

If you read the statement of policy, it is devoid of any of the lead-up to the President's decision which included a resolution by the Arab League on March 12 to impose a no-fly zone; the U.N. Security Council on March 17 to impose a no-fly zone; and on March 1, the United States Senate voted unanimously, not 51 percent, not 81 percent, not 91 percent, 100 percent in support of a no-fly zone, a Republican and Democratic bipartisan resolution calling on the President to do exactly what he is doing today.

Now, again, there is no question, 70 days is a long time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MCGOVERN. I yield the gentleman an additional 30 seconds.

Mr. COURTNEY. It is longer than certainly it was originally presented to this Congress; but the fact of the matter is this resolution, which was drafted in a partisan fashion, is so disappointing to the people who care so profoundly about whether or not the decisions on war and peace are actually going to be deliberated, debated, and voted on in a serious fashion. We are left with this truncated process that is, again, almost an insult to the people of this country.

Mr. SCOTT of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, when you look at what we are doing here today, the gentleman to the left got it wrong. The bottom line is that Members of the House of Representatives have a choice. They can do one of two or three things. They can vote for House Resolution 292, or they can vote for Concurrent Resolution 51. They can do both, or they can do neither.

The fact of the matter is, to trivialize or to belittle the process we are undertaking on behalf of the American people ought to give us cause to pause and ask ourselves: Who is playing the games?

We want the President of the United States to abide by the Constitution. You've heard Democrats and Republicans agree this morning on one clear fact: he didn't; and that's why we are here.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Ms. FOXX).

Ms. FOXX. I thank my colleague from South Carolina for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say from the very beginning that Mr. MCGOVERN and I don't often agree on issues, but we do agree that this is a very serious issue that we are dealing with today. And yesterday in the Rules Committee, all of us dealt with this in a very serious way.

Mr. Speaker, we live in the greatest country in the world. A major part of what makes us so great is that we are a Nation of laws and not of men, and our rule of law is based on God's laws and our Constitution. Indeed, each one of us in Congress takes an oath to uphold the Constitution when we take our office. The President and Vice President, as well as members of the Cabinet, do the same thing.

We are here today to debate a rule and two resolutions related to the inattention of the President to the Constitution; and I dare say that none of us takes any joy in this, but we feel compelled by our dedication to our founding document to do this because we love our country. By doing all that we can to safeguard the constitutional powers granted to Congress, we are doing our part to keep the United States great and strong.

Mr. Speaker, I want to be very clear about what is not at issue today. This debate is not about our troops. We owe a huge debt of gratitude to our men and women in the military and their families. The troops do what they are sworn to do, what the law requires them to do: obey the orders of the Commander in Chief. The troops are doing their duty. By refusing to get congressional authorization for military action in Libya, it appears that their Commander in Chief is not.

The Constitution was designed to be a check on the power of our government, hence the term "enumerated powers." Each of the three branches has very limited powers with Congress having its own unique role and powers, one of which, an important one of which, is the power to declare war.

My focus this morning will be on the abrogation of the constitutional and statutory responsibility by the President in regard to his actions on Libya. In other words, the authorization to use military force is given to the President by this body and none other. And it is in accordance with our Constitution that we are here asserting our sworn constitutional duty and telling the President he does not have the support nor the authority that he claims to have in order to continue military operations in Libya.

I have often urged people to read Orwell's book "1984" because the language used by President Obama in particular on the Libya issue to muddy the waters is so reminiscent of the language used in that book about a country where the government controls everything, including the minds of the people, partly by the use of language that is completely distorted.

Mr. Speaker, I have read the letter that President Obama sent to Congress. He should have come in person to make his case, but even then I doubt we would agree to continue operations in Libya. The letter that the President sent does not even begin to comply with the requirements of the War Powers Resolution. Let me read parts of it and enter the entire letter into the RECORD, Mr. Speaker.

Here is how the letter begins: "On March 21, I reported to the Congress of the United States, pursuant to a request from the Arab League and authorization by the United Nations Security Council, had acted 2 days earlier to prevent a humanitarian catastrophe by deploying U.S. forces to protect the people of Libya from the Qadhafi regime. As you know, over these last 2 months, the U.S. role in this operation to enforce U.N. Security Council Resolution 1973 has become more limited, yet remains important."

Here is where I want to get into this convoluted language.

Thus, pursuant to our ongoing consultations, I wish to express my support for the bipartisan resolution drafted by Senators KERRY, MCCAIN, LEVIN, FEINSTEIN, GRAHAM, and LIEBERMAN, which would confirm that the Congress supports the U.S. mission in Libya and that both branches are united in their commitment to supporting the aspirations of the Libyan people for political reform and self-government.

Mr. Speaker, this is doublespeak of the worst kind—a resolution drafted, never introduced or passed, which would confirm that Congress supports the U.S. mission. The President is dreaming when he talks about this language.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentlewoman has expired.

Mr. SCOTT of South Carolina. I yield the gentlewoman an additional 30 seconds.

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, let me reiterate: This debate is not about our troops; it's about our Constitution. Our men and women in uniform are doing their duty by following orders. They make me and the rest of us very proud. We are a blessed Nation to have such men and women in the military.

This is about our oath to protect and defend the Constitution, about the checks and balances our Founding Fathers had in mind when they broke away from an imperial monarchy. I urge my colleagues to support the rule.

LETTER FROM PRESIDENT OBAMA

On March 21, I reported to the Congress that the United States, pursuant to a request from the Arab League and authorization by the United Nations Security Council, had acted 2 days earlier to prevent a humanitarian catastrophe by deploying U.S. forces to protect the people of Libya from the Qaddafi regime. As you know, over these last 2 months, the U.S. role in this operation to enforce U.N. Security Council Resolution 1973 has become more limited, yet remains important. Thus, pursuant to our ongoing consultations, I wish to express my support for the bipartisan resolution drafted by Senators Kerry, McCain, Levin, Feinstein, Graham, and Lieberman, which would confirm that the Congress supports the U.S. mission in Libya and that both branches are united in their commitment to supporting the aspirations of the Libyan people for political reform and self-government.

The initial phase of U.S. military involvement in Libya was conducted under the command of the United States Africa Command. By April 4, however, the United States had transferred responsibility for the military operations in Libya to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and the U.S. involvement has assumed a supporting role in the coalition's efforts. Since April 4, U.S. participation has consisted of: (1) non-kinetic support to the NATO-led operation, including intelligence, logistical support, and search and rescue assistance; (2) aircraft that have assisted in the suppression and destruction of air defenses in support of the no-fly zone; and (3) since April 23, precision strikes by unmanned aerial vehicles against a limited set of clearly defined targets in support of the NATO-led coalition's efforts.

While we are no longer in the lead, U.S. support for the NATO-based coalition remains crucial to assuring the success of international efforts to protect civilians from the actions of the Qaddafi regime. I am grateful for the support you and other Members in Congress have demonstrated for this mission and for our brave service members, as well as your strong condemnation of the Qaddafi regime. Congressional action in support of the mission would underline the U.S. commitment to this remarkable international effort. Such a Resolution is also important in the context of our constitutional framework, as it would demonstrate a unity of purpose among the political branches on this important national security matter. It has always been my view that it is better to take military action, even in limited actions such as this, with Congressional engagement, consultation, and support.

Mr. MCGOVERN. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentlelady from North Carolina for her remarks, much of which I agree with—and I don't always agree with her. I especially appreciate her emphasis on the importance of the War Powers Resolution and how it applies here.

I again want to emphasize the importance of the War Powers Resolution because I was really surprised by the way the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee kind of diminished what the War Powers Resolution is all about. I want to read to you and read to my colleagues a section from a briefing paper that the Congressional Research Service put together. Let me just read this part here:

"Section 1 establishes the title 'The War Powers Resolution.' The law is frequently referred to as the 'War Powers Act,' the title of the measure passed by the Senate. Although the latter is not technically correct, it does serve to emphasize that the War Powers Resolution embodied in a joint resolution, which complies with constitutional requirements for lawmaking, is a law."

What I find puzzling is that we're all talking about the importance of the War Powers Resolution, and my friends on the other side of the aisle are saying, Well, that's why you need to support the Boehner H. Res, which, again, does nothing. I mean we could do a press release, and it would have the same impact that the resolution Mr. BOEHNER has introduced would have on the President of the United States and, unfortunately, on the President of the United States to do certain things.

Again, I want to emphasize that there is a War Powers Resolution. It is law. It is important that we understand that and understand we have a role in that. What Mr. KUCINICH is trying to do is to assert the proper congressional role with regard to War Powers Resolution. What my friends on the other side of the aisle are trying to do is, I guess, either provide cover for Members so they don't have to vote for Mr. KUCINICH's resolution or to make a statement, but it doesn't really do anything.

With that, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SCOTT of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 90 seconds to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. GARRETT).

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I applaud Speaker BOEHNER for raising this important issue today before the House.

I cannot agree more with the Speaker that the President has failed to explain to the Nation the purpose and goals of our military operation in Libya. The Speaker's resolution rightly demands answers from the President with regard to U.S. security interests and military objectives in our engagement in Libya. I would go even further than that to suggest that the President has been in violation of the law and has set out specific responses from Congress.

But let's be clear: Congress must engage in a full, open and honest debate about sending our brave men and women into harm's way, into combat. We owe that to them, and we owe that to the American people. The Founders intended such a debate when they granted Congress the power to declare war.

The President's complete failure to consult with Congress and receive specific authority as required by the War Powers Act and by the Constitution leads to only one conclusion: that President Obama is in violation of the Constitution and the authority under the War Powers Act as well.

The United States Congress cannot now sit idly by any longer as the President refuses to abide by his constitutional and his legal requirements. So, in conclusion, I believe that Congress must hold this President accountable, and the Speaker's resolution is a first step in that direction.

Mr. MCGOVERN. I continue to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SCOTT of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. NUGENT).

Mr. NUGENT. I would like to thank my friend and Rules Committee member, Mr. SCOTT, for the opportunity to speak in support of this rule.

Mr. Speaker, we are already fighting a war on two fronts—Iraq and Afghanistan. Our troops and resources are already spread very thin.

On March 19, the President announced that U.S. military forces had joined with our NATO allies to commence operations in Libya. The President did this not only without congressional authorization but without even consulting Congress on the matter. For the first 10 days of this operation, it was under U.S. command before shifting control of all ongoing operations to NATO on March 30. To this day, the President still hasn't come to Congress to ask for formal approval. When the President first committed our military to operations in Libya, he said we were talking about days, not months. Today, we are talking about months, not days.

Mr. Speaker, President Obama has put us in a trick bag with our NATO allies. He knew he was committing our military forces and assets to a mission that would be unpopular, unjustifiable and unconstitutional. So, in an attempt to avoid Congress and Article I of the U.S. Constitution, President Obama transferred operations over to NATO. Although we may not be in control of the mission, there is no doubt that NATO could not move forward without U.S. assets. As my colleague from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH) will point out, 93 percent of the cruise missiles, 66 percent of the personnel, 50 percent of the ships, and 50 percent of the planes are estimated to have cost this Nation over $700 million to date.

I will support our troops wherever the President sends them. However, I cannot support President Obama's decision to commit our military forces to operations without the constitutionally required congressional authorization.

Mr. MCGOVERN. I continue to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SCOTT of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. GINGREY).

Mr. GINGREY of Georgia. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I can say this to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle: While I've been sitting here this morning, I haven't heard anything from either side that I disagree with. I am going to support Speaker BOEHNER's resolution, and I am going to probably oppose Representative KUCINICH's resolution for this reason the Speaker convinced me of, and I listened very carefully to him: With regard to within 2 weeks pulling everything that we have in Libya out and coming home, it would set a dangerous precedent in regard to our NATO allies.

Make no mistake about it, this President got us into this mess. It was his ignoring of the War Powers Resolution. I don't know who was advising him in regard to that, whether or not it was the Attorney General, but it was an absolute mistake. Now that he has committed us—the United States of America and our troops—to NATO through this U.N. resolution, I feel it would be a mistake to immediately, within 14 days, pull the rug out from under that operation.

I am not completely satisfied with the Boehner resolution, but I think it does lay down a marker. It makes a statement. The Speaker was very clear in speaking to us that this is not the end of this, that this is the beginning. We have the ability to amend, if we need to, the War Powers Resolution. We need to make it very clear. I don't know who the President notified in regard to this operation. What did he do—send a tweet to the chairmen of the Senate and House Armed Services Committees and the respective Select Committees on Intelligence? That's not good enough for me, a Member, one of 435 in this body. It should never happen again, and that's what this is all about today.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON).

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Let me say that this is not a partisan issue. I hear a lot of partisan rhetoric, but it is not a partisan issue. This is an issue about where we deploy troops, who has the authority to do it and whether or not what the President has done is constitutional.

I will probably support both resolutions, but one of the concerns I have about the Speaker's resolution is that it says the President shall not deploy, establish or maintain the presence of units and members of the United States Armed Forces on the ground in Libya.

Most of our wars that we fight now are fought from the air or from battle-ships. We've had about 250 missiles fired in Libya, and about 226 of them are American. We've spent almost three-quarters of $1 billion already, and it probably will go over $1 billion. "Boots on the ground" says that we're not going to put troops into Libya, but we've got ships offshore; we've got planes in the air; we've got airmen who are at risk every single day; and we're committing military forces in Libya even though we don't have boots on the ground.

This goes further than boots on the ground. The President does not have the constitutional authority to do what he did.

Now, I think that the Boehner resolution is a good step in the right direction, except for one thing: it limits it to no boots on the ground. We shouldn't have any troops over there.

This was not approved by Congress, by the people. It was approved by the Arab League. It was approved by the United Nations. It was approved by the French and English, but not the American people. And it's costing billions of dollars, or will cost billions of dollars. This is something that should not have happened, and it should never happen again.

Now, if we limit this to boots on the ground, what if the President decides in a week, while we're out on recess, to go into Syria. And they say, well, it says no boots on the ground. He could still attack Syria, Assad there in Syria, with airplanes and missiles.

We must stop this President from making unilateral decisions that the American people do not support and the Congress of the United States does not support.

Mr. SCOTT of South Carolina. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, how much time do I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. MCGOVERN. I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious issue, and I want to commend many of my colleagues who have come to the floor today who have spoken very thoughtfully about this issue.

But on this issue, quite frankly, we should have come together in a bipartisan way and crafted a bipartisan resolution and come to this floor as one and spoken as one. That did not happen because politics got in the way.

Anytime over the last several weeks, the Armed Services Committee or the Foreign Affairs Committee could have reported out a resolution on Libya. They didn't. Mr. KUCINICH came to the House with his resolution. It went through a process that would have compelled a vote. And all of a sudden, the Republican leadership got nervous, and they came up with the Boehner resolution in an attempt to undercut the Kucinich resolution.

If you question whether or not politics had anything to do with it, I would advise you to read the Politico piece that ran: "Boehner told the House Republican Conference during a closed-door meeting on Thursday that he doesn't 'want to turn the floor over to DENNIS KUCINICH,' the liberal Ohio Democrat who has been a driving force against the administration's military action in Libya."

Okay, I get it. But you know what? We could have come together, and the chairman and ranking member of the Armed Services Committee, the chairman and ranking member of the Foreign Affairs Committee could have come together, and we could have crafted a bipartisan resolution and done something truly meaningful here. Because, quite frankly, it doesn't matter what political party a President may be. It needs to be made clear that Congress plays a role in war-making. And, unfortunately, in this case I think there's a bipartisan consensus that Congress was just ignored. And that cannot stand.

My problem, again, with the Boehner resolution is that it doesn't do anything. If anybody thinks that passing this resolution is going to compel the White House to do anything differently or provide us with anything that they haven't already provided us with, they're gravely mistaken. It doesn't force the President's administration to do anything. It's a strong statement. I think it's written in a very partisan way, unfortunately; but my friends on the other side of the aisle can do what they want.

But it reminds, I think, all of us who care deeply about these issues that there has to be a better way to do this. And on issues like this, we should come together in a bipartisan way and try to craft resolutions or joint resolutions that mean something and that both sides can feel comfortable supporting.

I also, again, want to thank my colleagues on both sides of the aisle for reminding us again of the importance of the War Powers Resolution. It is not just some mere resolution. It is law. It is law. And the reason why we are here today is because we believe that the War Powers Resolution needs to be upheld and that Congress needs to assert its proper role on this issue.

So having said all of that, I will urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the rule because I think this process is not appropriate. I would urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the Boehner resolution. And I will vote for the Kucinich resolution. I urge my colleagues to vote their conscience on that.

But if you really want to send a message, let's not send a press release. Let's do something that resonates, that, once again, asserts Congress's proper role in this debate.

We're involved in too many wars. We're going broke. We're losing too many brave men and women in these conflicts. And in the case of Libya, I, like many of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, wonder what the point is and what our mission is. It's not clear. That's one of the reasons why Congress should be involved. That's one of the reasons why there should be debate. We need to take this out of the realm of partisanship and kind of return it back to where it belongs. This should be a bipartisan issue here, and I regret that my colleagues on the other side of the aisle chose not to do that.

So I urge a "no" vote on the rule, a "no" vote on the Boehner resolution. I will vote for the Kucinich resolution. I urge my colleagues to vote their conscience on that.

I yield back the balance of my time. Mr. SCOTT of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, this rule lets the House work its will, without any question. You have a choice. Take the opportunity. Vote your conscience.

This is a place where we are confident and not nervous, but we want to close in a bipartisan way because there's no doubt that we want Americans to come together. And I can think of no more appropriate way to close than to quote then-Senator Barack Obama once again:

"The President does not have the power under the Constitution to unilaterally authorize a military attack in a situation that does not involve stopping an actual or imminent threat to the Nation."

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, some have argued that under the War Powers Resolution, a concurrent resolution has the force of law. That just is not correct.

Under the Constitution, a law requires the signature of the President. That is true for a declaration of war, for an appropriation, establishment of weights and measures, or any other exercise of legislative power under Article I of the Constitution. Without the Signature of the President, or an override of his veto, it is not a law and just does not bind the Executive.

The Supreme Court highlighted this particular point in its landmark case INS v. Chadha which overturned the concept of the legislative veto. The War Powers Resolution predates the Chadha decision, and most constitutional scholars believe that decision creates a constitutional infirmity for resolutions passed pursuant to its terms as they would constitute a legislative veto.

So while both the Speaker's resolution and Mr. KUCINICH's resolution express the policy of the legislative branch, neither has the force of law.

Mr. SCOTT of South Carolina. I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 257, nays 156, not voting 19, as follows:

Mr. HINCHEY. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 410, had I been present, I would have voted “yea.”

REGARDING DEPLOYMENT OF UNITED STATES ARMED FORCES IN LIBYA

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 294, I call up the resolution (H. (b) Congress has the constitutional prerogative to withhold funding for any unauthorized use of the United States Armed Forces, including for unauthorized activities regarding Libya.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution shall be debatable for 1 hour, with 40 minutes equally divided and controlled by the chair and ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and 20 minutes equally divided and controlled by the chair and ranking minority member of the Committee on Armed Services.

The gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN) and the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) each will control 20 minutes. The gentleman from California (Mr. MCKEON) and the gentleman from Washington (Mr. SMITH) each will control 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Florida.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in strong support of House Resolution 292, sponsored by our distinguished Speaker. As the resolution states at the outset, the Armed Forces of the United States may only be used to defend and advance the national security interests of the United States, not to enforce, to quote the President, "the writ of the international community," nor because of the United Nations, nor because of the Arab League. Yet these are what the President has repeatedly pointed to in justifying sending U.S. forces into action in Libya.

But what he has not done is explain to the American people and to Congress how the situation in Libya, if allowed to spiral out of control, poses a threat to U.S. national security interests.

It is an increasingly important region, Mr. Speaker, with implications stretching into other areas that are vital to our Nation. Little, if any, details have been provided in response to repeated questions regarding U.S. goals, the costs of the operation, the scope of the operation, and other issues of direct relevance to our national security. It is an open question as to whether the administration simply won't tell us or whether they just don't know the answers.

Members on both sides of the aisle are increasingly frustrated. I share that frustration. Many question the importance of Libya to U.S. interests, and especially the need for military engagement. Many more are outright angry about the disregard with which the President and his administration have treated Congress on the Libya military engagement.

But it is not surprising that there is a desire to simply say "enough" and to force the President to withdraw precipitously, regardless of the consequences. But I believe that we would only make a difficult situation worse by taking such drastic action. The negative impact would be widespread, Mr. Speaker. The news that the U.S. House of Representatives had mandated a withdrawal of U.S. forces would send a ray of sunshine into the hole in which Qadhafi is currently hiding. It would ensure his hold on power. It would be seen not only in Libya, but throughout the Middle East and North Africa as open season to threaten U.S. interests and destabilize our allies.

Pulling out of the NATO operation would also undermine our NATO partners, who, after years of prodding by us, have finally begun to take more responsibility for ensuring security and stability in the region. How could we then argue that they must maintain their commitment to our allied efforts in Afghanistan when we have just pulled the rug out from under them in Libya?

We must not let our frustration with the President's contempt for Congress cloud our judgment and result in our taking action that would harm our standing, our credibility, and our interests in the region. But clearly, we must speak out.

This resolution offered by Speaker BOEHNER would send an unambiguous warning to the President that he must either change course in his dealings with Congress and the American people or have the decisions regarding U.S. involvement in Libya taken out of his hands.

It states a fundamental truth that I assume that most in this Chamber agree with that U.S. forces must only be used to defend and advance the national security interests of the United States. It underscores that the President has not made a compelling case for U.S. military involvement based on U.S. interests, and it prohibits the employment of U.S. ground forces in Libya so that mission creep would not gradually lead us into an ever-expanding conflict.

It also requires the President to provide to Congress the information that we should have had at the outset, including, Mr. Speaker:

What are the political and military objectives of the United States and Libya?

How do we intend to achieve them? What specific commitment have we made to our NATO operations, and how might these impact our commitments in Afghanistan?

What is the anticipated scope, the duration, and the anticipated cost of continued U.S. military involvement in Libya?

What is the relationship between opposition forces that are grouped under the Interim Transitional National Council and the Muslim Brotherhood, the Libyan Islamic Fighting Group, al Qaeda, Hezbollah, and other extremist groups?

How well armed are these and other extremist groups, and how extensive are their activities in Libya?

Who controls thousands of shoulder-fired antiaircraft missiles and stocks of chemical weapons that Qadhafi has acquired?

Finally, Mr. Speaker, this resolution bluntly states that the President has neither sought nor received authorization by the Congress for the continued involvement of the United States Armed Forces in Libya. If this clear warning doesn't get the attention at the White House, then more forceful action may be inevitable. The President can choose to act with the support of Congress and with the support of the American people, but he will not be allowed to proceed without it.

I urge my colleagues to vote for this strong and necessary resolution.

With that, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the distinguished Speaker of the House of Representatives, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER).

Mr. BOEHNER. Let me thank my colleague for yielding.

In March, when the President committed our troops to NATO's mission in Libya, I said that he had a responsibility to the American people to define the mission, to explain what America's role was in achieving that mission and lay out how it was to be accomplished. He has not effectively done so. The American people and the Members of this House have questions and concerns that have gone unanswered.

The President of the United States is our Commander in Chief, and I have always believed combat decisions should be left to the Commander in Chief and to the generals on the ground. But the House also has an obligation to heed the concerns of our constituents and to carry out our constitutional responsibilities.

The resolution I have put forward expresses the will of the people in a responsible way that reflects our commitments to our troops and to our allies.

Let me lay out exactly what this resolution does.

First, it establishes that the President has not asked for and that the Congress has not granted authorization for the introduction or continued involvement of our troops in Libya.

Second, it reasserts Congress' constitutional role to fund our troops.

Third, it requires the President to provide, within 14 days, information on that mission that should have been provided from the start.

And, lastly, it reaffirms the vote that we took last week that says that there should be no troops on the ground in Libya.

I hope the President will recognize his obligations outlined in this resolution and provide this information to Congress and, in doing so, better communicate to the American people what our mission in Libya is and how it will be achieved.

The resolution offered by my colleague from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH) conveys the concerns of the American people, but it also mandates a precipitous withdrawal from our role in supporting our NATO allies in Libya. In my opinion, that would undermine our troops and our allies, which could have serious consequences for our broader national security.

In my view, the gentleman's resolution goes too far. We may have differences regarding how we got here, but we cannot turn our backs on our troops and our NATO partners who have stuck by us over the last 10 years.

In 1991 in my first vote as a Member of this body, I voted to authorize the use of force in the first Gulf War. It was a consequential time, but I think we did the right thing. And today is no different. On behalf of the American people and our country, we have an obligation to support our troops in harm's way and to support our allies.

This resolution puts the President on notice. He has a chance to get this right; and if he doesn't, Congress will exercise its constitutional authority and we will make it right.

I urge a "yes" on the Boehner resolution and a "no" on the Kucinich resolution.

Mr. BERMAN. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this resolution.

If the Members of the House choose to pass the Speaker's one-Chamber resolution, it should add one finding: that we declare ourselves to be one big constitutionally created potted plant.

This resolution casts all kinds of aspersions on the President. It states the President has failed to provide Congress with a compelling rationale for operations in Libya. It implies that there has been a withholding of documents and information from this body.

Could the President provide more information to the Congress? Of course. But we need to look not just at the President's failure to seek an authorization, but the refusal of this body to exercise its authority in this area. The onus rests with us to recognize the sacred duty of authorizing the use of force.

A resolution like this, with no operative language, with no invocation of the War Powers Resolution and which was presented to Members for the first time just 14 hours ago, simply perpetuates a dynamic of congressional acquiescence and acquiescence that, for the most part, has gone on truly since the Korean War.

There are two choices here. If the majority thinks that the President's initial efforts to stop a humanitarian catastrophe were wrong or that current operations in Libya do not have a compelling national security rationale, it should support Mr. KUCINICH's approach and offer a concurrent resolution pursuant to section 5(c) of the War Powers Resolution requiring the removal of U.S. forces.

If the majority has concerns with Mr. KUCINICH's approach, as many of us do, and believes terminating military action would have grave consequences for U.S. national security, it should simply authorize the use of force in Libya, incorporating the restrictions on ground forces that this resolution has, that the Conyers language in the DOD bill had. I would gladly join the Speaker in cosponsoring such an authorization of the limited use of force.

But pursuing a nonbinding House Resolution that takes potshots at the President and amounts to nothing more than a sense of the Congress is just an exercise in political gamesmanship. It is a pedantic effort to embarrass the President without taking any ownership for the policy of the intervention.

The majority, not the President, puts this body in a position of powerlessness through such toothless efforts. We are 60 days into this operation. Either we should authorize this action or terminate, not play around with reporting requirements.

The resolution is also confusing. It states that the President shall not deploy or maintain the presence of U.S. military units on the ground in Libya.

But as the majority well knows, U.S. military activities are limited to air operations and nothing more. So does this language mean the majority is okay with the current intervention in Libya? The majority seems to be raising a fuss while winking at the White House. That's not the way to legislate.

Finally, I object to the resolution because it is downright inaccurate. The resolution implies that there is no compelling national security rationale for operations in Libya. But U.S. interests are clear. They have been forcefully articulated by the administration and, ironically, by conservative advocates like Bill Kristol.

We are in Libya because we are averting a probable massacre against civilians. We are in Libya because our NATO partners need our help. Refusal to act there would send a message to NATO allies, who are putting their forces on the line in Afghanistan, that we are not a dependable partner. We are in Libya because our friends struggling for democracy in the Middle East are watching events there. If we failed to act, or worse, seek withdrawal today, what will we be saying to the activists in Tunisia and Egypt, whose fragile movements for democracy could be stifled by the destabilizing effect of a Qadhafi-led government remaining in power? And what message would we be sending to Assad and to other dictators and enemies about our staying power?

Let's not kid ourselves. A Qadhafi who is unleashed to commit acts of terrorism around the world will do so with unspeakable barbarity. We know Qadhafi's record of bloodshed, and we know his readiness to use terror, especially now that he has nothing to lose. I cannot think of a more compelling rationale for current operations in Libya.

I object to the characterization that U.S. national security interests and humanitarian objectives are incompatible. In Libya, it is quite clear that stopping murder and preventing a refugee crisis very much correspond with U.S. national interests.

The Republican sponsors of this resolution are trying to have it both ways. They want to criticize the President for taking the very action that many of them called for 3 months ago. And they want to do so without taking any responsibility. In the process, they are offering nothing but criticism, obstruction and endless second-guessing.

President Bush once accused the Democratic Party of becoming "the party of cut and run." Well, it seems the running shoe is now on the other foot. It is a Democratic President that is taking on a brutal tyrant, and it is the Republican Party that refuses to back him.

I urge my colleagues to take seriously U.S. military involvement in Libya and vote "no" on this resolution.

I reserve the balance of my time.

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on House Resolution 292 and H. Con. Res. 51.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. CAPITO). Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. With that, Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON), the chairman on the Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Europe and Eurasia.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Let me just say that the Constitution of the United States and the War Powers Act prohibit the President from doing what he did. And I'm kind of torn because I stayed up late last night thinking about this whole issue. I believe that we shouldn't have gone into Libya in the first place, and we certainly shouldn't go into Syria or another place without the authorization of the Congress of the United States.

And that's the reason why I cosponsored the Kucinich resolution, because we have to send a very strong signal that we're not going to go to war without the people of this country supporting it. And the President did this unilaterally after talking to the Arab League and the U.N. and others without the consent of the people of this country. That's the first thing.

The second thing is the Boehner resolution I'm going to support, but it doesn't go far enough. As far as it goes, it's fine. But it talks only about boots on the ground. Most of the wars in which we've been involved are fought in the air with drones, missiles and airplanes. And about two-thirds of the missiles and over half of the sorties flown by the airplanes that are involved in this war, over two-thirds of those are used by the United States. This is an American conflict. And so when we talk about boots on the ground, that's not sufficient.

Now, I'm going to support it as far as it goes because the Speaker is trying to move this in the right direction, but we shouldn't just limit this to boots on the ground. It should involve no military operation whatsoever without the consent of the Congress and the people of this country. And when the Speaker says boots on the ground only, unless we are going in to save one of our troops that are downed in an air fight or shot down when they go in on a bombing run, then that, in effect, is putting boots on the ground anyhow to get those people out of there.

So, I will support the Boehner resolution, but I prefer the Kucinich resolution because it sends a very strong signal and tells the President, in no uncertain terms, that he cannot take us to war without the consent of the people of this country.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I think it's important to get the record straight on what we're doing and what we're not doing. "No boots on the ground" did not come because of this resolution we are considering now. This was the decision of the President, the Commander in Chief, at the time. But the figures given by my friend from Indiana don't reflect the reality of our participation.

What are we doing now? While we're not in the lead, the United States is contributing significantly to the operation: fighter aircraft for the suppression of enemy air defense, ISR aircraft, electronic warfare aircraft, aerial refueling aircraft, one guided missile destroyer and predatory armed unmanned aerial surveillance systems. Twenty-four percent, not two-thirds of the total aircraft; 27 percent of the total sorties flown; over 75 percent of all refueling sorties; 70 percent of intelligence surveillance and reconnaissance.

Now there's no boots on the ground, but to me that involvement implicates the War Powers Resolution. This is within the meaning of that bill. And, once again, only KUCINICH has before us a proposal that seeks to deal with the requirements of the War Powers Resolution.

I just think we should get the record straight about what our involvement is. It's not as large as the previous speaker said, but it is significant. And in my opinion, it's within the terms of the War Powers Resolution.

I'm now pleased to yield 2 minutes to my friend from California, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LEE).

Ms. LEE. Madam Speaker, let me thank our ranking member for yielding. And let me just say, first of all, I rise in opposition to the Boehner resolution.

This debate is long overdue. On March 30, I, along with Representatives WOOLSEY, HONDA, GRIJALVA and WATERS, sent a letter to Speaker BOEHNER and Majority Leader CANTOR requesting that they hold a debate and floor vote on the President's authority to continue the use of military force in Libya.

I would like to insert the letter into the RECORD.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC, March 30, 2011.

Hon. JOHN BOEHNER,
Speaker, House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

Hon. ERIC CANTOR,
Majority Leader, House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SPEAKER BOEHNER AND MAJORITY LEADER CANTOR: We, the undersigned Members of Congress, write to request the U.S. House of Representatives immediately take steps to hold a debate and floor vote on the President's authority to continue the use of military force in Libya.

Under Article 1, Section 8 of the Constitution, the responsibility to declare war rests with Congress alone. The War Powers Act of 1973 further clarified the important separation of powers and checks and balances in these matters. Consideration of the Presidents continued military engagement in Libya is our responsibility as elected representatives in the U.S. Congress, and essential to reasserting the undisputed role and responsibility of the Legislative Branch in overseeing and providing for our nation's commitments while at war.

The United States has now been engaged militarily in Libya since March 19, 2011. While we firmly believe that a robust debate and up-or-down floor vote should have occurred in advance of U.S. military action in Libya, it is without question that such measures are still urgently required. Beyond defending Congressional authority in these matters, these deliberations are essential to ensuring that we as a country fully debate and understand the strategic goals, costs, and long-term consequences of military action in Libya.

Many questions remain unanswered regarding our short and long-term responsibilities in Libya as well as our strategy for ending U.S. military operations. The Department of Defense has indicated that the costs of U.S. military operations in Libya totaled $600 million in the first week alone, and are estimated to mount by as much as $100 million per week, in the future. At a time of severe economic distress here at home, as well as in recognition of the continued strain on our military service members already engaged in two wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, these concerns are especially worthy of congressional deliberation.

It is our position that the President has a constitutional obligation to seek specific, statutory authorization for offensive military action, as he should have done with regard to U.S. military engagement in Libya. We look forward to working with you to address this matter on the House floor as soon as possible.

Sincerely,

BARBARA LEE,
LYNN C. WOOLSEY,
MICHAEL M. HONDA,
RAÚL M. GRIJALVA,
MAXINE WATERS,

Madam Speaker, I would like to read parts of this letter, dated March 30, if I may:

Dear Speaker BOEHNER and Majority Leader CANTOR: We, the undersigned Members of Congress, write to request the United States House of Representatives immediately take steps to hold a debate and floor vote on the President's authority to continue the use of military force in Libya.

We cite the Constitution, article I, section 8.

We go on to say that the United States has now been engaged militarily in Libya since March 19, 2011. While we firmly believe that a robust debate and up-or-down floor vote should have occurred in advance of U.S. military action in Libya, it is without question that such measures are still urgently required. Beyond defending congressional authority in these matters, these deliberations are essential to ensuring that we as a country fully debate and understand the strategic goals, costs, and long-term consequences of military action in Libya.

That is one paragraph of this sentence.

Now, Madam Speaker, over 60 days since our letter, the Speaker has suddenly and hastily scheduled a resolution that, frankly, does nothing but serve to politicize what is an extremely serious and what should be a non-partisan issue.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BERMAN. I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Ms. LEE. As we know, the War Powers Act specifically forbids Armed Forces from engaging in military action in foreign lands for more than 60 days without congressional authorization or the use of military force or a declaration of war.

We have been actively fighting now for 77 days. This is not just about our mission in Libya. And let me just say that I think our President, frankly, has done a commendable job in handling the very complex range of foreign policy issues, but it is about any President, any administration. It is not about that; it is about standing up for congressional power granted in the Constitution. As our ranking member said, the Kucinich amendment is the amendment that addresses this head-on in a very honest and direct way.

So we should reject this politically motivated resolution. It is a resolution that has just come up. We asked again the Speaker and majority leader on March 30 to conduct a debate and an up-or-down vote. We conclude in our letter that it is our position that the President has a constitutional obligation to seek specific statutory authority for offensive military action, as he should have done with regard to U.S. military engagement in Libya.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Madam Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. CONNOLLY), a valued member of our Foreign Affairs Committee.

Mr. CONNOLLY of Virginia. I thank my colleague from Florida for yielding me this time. I rise respectfully in support of House Resolution 292, which reasserts the congressional war-making authority of section 8, article I of the Constitution, and I respectfully disagree with my ranking member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, for whom I have enormous respect.

I don't think this resolution takes gratuitous potshots at the President of the United States. I think it is a thoughtful exposition of the issues in front of us and the requirements that we want to put on the President, and it buys the President time to comply without the disruption that the Kucinich resolution would cause, not only in Libya, but the ramifications for NATO relationships and in the Arab democratic spring.

The resolution prohibits the President from deploying ground troops in Libya, and declares Congress has the constitutional prerogative to withhold funding for any unauthorized use of U.S. Armed Forces. It requires the administration to transmit to the House of Representatives any records regarding congressional communication and Operation Odyssey Dawn in Libya within 14 days of passage.

Madam Speaker, since before the passage of the War Powers Resolution in 1973, the executive branch, regardless of party or leader, has argued that there are inherent constitutional powers contained in the constitutional reference to the President as Commander in Chief. If one argues that section 2, article II of the Constitution grants the President inherent powers as Commander in Chief, then logically one ought to acknowledge that Congress also has inherent powers as the only entity expressly granted the power to declare war in that document.

According to the House report regarding the War Powers Resolution, "consultation . . . means that a decision is pending on a problem and that Members of Congress are being asked by the President for their advice and opinions and, in appropriate circumstances, their approval of action contemplated." This report language makes the intention of the War Powers Resolution clear: Consultation ought to be active, not merely informative. In the War Powers Resolution, the term "hostilities" was used deliberately instead of "armed conflict" precisely because of the former phrase's broader nature. The Constitution and the War Powers Resolution are clear: Congress must have a role with regard to the use and deployment of U.S. forces. The extent of that role has been the subject of debate as old as the United States itself.

To go even further, a strict constructionist would argue that the War Powers Resolution itself limits congressional authority. The act of even acknowledging the need for a statutory framework to codify Congress' powers in the Constitution in fact dilutes those powers and may have the unintended effect of enhancing the Executive's powers directly at the expense of Congress.

I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this resolution, House Resolution 292, to assert congressional authority and to buy the President time with which to comply.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would like to respond to my friend's arguments. I agree with every word he said except that this is a manifestation of the Congress exercising its authority. This is an abdication of Congress exercising its authority, because nowhere in this resolution is the authorization for the operations that we want to authorize, that we should be authorizing if we think they are appropriate.

The gentleman from Ohio doesn't think they are appropriate. Some of us do think it is appropriate, and this isn't about buying time. We are not a supplicant to go to the executive branch and ask for them to request of us authorization. We have the institutional power to decide what to do, and this resolution fails to take that option.

I think the gentleman makes a wonderful case for why this resolution is not sufficient to step up to our responsibilities under the Constitution and the War Powers Resolution.

With that, I would like to yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN).

Mr. SHERMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I have been here a long time, and I have never come to this floor for the purpose of opposing innocuous resolutions. In fact, I've voted for every piece of innocuous legislation and post office renaming in the last 15 years, as far as I can remember. And this is innocuous legislation.

First, it starts with a sense of Congress about our opinion as to what should or shouldn't be done. It has a sentence that purports to prevent the President from putting ground forces in Libya, but in fact just states that's our policy. It is certainly not designed to prohibit the President from doing so; it just says that it's our opinion that he shouldn't. And, by the way, in the Defense authorization bill, we have real legislation that already prohibits putting ground forces in Libya.

It then goes on to ask that a number of questions be answered. There are some who think, that's important. Those who think that the questions propounded in this resolution are actually going to get us useful information are insulting the faculty of the law schools of America, because both the Pentagon and the State Department have lawyers capable of writing long and meaningless answers to every question we propound. And as for getting documents, some of the documents demanded we already have, and as for the rest, those same lawyers will be writing long documents about executive privilege.

So we have here a document that at most is just questions for the RECORD that the chairwoman of our committee allows me to add at the end of so many hearings; hardly earthshaking, certainly innocuous.

But, okay, so it's innocuous. Or is it?

This is innocuous legislation that plays a particular role in avoiding the constitutional role of this Congress. It allows us to sidestep the War Powers Act. It gives cover to those who don't want to authorize, or refuse to authorize. It says we're an advisory body. We ask some questions so we can give good advice. We will give the President some advice. It is part of the trend of an aggrandizing executive and a derelict Congress, a Congress that almost is complicit in this slow process by which we are not legislators, we are not deciders; we inquire and we advise.

The Constitution is clear, but the War Powers Act is more clear: the President must ask for congressional authorization. Then we actually have to act, and that is tough. We have to review the proposals, and I believe our ranking member (Mr. BERMAN) would have one that would say, What are we going to authorize? Under what conditions? What demands will we make of our allies in Libya to perhaps turn over to us, or at least disassociate themselves from, the al Qaeda operatives in their midst? Are we going to limit the duration? Are we going to limit the scope? Are we going to impose limits on the total cost?

With this resolution, we can avoid all of those questions. We can avoid demanding a withdrawal. We can avoid limiting the authorization, and we can allow the President to continue to write the blank check that apparently he believes he has, and we can do it all while disassociating ourselves with anything unpopular that ever happens over the skies of Libya.

Now is not the time for us to shirk our responsibilities. Our responsibility is to act as a policy-making body.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the gentleman for 1 more minute.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, how much time is remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California has 4½ minutes remaining.

Mr. BERMAN. I yield the gentleman an additional 1 minute.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now is the time for us to play the role that the War Powers Act provides, because this is not an immediate short-term emergency situation. It has gone on for much longer than 60 days. It should not go further.

Now, 208 Members of this Congress voted for my amendment yesterday to say that we should not expend funds in violation of the War Powers Act, and you were willing to vote for it even though I put it on a bill as to which it really didn't pertain. Thank you for those votes, but now please come back here and say, It's time to enforce the War Powers Act. It's time not to dodge the War Powers Act. It's time for our policy over the skies in Libya to be determined by the President and Congress, not the President advised by Congress.

Vote "no" on this resolution. Don't use it as a sidestep. Instead, go back to your constituents and say, You are for voting either for a withdrawal from Libya or for a full authorization or for a limited authorization.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Madam Speaker, I am pleased to yield 4 minutes to my friend and colleague from Florida (Mr. YOUNG), the chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Defense.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. I thank my friend and the chairman for yielding me this time because I think it is important to stress the importance of the Boehner resolution. Especially on page 4 and page 7 of the resolution, it deals specifically with the Constitution and the constitutional responsibility of the administration and the Congress to work together, especially in matters of national security.

As chairman of the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee, as my colleague has said, my responsibility is to provide for the funding for any military operation that is approved by the Commander in Chief and approved by the Congress.

On the matter of Libya, on April 1, I sent a letter to the President, trying to exercise my responsibilities as chairman—a conciliatory letter, actually—expressing support for our troops but asking certain questions: How long do you think this will last? How much do you think it will cost? How much of a future commitment have we made? What will be the source of the funding for this operation? Here, more than 2 months later, this official request from the Appropriations Committee still remains unanswered by the administration. That's just not right.

The Constitution is pretty clear. Article I, section 9 of the Constitution, in part, reads, "No money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in consequence of appropriations made by law; and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time."

So far, on the Libya issue, this article I, section 9 has been totally ignored. It's just not right. That's a violation, in my opinion, and contravenes the Constitution, itself. When I asked for that information, the only thing I got on the cost of this Libyan operation was in bits and pieces. We have added it, and we have come to about $750 million already spent on the Libyan mission. They've not confirmed that, but we have put together, with our own addition, bits and pieces on that. Again, we have received no reply whatsoever.

What I'm wondering is: Where is the money to pay for the Libyan operation coming from? What account is it coming from? Is it coming out of personnel costs—soldiers' pay? Is it coming out of medical care? Is it coming out of the training for our troops? What accounts are being used? We have a right and an obligation under the Constitution to know the answer to that.

Speaker BOEHNER's resolution calls very, very sharp attention to that issue, so I think it is important that the House passes the Boehner resolution to let the President know that we are not going to allow him to ignore the Constitution any further when it comes to war powers, when it comes to spending for the welfare of our troops, when it comes to appropriating money for the defense of our Nation and for the defense of our allies.

Madam Speaker, I do ask that the letter that I sent to the President, which has remained unanswered for more than 2 months, be included at this point in the RECORD so that my colleagues can see that it was a very, very legitimate and a very conciliatory request, basically an offer to support our troops in any legitimate activity. So we are still waiting. We are standing by, hoping that we do hear from the President very soon, maybe shortly after we pass the Boehner resolution.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
Washington, DC, April 1, 2011.

President BARACK OBAMA,
The White House,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Recent events across northern Africa and the Middle East demonstrate the powerful effect that the prospect of self-government and basic human rights can have on an oppressed population. Governments have fallen and nations have changed, all in the name of freedom. Operation Odyssey Dawn (now Unified Protector), based on United Nations Security Council Resolution 1973, is another chapter in this remarkable story that history is writing before us.

The Members of the House Defense Subcommittee on Appropriations stand ready to support our brave men and women in uniform as they carry out their mission, but it is essential that we know precisely what that mission is, and what role U.S. troops have in achieving that mission. For example, enforcement of a no-fly-zone is one thing, but the use of AC-130 gunships and A-10 aircraft denote an entirely different battle. And without knowing what goals we hope to achieve, our long-term commitment is unclear. Indeed, as history has taught us, without defined goals or objectives the probability of an open-ended campaign increases. As our nation continues to struggle through the current fiscal crisis, an exit strategy seems all the more prudent. There was, however, little to no consultation with Congress prior to these actions, and almost two weeks after our first engagement, many of these concerns remain unaddressed.

The Department of Defense has indicated that through March 28, they spent approximately $550 million in support of Operation Odyssey Dawn; and they expect to spend at a minimum another $40 million a month as we continue to support the now NATO-led Operation Unified Protector. This assumes a reduced U.S. role, which could change significantly if NATO requires additional support. It was also made clear that there would be no additional funds requested by your Administration, either in the form of a supplemental request or a budget amendment. In fact, you stated that the costs of this mission could be paid for out of previously appropriated funds. As this Committee works to finish fiscal year 2011 and begins work on fiscal year 2012, I feel it is imperative that we know where you believe these funds will come from. Based on the above Department of Defense rate, costs for fiscal year 2011 could reach $800 million, and depending on the length of our commitment, another $500 million in fiscal year 2012. I do not need to remind you that the Department of Defense fiscal year 2012 request is already $13 billion below where it was estimated it would be just a year ago—the reduction taken in the name of efficiencies.

As the nation's military continue to serve in harm's way, I feel it is imperative we proceed with complete openness and transparency. I pledge that I will continue to do everything I can to support these soldiers, sailors, Marines, and airmen, as I have done throughout my career, and I ask for your help and support in doing the same.

Sincerely,

C. W. BILL YOUNG,
Chairman, Defense Subcommittee.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH).

Mr. KUCINICH. I thank the gentleman from California for yielding.

In defense of Mr. BURTON's description of U.S. involvement already in Libya, I would like to have entered into the RECORD an article from the Guardian U.K., dated May 22, which talks about the United States having 50 percent of the ships, 50 percent of the planes, 66 percent of the personnel, 93 percent of the cruise missiles.

I just want to say briefly, Madam Speaker, that this article was written about 10 days ago. If it's true, it points out that we've undertaken a huge mission through the United States in the name of NATO—now, without coming to the Congress, and that's what we're debating, of course. Yet if, on the other hand, the information that the administration has communicated as of late to the Congress suggests a lighter footprint, then there should be no difficulty in pulling out of Libya in 15 days. If there is, we need to start asking questions about how deeply enmeshed we are if our participation is truly no boots on the ground.

LIBYA: BRITAIN'S £1BN WAR

(By Richard Norton-Taylor and Simon Rogers)

Britain's involvement in the Libya conflict will cost the taxpayer as much as £1bn if it continues into the autumn as expected, according to expert analysis and data gathered by the Guardian.

Two months after western powers began bombing Libyan targets to protect civilians in Operation Unified Protector, the cost to Britain so far of the dozens of bombs dropped, hundreds of sorties flown and more than 1,000 service personnel deployed is estimated at more than £100m, according to British defence officials.

But defence economists have told the Guardian the costings are conservative. Francis Tusa, editor of the Defence Analysis newsletter, estimates that by the end of April Libyan operations had already cost the UK about £300m and that the bill was increasing by up to £38m a week.

Defence chiefs in the UK and US are also said to be concerned that some NATO countries are unwilling to commit air power to the campaign. It is not only the cost that is worrying the Ministry of Defence, and, indeed, defence chiefs in the Pentagon. The reluctance of most countries to commit their air forces to action—Norway, which has dropped about 300 bombs, is to pull out at the end of June—is causing serious concern among military commanders throughout the alliance about whether NATO countries have the political will and military capability to continue operations that now have the stated aim of removing power from Gaddafi, his sons, and closet advisers.

For Britain, the Libyan conflict has also presented military commanders and ministers alike with an uncomfortable reminder of the perilous state of the defence budget. As Paul Cornish, head of the international security programme at the thinktank Chatham House, has observed, many of the military capabilities used in and around Libya—HMS Cumberland, the Nimrod R1 eavesdropping plane, the Sentinella surveillance aircraft, and Tornado jets—are among the first casualties to be scrapped or their numbers reduced (in the case of Tornados) as a result of last year's strategic defence and security review.

"The obvious question to ask," Cornish writes in the latest issue of The World Today, "is whether Britain could have made a contribution to the intervention in Libya had the crisis developed later in 2011 when most of the decommissionings, disbandments, and retirements would otherwise have taken place."

The U.S. led the assault, during the first week flying more than 800 sorties in Libya, of which over 300 were strike sorties. It fired more than 200 Tomahawk cruise missiles from its ships. Britain has fired fewer than 20 Tomahawks, costing an estimated £1m each, from the submarine HMS Triumph.

Britain, which has accounted for some 25% of all sorties, was so worried about the gap left by the U.S. when it ceded command to NATO, and stood down its aircraft—including low-flying A10 tankbusting "Warthogs" and C130 gunships.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STIVERS), a member of the Financial Services Committee and a lieutenant colonel in the United States Army, with a distinguished 26-year military career.

Mr. STIVERS. I would like to thank the chairwoman for yielding me time.

I rise in support of the Speaker's resolution. With 26 years of military service, my experience has taught me many lessons, and those lessons give me pause and concern with regard to the Kucinich resolution. I think we need to be prudent, thoughtful and measured in the way we end our involvement in Libya, and I don't believe that the Kucinich resolution does that.

Even though the President did not follow proper procedures and even though he should have allowed Congress to debate and decide the issue, a 15-day withdrawal would cause other issues. Currently, the U.S. is providing important refueling, logistics and other support functions for our NATO allies. Unfortunately, if you create a 15-day time line, those allies might not have time to plan or build capacity to resource their plan and effectively continue their operations.

I don't agree with how the President has handled our current military mission in Libya, and I don't think he has currently explained the national security interest of our mission. However, I think the troops that have been called to action have performed admirably, and I thank them for their service. But now we are involved, and the time frame for withdrawal in the Kucinich resolution would hurt our NATO allies, the same allies who have stood by us in Afghanistan for 10 years. They deserve our cooperation in any transition. I support the Speaker's alternative resolution on Libya. I think it asks tough questions of the President, and requires him to explain our national security interests and to justify his strategy to Congress and to the American people. If the President doesn't answer those questions within 14 days,

I believe Congress should continue to assert its constitutional authority.

In response to the gentleman from California, I would like to say that I think it is important we get information to make timely decisions. Therefore, I support the Speaker's alternative resolution as a way forward in Libya.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I yield myself 15 seconds in response to the previous speaker.

What I'm curious about is what the resolution doesn't tell us. If the President doesn't provide us the information within 14 days, what are we doing? The resolution is silent. This is a resolution filled with things we want and are asking for and demanding and are harumphing about with no consequences.

I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY), former member of the committee.

Ms. WOOLSEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Madam Speaker, this is a "here we go again" moment on the House floor.

Two weeks ago the Kucinich amendment passed the House overwhelmingly with a total bipartisan vote because it was the right thing to do. But, no, the other side of the aisle can't stand to let us have an initiative, the right thing to do, that they really could agree to.

So here we are today debating the Boehner resolution to take the air out of the question of whether the United States Congress or the White House has responsibility for the War Powers Resolution and begging them to know that it is our responsibility.

Members should not be fooled into voting for the Boehner resolution because it delays action. We should vote for the Kucinich resolution that insists that the Congress reclaim its authority, take its responsibility, and do the right thing regarding Libya.

Vote "no" on the Boehner resolution.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Madam Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Madam Speaker, the resolution offered by the Speaker is the responsible approach. It expresses congressional intent. It affords one last opportunity to the President and his administration to work with us in Congress to advance U.S. interests in the region. I hope that the President is listening and that this resolution will serve as a wake-up call leading to immediate consultation. And, frankly, we have not had that as we would like.

If, in 14 days, as it says in this resolution, the President has not complied with the requests included in the resolution, then this House will consider the next steps.

I therefore urge a "yes" vote on the Boehner resolution, a responsible approach to the President to work with us and a plea to give us the information that we requested.

Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MCKEON. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I rise in support of this resolution. I do not believe that the President has provided adequate justification for our military operations in Libya nor why continued intervention in a humanitarian stalemate is in our national interest.

More than 2 weeks ago, I sent a letter to the President outlining my concerns regarding our strategy, our role within NATO operations, and the escalating costs of these operations at a time when the administration is asking the Department of Defense to make an additional $400 billion in cuts. To date, I have not received a reply.

Yet I believe that forcing the hasty withdrawal of U.S. forces from NATO operations in Libya would embolden Qadhafi and gravely damage our credibility with our allies. Consequently, such a move could have dramatic, negative, second-order effects on operations that are critical to our national security, such as operations in Afghanistan.

I believe Speaker BOEHNER's resolution addresses much of the frustration shared by Members of this body. The resolution reinforces provisions in the recently passed National Defense Authorization Act prohibiting the escalation of U.S. participation without express authorization from Congress. This resolution requires the President to clearly outline the strategic interests that justify intervention in Libya, to explain how the operational means being employed will secure them. It requires a prompt and transparent accounting of costs as well as information regarding the capacity and intentions of the rebel forces. This information is essential to allow Congress to execute its constitutionally mandated oversight role of military operations.

Again, I fully agree that the administration has been disturbingly dismissive of Congress's role in the authorization of military force. But I also feel that passing this resolution is the most effective way of holding the President accountable without sacrificing other vital national interests that would be damaged by a precipitous withdrawal from NATO operations.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I do thank both Speaker BOEHNER and Representative KUCINICH for bringing these resolutions and bringing this issue to the floor because I completely agree that this is an issue that Congress should debate, discuss, and should ultimately express its opinion on. We have not done that. We are now past 90 days that this mission has been going on in Libya, and I feel we should have brought this up much sooner.

Now, I would prefer a much cleaner resolution that simply came out and made a resolution of approval of the President's mission and of the mission that we and NATO have undertaken in Libya and gave Members the chance to vote it up or down. In that sense, Mr. KUCINICH's resolution is much more straightforward. It's a resolution of disapproval, but, again, it gives us the opportunity to at least debate the issue and express the will of Congress.

I do, however, oppose Mr. BOEHNER's resolution. I also oppose Mr. KUCINICH's resolution because I don't think we should pull away from this mission, should pull out of what NATO is doing and the very important work that is going on in Libya.

Mr. BOEHNER's resolution doesn't do any of that, but it does rather boldly state that the President has not made a case for the mission in Libya, and I very strongly disagree with that assessment.

Now I will agree—and Mr. MCKEON and I share the frustration—that prior to the launching of this mission, there was an inadequate amount of communication between the President and this Congress, indeed, between the President and the American people, explaining the reasons for getting into that mission; but since that time the President has made it very clear why we went into Libya.

We had a unique situation. I do not believe the American military should intervene in every conflict in every country. In fact, I don't believe it should intervene in almost any of them. It takes a unique set of circumstances to call for that intervention; and in Libya we had, I believe, that unique set of circumstances.

Number one, we had broad international support. The U.N., NATO, the Arab League all looked at that situation and said intervention was necessary.

Number two, we had a clear humanitarian crisis. There was no doubt at the time that we intervened that if we had not, Muammar Qadhafi would have slaughtered his own people and reasserted control over Libya. He made it clear that is what he was going to do. It was clear that the people rising up for the legitimate opportunity to be heard in their government did not have the power and the force to stop him. We did.

If we had not acted, there is no question that Muammar Qadhafi would be back in charge of Libya, and we would bear at least some piece of the responsibility—at least that is the way the rest of the world would have looked at it. We in the United States had the power and the force to stop a humanitarian catastrophe and chose not to act.

And that's one of the most critical elements in deciding whether or not to intervene: Can we intervene in a successful way? Yes, there are many countries throughout the world that face crises right now, in Syria, in Sudan, in the Congo, a whole bunch of places. But most of those places—in fact in all of those—there is no clear military mission that we could accomplish and achieve. In Libya, there was. If we intervened, we could stop Qadhafi from regaining control of his entire country.

At the time we understood there was no guarantee that that would mean that he would be driven from power immediately, but we could at least stop him from doing that. It was a humanitarian crisis that our actions could prevent. I think it made sense, and I think the President has clearly articulated that.

So for the Congress to pass a resolution saying they have no earthly idea what the President is doing in Libya simply means that they haven't been paying attention for the last couple of months. It has been made clear.

Now, I think it is appropriate that we ask the President to regularly keep in touch with us, let us know where the mission is going. I supported the resolution that said no ground troops in Libya. I think that is a step too far. I don't think that is something that would clearly be able to be accomplished militarily, so I do think that's appropriate.

But the part of this resolution that I must oppose is the part that says the President has made no national security case for why we should be involved in Libya. I believe that he has, and I don't think we should support a resolution saying otherwise. To have simply allowed Libya to fall apart and not helped a people that we could clearly help, that were legitimately calling for greater freedom and greater opportunity, I think, would have been a mistake.

So I will oppose the Boehner resolution, and I will also oppose the Kucinich resolution because I don't believe we should pull out of the mission. But again, I thank all of those involved for bringing this debate to the House floor so that we can have that debate so that we in Congress can assert our authority and express our opinion on this very, very important issue.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCKEON. Madam Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to my friend and colleague, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Tactical Error and Land Forces, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BARTLETT).

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I rise in support of the Boehner resolution.

I am not here today to argue whether or not we should be in Libya. That is an argument for another day. What I'm here today concerned with is how we got into Libya, because I think that was a very important precedent.

We went into Libya on March 19, Operation Odyssey Dawn. Just 12 days later, a House committee met and Secretary Gates was there and I made this statement: "I'm among many people who feel that President Obama has involved the United States in an unconstitutional and illegal war in Libya."

That same day I dropped H.R. 1323, which asked the President to find offsets in non-defense discretionary spending to pay for the war in Libya that was not authorized by the Congress because we have no money, and I shouldn't ask my kids and my grandkids to pay for that war. This is not the king's army. The power to move our Army into Libya is not inherent in Commander in Chief. If it were, they would not have put in article I, section 8, the responsibility of the Congress to declare war.

This is an unconstitutional and illegal war. I think it sets a very dangerous precedent, and I hope that we make that very clear in our deliberations today.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Madam Speaker, I reserve my time.

Mr. MCKEON. Madam Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to my friend and colleague, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Readiness, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. FORBES).

Mr. FORBES. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of the Boehner resolution, but not because I feel that the President has stated a correct policy for us being in Libya. I think he hasn't. All that you'll hear on the floor today would lead to a policy that, if we adopt it, would put us in war with five or six other countries tomorrow. But, secondly, I don't support the fact of how we got in there because I think clearly he didn't go through the proper procedures that we need and didn't comply with the War Powers Act.

But, Madam Speaker, I also realize that regardless of that disagreement he is the President of the United States; and as such he has information about our national defense that many Members of Congress don't have that we need to have shared with us.

And, second, Madam Speaker, as the President of the United States, when it comes to foreign policy issues of this magnitude, we need to give him some latitude to present that case and make it to this Congress.

Madam Speaker, the Boehner resolution does that in a reasonable way by giving him 14 days to present that information. But I believe, as many people do, at the end of that 14 days, if he hasn't done so, if he hasn't made that case, if he hasn't given us that information, we need to be prepared to launch the subpoenas to get the information, or we need to be back on this floor taking action to cut off the funding of what's taking place there.

Madam Speaker, I hope we will support the Boehner resolution. I think it's a reasonable approach and the correct approach.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Madam Speaker, I continue to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCKEON. Madam Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to my friend and colleague, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Strategic Forces, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TURNER).

Mr. TURNER. Thank you, Chairman MCKEON.

The President has not made the case for our military conflict in Libya. He has told us who we are against, Qadhafi, but he has not told us who we are for.

Secretary Gates has told us that we know very little about the opposition; we know very little about the rebels. We do not know their geopolitical view to their neighbors; we do not know their geopolitical view to us. We do not know their commitment to domestic diversity. Are we going to have atrocities? We do not know their ideology, we do not know their preferred form of government, and we also do not know their commitment to nonproliferation of weapons of mass destruction, an issue that is important in Libya.

The President has used United Nations approval of civil protection to wage all-out war on Qadhafi without congressional approval or American support. U.S. Admiral Locklear, in charge of the NATO operations against Libya, recently stated that ground troops would be needed to provide stability in Libya once the Qadhafi regime falls. Yesterday, White House Press Secretary Jay Carney said he believes that the President has the support of the majority of the Members of Congress. I do not think so.

I offered a resolution, House Resolution 58, that would voice this body's disapproval of the President's actions in Libya. Seventy-five Members have co-sponsored this resolution. I believe it's important for this body's voice to be heard.

The President has not provided us any information as to why we are doing this, what a post-Qadhafi regime will look like in Libya, and what will be our involvement. He is committing us to an extended military action; and for Congress to be relevant, our voices need to be heard.

I support the Speaker's resolution, and I urge my colleagues to cosponsor House Concurrent Resolution 58.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN).

Mr. MORAN. Madam Speaker, I rise to oppose this motion.

The War Crimes Tribunal is about to prosecute Ratko Mladic—16 years later, but they've finally gotten him. Why? Because he masterminded the massacre of over 8,000 innocent civilians in Srebrenica. Serbia is now a democratic ally, thanks to President Clinton's taking action against congressional resistance.

We took the lead in the Balkans. It was a NATO effort, but I think we all know that NATO could not have put an end to those massacres, that genocide, had we not taken the lead. We had to act responsibly, and we had to act in a timely and forceful manner.

Now, more recently there have been more than a dozen times since 2000 when the President has had to use American troops to intervene for humanitarian reasons against terrorist threats, against whatever endangered American civilians and troops.

To tie the President's hands in such situations, whether it be a Republican or Democratic President, is wrong. We should not be doing this. Of course we should be advising the President, working with the President, whoever that President might be. And through our committee leadership, we have any number of opportunities to do that. But to pass legislation that is designed to tie the President's hands at a time of military crisis is inconsistent with the legacy of this body, which is to do what is necessary to protect America's interests at home and abroad.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I yield the gentleman from Virginia 1 additional minute.

Mr. MORAN. With regard to Libya, we don't know what the outcome is going to be in Libya. We do know that Muammar Qadhafi is a bad guy. He's not an ally. He's not even reliable in terms of working with us in any economic or foreign policy measure. This is an opportunity to establish a government that we can work with. We can't control that government, we're not sure of the outcome, but we know the people putting their government together today want to work with the United States. But they need American support, obviously under the umbrella of NATO—that's NATO's purpose—but none of us should be so naive as to think that NATO can operate independent of United States leadership. That's just not the case. We have made the investment in our military capability, we have established ourselves as the world's superpower, and with that role comes a concomitant responsibility to use it when and wherever necessary for the advancement of world peace and security.

Let's defeat this resolution.

Mr. MCKEON. Madam Speaker, I yield 1 minute to my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. RIGELL).

Mr. RIGELL. Madam Speaker, I thank Chairman MCKEON for yielding, and I rise in strong support of House Resolution 292.

I object to the U.S. military intervention in Libya, and my friend and colleague from Virginia actually has far more confidence in the intent and the purpose of the rebels than I do. I've heard in testimony in the Armed Services Committee from multiple top leaders in our country that we simply don't know enough about the rebels, and in my view not one single provision of the War Powers Resolution has been met that would legitimize the President's intervention in Libya.

Since President Obama announced the military strikes, Secretary of Defense Gates admitted that Operation Odyssey Dawn "was not a vital national interest to the United States."

This legislation, the Boehner resolution, reflects and meets the deep obligation we have to support our troops and to uphold the Constitution.

Madam Speaker, I ask my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCKEON. Madam Speaker, I yield 1 minute to my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. PALAZZO).

Mr. PALAZZO. Madam Speaker, the citizens of Mississippi's Fourth Congressional District overwhelmingly do not support the President's handling of Libya, and I agree with my constituents.

Our country, our military, and their families are fatigued by 10 years of war in Iraq and Afghanistan. The White House has yet to clearly explain to the American people why we should commit more of our precious blood and treasure to a third war.

Where is the leadership Americans expect and deserve when it comes to committing our troops to foreign wars?

With reservation, I will support House Resolution 292—only because the United States must honor our commitment to our friends and allies engaged in the Libyan conflict. This resolution gives the President 14 days to explain to Congress the scope of our objectives in Libya. If he fails, we should immediately withdraw our support from the conflict, and as much as we care for our friends and allies, we cannot cast aside the laws of our land.

Mr. President, the American people and this Congress have questions and deserve answers. We cannot afford a failure in leadership when Americans' lives are on the line.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Members are reminded to direct their comments to the Chair and not to others in the second person.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Madam Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for 2½ minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. The President has said from the outset that our role in this mission will be limited; limited but critical. We are not committing troops, we are not committing the full force of the U.S. military, but what we are contributing, as Mr. MORAN said, is absolutely critical to the success of the mission. We are supporting our NATO allies in making sure that this mission is carried out in a very limited and very critical way.

I just want to emphasize again that Muammar Qadhafi is not someone who is in the best national security interests of the United States of America. He has a long, long history of weapons of mass destruction, of supporting terrorist groups, of committing terrorist acts against United States citizens, and of in general being an unstable and destabilizing figure. When the people of Libya decided to rise up to throw him out, it was a very appropriate thing for them to do.

Now we all wish that Mr. Qadhafi would have gone quietly and simply—that certainly would have been the easier way to go—but he didn't. And to protect those people who have legitimate aspirations for a better government, we needed to intervene militarily to assist.

Now I think in this instance the best thing about this is we were not alone. The Arab League, the United Nations, NATO, took the lead. There is a great deal of instability throughout the Middle East and that is unquestionably in the national security interests of the United States of America to do whatever we can to try and reduce that instability and make sure that we have friends, allies and also governments that legitimately represent the aspirations of their people. That is one of the greatest problems we've had. We have supported governments in the past in the Middle East who didn't have the support of their people. We need not just the support of governments, we need the support of the people in that region. This is a critical opportunity to gain that support. I believe that's clearly in the national security interest of the American people.

So, I do not agree with the gentleman from Ohio's resolution in saying that the President has not articulated a case. He has. We in the House should vote whether we approve it or not, but I don't think it is correct to say that the case has not been made. Let's have a vote in this body, as we will, on the Kucinich resolution, of whether or not to support what is going on there or not, but we should not simply be asking the President for something he has already provided.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. McKEON. Madam Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Indiana, a member of the Armed Services Committee, Mr. YOUNG.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. YOUNG of Indiana. I rise in support, as so many of my colleagues have, of House Resolution 292, because this Congress is a coequal branch of government, and we must never be a quiet coequal branch, especially on military matters.

When the U.S. sends its sons and daughters into harm's way, it must only be done to protect America's vital national security interests and where there is a clear plan to advance those interests.

We know our Nation is insolvent, with a national debt of over $14 trillion. Our troops are already overextended, we're hearing, in Afghanistan and Pakistan. Meanwhile, the administration is talking about defense spending cuts at the very same time it's piling on this new mission, a humanitarian mission, a narrow humanitarian mission, we're told, on top of all our other commitments.

Now what gives? This Congress needs to be heard. Our President has failed to properly define what vital national security interests justify this military intervention, and with this resolution, we give him 14 days to do so. Sadly and ironically, by becoming involved in Libya, our NATO alliance, which does remain a vitally important national security interest, may well have been put at risk.

This Congress will be heard.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Madam Speaker, regarding H. Con. Res. 51 and H. Res. 292, both resolutions have imperfections. I strongly support the sentiment behind the Kucinich resolution but do not think it would be responsible to compel action in such a short time period. Regrettably, the Boehner resolution accomplishes little. However, it makes a clear statement that I agree with, which is that American troops should not be on the ground in Libya.

Mr. REYES. Madam Speaker, I rise today in opposition to the Boehner resolution on Libya. As a combat veteran myself, I am extremely concerned any time that we commit to using our armed forces to support military actions, and I believe that close scrutiny of our country's involvement in the NATO-led operation is essential.

I understand the frustration being expressed by many here today about their level of consultation in the decision to commence military operations in Libya, but, as my colleague from the Armed Services Committee ADAM SMITH noted, Congressional leaders were invited to a White House briefing and substantial information has been provided to Congress since then.

Based on my personal experience as Chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, the Obama Administration's level of consultation with Congress on these sorts of issues is much more extensive and timely than during the Bush Administration.

I, myself, had additional questions which were not fully addressed by this week's briefings, and, while my colleagues were debating the rule for this resolution, I simply called the White House to request the information demanded in this resolution. Much of the information was provided immediately, with the rest due back in the next few days. And when I asked the White House about requests for information they had received on operations in Libya, they told me they had responded to all Congressional requests for briefings.

Debating the bill before us may provide a convenient opportunity for opponents of the President to make political statements, but it does so at the expense of our troops who are actively engaged in combat operations. This resolution threatens our critical NATO alliance and emboldens our enemies.

The Boehner resolution—like the Kucinich measure which we are also debating today—potentially sends the message to our NATO allies that the United States does not stand by its commitments. At a time when we are relying more and more on our NATO allies to support the joint mission in Afghanistan, now is not the time to turn our back on NATO.

Beyond straining relations with our closest allies, this resolution sends an even more dangerous message to Colonel Qaddafi. This resolution is effectively telling a despotic dictator, who has murdered and terrorized his own citizens, that he can simply wait out the military effort to protect the Libyan people because the United States will not hold true to its word.

As a member of the Armed Services Committee, as a combat veteran, and as an American, I will continue to ask the hard questions of our military and civilian leaders about military operations over Libya. But I will not vote for a measure that I believe threatens the security and safety of our country and undermines our President.

Mr. JORDAN of Ohio. Madam Speaker, more than two months after stating that our military action in Libya would be over in "days, not weeks," President Obama has yet to explain to the American people what our mission in Libya is, how it will be conducted, and when it will be completed. He has failed to explain how our military involvement in Libya fits with our policy interests in the Middle East and northern Africa. Most importantly, he has ignored his constitutional responsibility to uphold federal law by choosing not to acquire authorization from Congress for our involvement there.

That is why I cosponsored Mr. TURNER's resolution disapproving of the President's actions, and that is why I joined my House colleagues today in demanding action from the President.

The President must follow the law and seek approval for this military action from Congress. In doing so, he must explain some basic facts, such as whether the removal of Moammar Qaddafi is part of the mission, how stability will be promoted in the region if Qaddafi is removed from power, and who among the anti-Qaddafi forces in Libya should be supported in the event that he is removed.

Instead of following the clear path of seeking congressional approval as outlined in federal law, the President unilaterally escalated our military efforts in Libya after assuring us they would be scaled back. Now, some in the Obama administration are saying we should put boots on the ground in support of further NATO actions. This is the opposite of what the President promised and contrary to the will of the House.

Congress appropriately shows a certain deference to the commander-in-chief when it comes to national security decisions, as we must always have the ability to quickly respond to threats to our sovereignty and our interests around the world. Further, Congress must not direct troop movements or set timelines for our military operations, as such decisions should be left to our highly skilled commanders on the ground. But our deference is contingent upon the President respecting the Founders' intent for the primary role of Congress in providing for our defense and security needs. It does not change the fact that the President is obliged to seek congressional approval and to explain how our mission in Libya is vital to our national security.

The brave men and women in our armed forces, as always, are performing their duties with the greatest expertise and professionalism of any military in the world. The issue at hand is the failure of the President to seek congressional approval required by law, and the failure of the President to tell Congress and the American people the details of our mission.

The American people will always stand with those who seek freedom and self-determination. Today's vote reaffirms that it is vital the President obey the rule of law in doing so.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Madam Speaker, like many members of this body, I have been outraged by the President's failure to comply with the War Powers Act and to define the U.S. mission in Libya. This Congress must not neglect its responsibility and authority regarding the use of force in Libya, and the debate we are having today is long overdue.

I think most Americans, including myself, agree that seeing Moammar Gadhafi and his regime of thugs removed from power would be a good thing. However, I think most Americans, including myself, also feel strongly that American forces should not be committed to this kind of mission without the consent of the U.S. Congress.

Our Founding Fathers envisioned a country where the executive branch and the legislative branch share the responsibility regarding the use of force. President Obama has not sought the consent of the Congress in terms of involving American forces in Libya and that is why we are having this debate today.

I rise in support of H. Res. 292. This resolution demands that the President provide answers about our involvement in the conflict in Libya, including the President's justification for not seeking Congressional authorization for this action. The resolution gives the President 14 days to respond to this request. The President should take very seriously this resolution. And our leadership in Congress should be vigilant to demand a full and clear response from the President. This resolution also gives adequate notice to NATO and our other allies of the concerns of the House before the House takes further action. The further action must take note of the President's failure to comply with the War Powers Act and notwithstanding that fact must also take note of our Nation's foreign policy interests and efforts to combat terrorism.

H. Res. 292 is an important first step in restoring the balance that our Founding Fathers envisioned, that our legislative and executive branches share the responsibility regarding the use of U.S. force. However, the action taken today should not be the last step. In 14 days, the House of Representatives should reconvene to evaluate our continued involvement in Libya. We must then make hard decisions about the operation in Libya and the role of the United States in this conflict. I hope my colleagues will join me in remaining vigilant and demanding accountability from the White House.

Ms. JACKSON LEE of Texas. Madam Speaker, I rise today in opposition to H. Con. Res. 51, "Directing the President, Pursuant to Section (c) of the War Powers Resolution, to remove the United States Armed forces from Libya." I support the War Powers Resolution however I cannot support a resolution which requires the President to withdraw all United States Armed forces within 15 days of its adoption.

As the Ranking Member of the House Homeland Security Subcommittee on Transportation Security and Senior Member of the House Judiciary Committee, I believe in supporting the Constitution of the United States. This Concurrent Resolution is a reminder to the American people that we must firmly hold true to our constitutional duties. We have the power to ensure the Executive does not overstep its bounds. As Members of Congress we can exercise our power through appropriation, the appointment process, exercising oversight over the Executive, enacting legislation, or even establishing a select Committee to probe any abuse of power by the administration.

Presidents, Members of Congress, scholars and lawyers had long argued about which branch of government has the power to decide whether the nation goes to war, and meaningful discussions between the branches has not always taken place.

In 1973, the War Powers Resolution (Public Law 93-148) was passed over the veto of President Nixon, in order to provide procedures for Congress and the President to participate in decisions to send U.S. Armed Forces into hostilities.

Such force is constitutional under the Necessary and Proper Clause which specifically provided that "Congress shall have the power to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution, not only its own powers but also all other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States . . .".

The policy behind this power, entrusted to the President as Commander in Chief, to deploy U.S. armed forces to defend itself is "exercised only pursuant to: (1) a declaration of war; (2) specific statutory authorization; or (3) a national emergency created by attack upon the United States, its territories or possessions, or its armed forces." Pursuant to this authority, the President "in every possible instance" shall consult with Congress before deploying U.S. Armed Forces, and to continue consultations as long as the armed forces remain in hostile situations.

As we consider the War Powers Resolution, we must also consider facts surrounding the state of violence and unrest in Libya and the consequences of both action and inaction on behalf of the Libyan people.

I believe in the Constitution and the importance of maintaining the power of Congress in asserting when international conflicts warrant U.S. military involvement. I call upon the President to issue a report detailing the current status of the United States military forces in Libya within the next 30 days.

We must not forget the bloodshed that continues to take place in Libya. The people of Libya have given their lives in their fight for democracy. This conflict began in Libya four months ago when Colonel Gaddafi failed to do what was right for his country and its people. Violence erupted as many Libyan citizens felt the painful consequences of a government resistant to change. Civil liberties were infringed upon, human rights were violated, and worst of all, many Libyan lives were lost. These atrocities were not committed under the command of some far away leader or as a consequence of a conflict with a foreign nation. No, these unforgivable acts were authorized by the hand of the Libyan leader himself.

The widespread suffering in Libya was initiated and continues to be encouraged by the very man charged with protecting the Libyan people. The Libyan people are in desperate need of outside help. The question is no longer whether or not Libya is in a critical condition. I call on my fellow Members of Congress to continue to condemn the violence taking place in Libya today.

Colonel Muammar Gaddafi has continued to refuse to acknowledge the will of the Libyan people and the reality of the dilemmas that Libya faced. Rather than act as a true leader and acknowledge the interests of Libyan citizens, Gaddafi chose to remain steadfast to the status quo—to disregard the context of an intolerable situation in favor of blindly following what has always been done just for tradition's sake. The reality of the situation is this: it was Gaddafi's refusal to contemplate the circumstances in Libya that led to the unnecessary loss of innocent lives. Let us not make the same error as we deliberate the role of the U.S. and the decision of our President to act on behalf of innocent people.

We should not forget that the people of Libya are continuing to fight for democracy and there has been a significant loss of life.

Gaddafi has a long record of bloodshed and blood continues to run in the streets of Libya. We cannot stand by and do nothing, and America cannot do this alone. I call for a unified voice from NATO, the United Nations, the African Union, and other world groups to stop the slaughter and violence against the people of Libya."

As a Member of this body, I am calling on my colleagues to join me in calling attention to the plight of the people of Libya and their fight for freedom, justice, and deliverance from Col. Muammar el-Qaddafi.

I stand with the people of Libya fighting for peace and freedom. It is clear that NATO has taken the Lead in protecting the Libyan People.

FACTS ON NATO

For over two months NATO-led airstrikes in Libya have inflicted serious damage upon the Qaddafi regime's war machine, yet loyalist forces continue to demonstrate cohesiveness and operational superiority over besieged rebel forces. Still, some analysts suggest the stalemate is now yielding to a war of attrition favoring the rebels. Rebel combat skills have improved, as has their arsenal (which now reportedly includes vehicle-mounted antiaircraft guns, recoilless rifles, and mortars). During the week of May 11th, rebel forces succeeded in capturing Misratah, which had been the scene of the heaviest fighting since the conflict began. With control of the air and sea ports, rebels have developed a means to resupply and reinforce Misratah from the east while simultaneously supporting resistance in the west. Meanwhile fuel shortages in regime-held areas are taking a toll, as demonstrated by an attack over the weekend against reporters during a state-supervised trip to the Tunisian border. Fierce fighting continues across the Nafusa mountain range, which cuts across the desert south of Tripoli to the western border with Tunisia. At least four Grad rockets fired from Libya on May 16th landed in Tunisia near the Dahiba border crossing. Tunisian authorities have warned that it will report Libya to the Security Council if loyalist forces continue firing ammunition into Tunisia.

As rebels consolidate recent gains, NATO has proven to be the equalizing force. NATO have targeted major command centers near Tripoli and Brega and surface-to-air missile launchers in Sirte and Al Khums. On May 19th NATO destroyed at least eight naval ships after it was verified that the Libyan navy had tried to mine the rebel-controlled port of Misratah. That same day NATO blocked a Maltese-flagged ship from delivering a consignment of fuel intended for regime forces. Airstrikes against a compound in Tripoli on May 1st reportedly killed Qaddafi's youngest son Saif al-Arab and three grandchildren. Direct lines of communication have been established between NATO and opposition headquarters in Benghazi, thereby enhancing NATO's operational effectiveness. Previously, opposition forces have faced accidental strikes by NATO aircraft after failing to identify themselves and shifting to the use of armored vehicles without communicating with the coalition.

The NATO air mission has conducted nearly 8000 sorties, including 3025 strike sorties, since assuming control of the operation on March 23rd. The NATO maritime component has conducted more than 1000 hailings in the embargo area, boarded 48 ships, and turned away 7 ships.

The African Union continues to press for a peace deal that was accepted by Qaddafi but rejected by the opposition because it would leave Qaddafi in power. Turkey also has proposed a roadmap to establish an immediate and verifiable ceasefire, secure humanitarian aid corridors, and advance "a political process for a transition. However, Turkey has not yet provided an implementation strategy other than making it clear that Qaddafi must go.

After the President of South Africa, Jacob Zuma, engaged in peace talks with Qaddafi most of the world believed the bloodshed would end. Today, it is clear that Qaddafi is going to continue to fight to stay in power.

As it stands, the United States already has authorized a drawdown in nonlethal defense articles and services valued at $25 million to assist the Transitional National Council (TNC) and an additional $53.5 million in humanitarian assistance. It was announced on May 5th that the Administration now is seeking legislation to allow them to “vest,” or confiscate, “assets and property held by the government of Libya, including the Central Bank of Libya, in the jurisdiction of the United States and invest all or part of that in any agency or individual designated by the President to provide humanitarian relief and protect civilians in Libya.” The United States currently holds $33 billion in frozen Libyan assets and property, of which $150 million has been proposed for vesting. Senator KERRY has suggested to reporters that he will soon introduce the requested legislation.

We can not stand by and watch as the people of Libya suffer. We need and must provide humanitarian aid. Americans have always come to aid of their neighbors in times of crisis. Thus far, the United States has provided over $53.5 million to meet urgent humanitarian needs in Libya while the European Commission has provided nearly $55.4 million. On May 18, the UN launched a revised Regional Flash Appeal for the Libyan Crisis, increasing the appeal from $310 million to $407.8 million. To date, the UN has received $175 million in contributions or 43% toward the appeal and an additional $106 million for humanitarian activities not listed in the appeal. The UN evacuated its international staff from Tripoli on May 1st but maintains a presence in Benghazi. Humanitarian access inside Libya remains severely constrained. Of particular concern are the besieged western towns of Zintan, Nalut, Zawiyah and Yifran.

Over 807,000 people have fled to neighboring Chad, Egypt, Niger, Algeria and Tunisia since the start of the crisis. Additionally, up to 200,000 internally displaced persons (IDPs) from Brega, Ras Lanuf, and Ajdabiya are in eastern Libya.

We must continue to remember the context upon which we are currently operating in the world today. The Middle East is finally awakening to democracy and freedom. Advancing these objectives also advances our nation's security.

FACTS

The people of Libya have suffered since the overthrow of King Idriss in 1969. Under the oppressive Qaddafi regime, basic human rights have been terminated, and too many lives have been lost.

Since assuming power, Colonel Qaddafi has ignored the needs of the Libyan people, choosing to train other oppressive leaders in intelligence and weaponry. Qaddafi has given money to dictators such as Robert Mugabe and Charles Taylor, and intervened in foreign wars instead of investing in education and infrastructure for the betterment of his own people.

Human Rights Watch and Amnesty International have consistently reported the lack of free press and free speech in Libya. The State controls the media and speaking out against Qaddafi or his government is not only illegal, it is also deadly. Qaddafi and his army executed activists who opposed the government and broadcasted their deaths on television.

Qaddafi was particularly intolerant of women and other minorities. Foreign Policy reports he established “social rehabilitation” centers where women who were designated financially or morally vulnerable were detained indefinitely. Homosexuality was deemed criminal, and punished with up to five years in jail.

Since the outbreak of civil war in February, Qaddafi has shut down Internet communication in Libya, and abused and detained foreign journalists covering the rebellion.

The International Federation for Human Rights has reported that commanders in the Libyan army executed hundreds of lower ranking soldiers for refusing to fire on protestors or defend Qaddafi.

Colonel Qaddafi has utilized snipers, helicopters gunships, mercenaries and gangs of hired thugs to harm his own people throughout the course of the protests. Rebels taking to the streets demanding free elections were injured and killed.

Because of the severe communication restrictions and limited access of journalists, estimates are extremely varied as to how many Libyans have been killed in this conflict. Navi Pillay, the High Commissioner for Human Rights at the United Nations estimates thousands have been killed or injured. The Libyan National Transitional Council puts the death toll around 8,000.

I am outraged at the story of Eman al-Obeidy who had the courage to report being raped by soldiers in the employ of Qaddafi. Because this young woman spoke out about the brutal crime she endured, she lives in fear of the repercussions. Ms. Al-Obeidy's story is a harsh and violent reflection of Qaddafi's regime and the somber reality that rape is a symptom of war. This violent sexual assault must be investigated, and Ms. Al-Obeidy's safety must be ensured. This brutal crime is further evidence of the cruelty of Colonel Qaddafi's regime. In addition, to killing thousands of innocent civilians, the Libyan government is also allowing violent discriminatory actions to be freely committed against the women of Libya. This is unacceptable, and is strong evidence that humanitarian efforts must be increased. I call on the Allied Nations to ensure Ms. Al-Obeidy's safe passage out of Libya. Further, I call on the United Nations to condemn these actions, and work to prevent their future occurrence.

The Red Cross reports dangerously low amounts of medical supplies and food, as well as a refugee crisis as thousands flee the violence.

There should be an increased emphasis on diplomacy. On May 20th it was reported that Shukri Ghanem, head of Libya's National Oil Company and former Prime Minister, had defected to Tunisia. On May 19th Secretary of State Clinton asserted that Qaddafi's wife Sophia and daughter Aicha had fled to Tunisia, though Tunisian authorities later denied the report. On May 9th it was reported that Egyptian authorities had placed Qaddafi's cousin Ahmed Gaddafi al-Dam under house arrest and planned to seize his assets before deporting him to Benghazi. On May 4th, the prosecutor for the International Criminal Court announced that he was seeking the arrest of three unnamed senior officials in the Libyan regime for war crimes and crimes against humanity. On May 3rd, Turkish Prime Minister Recep Tayyip Erdogan demanded that Qaddafi step down after attacks against foreign embassies in Tripoli forced Turkey to suspend diplomatic operations. Libyan diplomats subsequently were expelled from France and the UK. On May 2nd, Switzerland reported that the country had seized over $411 million in Libyan assets. The United States, the European Union, Russia, Japan, South Korea, and other countries previously enacted targeted sanctions against Qaddafi and his key supporters.

The Founders distributed the decision to go to war between the two political branches to assure that the decision would be made carefully. The founding generation experienced the hardship of several wars and they knew war's human and financial costs. They understood that a strong executive who is already given the title “Commander in Chief,” might flex the country's military strength injudiciously. Giving Congress the essential power to declare war allows heads to cool, alternatives to be considered, and makes certain there is consensus if the country is called to fight. Therefore I voted against the meaningless H. Res. 292 that has no basis in law in order to be consistent in my support of Congress' authority to declare war and the War Powers Resolution (driven by the Vietnam War). I voted yes on H. Con. Res. 51 to allow the President to go to the Senate. The Resolution failed and I hope the President will approach Congress and consult so we can bring peace and an end to violence together.

Mr. PENCE. Madam Speaker, I rise in support of the Boehner resolution, H. Res. 292 and also to announce my opposition to the resolution offered by Mr. KUCINICH.

Let me be clear, I will never jeopardize support for our troops, and I will always maintain the proper level of deference and respect due the Commander in Chief in matters of war. But I do not believe the President of the United States has the authority to take America to war without congressional approval where our security and vital national interests are not directly threatened.

The President told the American people in his address to the Nation on March 28, 2011, that it would be a mistake to broaden our mission. He said, “We went down that road in Iraq.” Now, more than seventy-five days since hostilities began in Libya, it has become all too clear that the road we are currently taking is quite different from that we took in Iraq.

In Iraq, we had a clear objective. We had congressional bipartisan approval in both Houses, international support, and through trial and the sacrifice of blood and treasure, we are now on the edge of victory. Here in Libya, there is no clear objective, no congressional approval, and uncertain international support. We are on a different road.

Speaker BOEHNER's resolution before the House today, H. Res. 292, will prevent the President from committing American ground forces in Libya and requires the Administration to finally justify why it committed our military resources in Libya without seeking consultation from Congress. When passed, this resolution will also force the Administration to report to the Congress the political and military objectives regarding Operation Odyssey Dawn.

Let me also speak to the resolution of the other gentleman from Ohio, Mr. KUCINICH. I have never believed it to be wise to tell the enemy when you will quit fighting. More significantly, it cites the constitutionally dubious provisions of the War Powers Resolution and I cannot support it.

In closing, let me just say that history has taught us that America has succeeded only when we have chosen to send our men and women into combat with a clear objective to win. In this instance, where the Administration has not demonstrated how American military involvement advances our national security interests and where the President has failed to provide the American people with a compelling reason to commit our Armed Forces, there is no clear objective to win.

The Boehner resolution will force the Obama Administration to bring its case to the American public before further committing our men and women in Libya and I urge its immediate passage.

Mr. HECK. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 292.

On March 19, 2011, in response to United Nations Security Council Resolution 1973, the Obama administration, in cooperation with our NATO allies, commenced Operation Odyssey Dawn to enforce a no-fly zone in Libyan airspace.

In accordance with the War Powers Resolution, the administration must seek congressional authorization for this operation within 60 days.

Madam Speaker, that 60 days has come and gone, and we are now on our 77th day of conducting military operations in Libya. Yet the President has still not sought congressional authorization.

Without congressional authorization, the War Powers Resolution dictates that the President must withdraw our forces within 90 days.

As that 90th day rapidly approaches, this legislation puts the administration on notice that it has 14 days to provide a compelling rationale for our involvement in Libya, or Congress will exercise its constitutional prerogative to withhold funds for this operation.

Since the commencement of operations, the administration has often cited the need to protect civilians in Libya as the basis for our involvement in this operation.

While I understand the moral imperative to assist and protect these civilians as they engage in open conflict with a tyrannical and oppressive government, it cannot be the policy of the United States to commit U.S. troops to every civil conflict throughout the world.

In fact, this is not U.S. policy. The Arab Spring has ushered in an era of civil unrest throughout the Middle East. Civilians in Syria, Yemen, Egypt, Bahrain, Iran, and Tunisia have all risen up in protest against their governments.

The outcome of each of these uprisings has varied significantly, as have the national security implications for the United States. Yet the United States did not come to the aid of these civilians.

So why then is Libya different? Why is it in the national security interests of the United States to involve ourselves in this civil conflict and not the others?

As Members of Congress we have a responsibility to the American people to ask these questions and the President has the obligation to answer them.

If the President is unable or unwilling to communicate a justification that clearly defines U.S. national security interests for committing U.S. troops and resources to Libya, then we have an obligation to compel him to withdraw.

H. Res. 292 does this and it does it in a responsible manner.

The alternative, Madam Speaker, is to support the bill offered by the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. KUCINICH, and force the President to withdraw our forces in 15 days.

While I commend the gentleman from Ohio for offering this legislation and appreciate his efforts to hold the administration accountable for committing U.S. Forces without congressional authorization, I have a number of concerns with the 15 day timeline.

First, it is logistically impossible to completely and responsibly disengage our forces within this short timeframe. We should not shackle our military leaders with an unrealistic mandate to withdraw because their Commander-in-Chief did not comply with his obligations under War Powers Resolution.

They must be given adequate time to plan, organize and execute this withdrawal. Fifteen days simply does not permit this.

Additionally, while I agree that Congress' ultimate responsibility is to the American people, withdrawing our forces in fifteen days would completely undermine our number one obligation to provide for the common defense of the United States.

The safety and security of our nation depends greatly on the cooperation and commitments of our allies.

The NATO alliance is the centerpiece of our efforts to support and promote safety and stability throughout the world.

Withdrawing our forces from Libya in 15 days pulls the rug out from under our NATO allies and would have dire consequences for our future cooperation and the security of the United States.

Like our military leaders, our NATO allies must be provided ample time to reassess and reorganize their military strategy to carry out operations without our support. Again, 15 days does not permit this.

For these reasons I cannot support Mr. KUCINICH's legislation. While I agree that we must hold the administration accountable, we must not do so at the expense of our allies.

Madam Speaker, H. Res. 292 is the responsible alternative. It asserts congressional authority by compelling the administration to adhere to its obligations under the War Powers Resolution, while at the same time ensuring that we do not undermine our allies.

Madam Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support H. Res. 292, and to vote down H. Con. Res. 51.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time for debate has expired.

Pursuant to House Resolution 294, the previous question is ordered on the resolution.

The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. McKEON. Madam Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

LIBYA WAR POWERS RESOLUTION

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Madam Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 294, I call up the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 51) directing the President, pursuant to section 5(c) of the War Powers Resolution, to remove the United States Armed Forces from Libya, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 294, the concurrent resolution is considered read.

The text of the concurrent resolution is as follows:

H. CON. RES. 51

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring),

SECTION 1. REMOVAL OF UNITED STATES ARMED FORCES FROM LIBYA.

Pursuant to section 5(c) of the War Powers Resolution (50 U.S.C. 1544(c)), Congress directs the President to remove the United States Armed Forces from Libya by not later than the date that is 15 days after the date of the adoption of this concurrent resolution.

□ 1200

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The concurrent resolution shall be debatable for 1 hour, with 30 minutes controlled by the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN) and 30 minutes controlled by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH).

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Florida.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the ranking member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, my friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN), be allowed to control 15 minutes of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in opposition to H. Con. Res. 51, directing the President to remove United States Armed Forces from Libya. The President has failed to make the legal and constitutional case that he owes to the Congress and to the American people before committing American forces to a voluntary conflict. But the situation as it stands today poses an important U.S. national security consideration, and it requires this body to oppose this Kucinich resolution.

What are these considerations, Madam Speaker? These are: the sudden

U.S. withdrawal from Libyan operations proposed by this resolution could do irreparable harm to the NATO alliance, and ultimately undermine support for NATO efforts in Afghanistan. Also, the longer Qadhafi is able to cling to power and continue fighting, the more that he will destabilize the larger region. Conflict is already spilling over into neighboring countries—Tunisia, for example, which is undergoing a fragile transition of its own. Also, there are significant proliferation concerns at stake, including the need to secure Libyan chemical munitions and prevent the flow of heavy and light weaponry from leaking across the porous borders of Libya. Also, extremist organizations that pose a credible threat to American interests, including al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb, already are exploiting the opportunity to arm themselves and organize.

So while I share the frustration of my colleagues, I am deeply concerned that an abrupt withdrawal of support for the NATO mission would have repercussions that extend far beyond the borders of Libya. Adoption of this resolution would send a signal to Qadhafi that if he can just hang on for 15 days more, the alliance will crumble and he can resume his destructive behavior and his destabilizing activities. In Egypt, the stability necessary to prevent extremist elements from seizing control could be compromised if the conflict in Libya remains unresolved.

Furthermore, Madam Speaker, providing Qadhafi free rein by forcing the U.S. to rapidly withdraw from the NATO operation would pose an even more virulent threat to such other allies in the region as Israel. An emboldened Qadhafi regime would be in a position to provide both destabilizing types and amounts of conventional weapons, as well as unconventional capabilities through new and existing smuggling routes to violent extremists in Lebanon, the West Bank, and Gaza, extremists who seek the destruction of Israel.

A U.S. withdrawal in a manner that is called for in this resolution, in fact mandated in this resolution, could have detrimental consequences for countries such as Jordan and the United Arab Emirates, who provide critical support to the United States and our NATO allies in Afghanistan. And, as operations experts from the Department of Defense warned yesterday, an abrupt withdrawal from Libya operations, as this resolution demands, would severely undermine support by our European allies for NATO efforts in Afghanistan.

In fact, it would have a detrimental effect on NATO's efforts in Afghanistan both in terms of weakening our mission partners and emboldening the Taliban, al Qaeda, and associated elements. It would compromise the safety and security of U.S. forces that at this very moment are engaged in the battle against heavily armed enemy forces in Afghanistan.

Madam Speaker, as many of my colleagues know, my daughter-in-law Lindsay served in Iraq and in Afghanistan. I also have two committee staffers, one in the Army Reserves and one in the Marine Reserves, who recently returned from serving a year each in Afghanistan. They have emphasized that the potential dangers to our troops there of a NATO pullout or a decrease of forces and assets in Afghanistan due to a need to refocus them on ongoing operations in Libya is indeed dangerous for the United States. They have emphasized that operations in Libya do not exist in a vacuum.

Recall that the House just this last week adopted an amendment to the National Defense Authorization bill to prevent U.S. military or private security contractors from establishing or maintaining a ground presence in Libya. Speaker BOEHNER has offered a resolution that we discussed previously that further underscores that the Congress does not support putting U.S. boots on the ground in Libya.

Now, many have argued that Congress needs to strongly exert its prerogatives under War Powers. We must do so, Madam Speaker, but do so in a prudent and responsible manner that protects the legitimate national security interests of the United States. This resolution, Madam Speaker, does not do so. So I urge a "no" vote.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KUCINICH. I yield 2 minutes to the prime cosponsor of this important constitutional initiative, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON).

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I thank the gentleman from Ohio for yielding.

I want to start off by saying this is not a partisan issue. I am very happy to cosponsor this legislation because it's the only legislation we are discussing today that has teeth in it. It really deals with the problem.

Now, Qadhafi is a bad guy and he ought to be replaced. There are a lot of tyrants around the world that ought to be replaced. But should the United States go to war any place we want to get rid of a bad guy unless it's in our national interest, or unless we're at risk, or unless there's been a declaration of war? No. We could go to war anyplace we want to if we just say this guy's a bad guy and he's killing his own people. We could do it in Syria, we could do it in Ivory Coast, we could do it all over the place.

But the Congress of the United States is the body that's supposed to be consulted by the President before we go to war. The President did not do this. We are contributing about two-thirds, or at least half of the war effort. It's cost over $700 million, and it will be over $1 billion before it's all over. And the President has taken us into this conflict without the authority of the Congress, without the support of the Congress.

He did get the Arab League, he did get the United Nations. He did talk to the French and the English. But he didn't talk to the people's House, the Congress of the United States. And the President did not have the authority to do this.

Now, the reason I support the Kucinich resolution is it sends a clear message to the White House they cannot do this again. They cannot unilaterally go into Syria or the Ivory Coast or anyplace else without talking to the Congress that represents the people all across this country. The President should not have done this. And the only legislation that really deals with the problem today is the Kucinich resolution, which I cosponsored. I am a co-author of it.

Now, I am going to vote for the Boehner resolution because it does send a signal. But it does not solve the problem. The only way to solve the problem is to let the President know he cannot, should not, and will not be able to do this again.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I rise in opposition to the resolution, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I just listened to my chairman—I am very fond of her—make a very compelling case for the national security interests we have in seeing through this operation that is now going on against Qadhafi and Libya.

In detail, with specifics, I completely support it. The only thing I didn't hear was, "Mr. President, while you didn't consult with us enough and you haven't provided us all the information, I want to thank you, as our President and our Commander in Chief, for pursuing America's national security interests in this current operation. Great job, keep it going, be a little better on the information, a little more on the consulting, but stick with it." That's what I didn't hear.

I want to compliment Mr. KUCINICH for offering this resolution. We disagree on the President's policy. My colleague wants to withdraw forces, while I support the ongoing operations in Libya. But unlike the majority, Mr. KUCINICH is taking seriously this body's fundamental responsibility to legislate on the use of force.

The President commenced combat operations in Libya to prevent a humanitarian catastrophe, a massacre at the hands of Qadhafi's forces. There was bipartisan support for this effort and the President prevented massive loss of life through the decisive use of force. We don't have to speculate about that. Qadhafi told the entire world about his plans for Benghazi, to go door to door, closet to closet to find and eliminate his opponents.

I continue to believe the mission in Libya is relevant and necessary, as does my chairman and as does the Speaker, and I believe it's achieving success. Qadhafi's forces have been driven out of eastern Libya and out of Misrata in the west. High-level defections are on the increase. Demonstrations are once again breaking out in Tripoli, suggesting a weakening of government control. Progress is slower than we would like, but it is steady.

Efforts to force a withdrawal of forces would reverse this process and jeopardize the lives of hundreds of thousands of Libyans now benefiting from the NATO operation. And this resolution demands not merely withdrawal; it demands withdrawal within 15 days.

Think about what a removal in 15 days, as required by this resolution, would mean. We would be giving Qadhafi a free hand to maintain control in Libya and continue his campaign against civilians. We would be thumbing our nose at our NATO partners whose support on the ground has been and continues to be so crucial in Afghanistan.

We would likely threaten the stability for the very Arab nations where democracy has its best hope of success: Egypt and Tunisia, each of which flank Libya and are inevitably affected by its internal developments. And we would send a message to Assad of Syria and dictators everywhere that our support for freedom and humane governance is, at best, lukewarm and transitory: Hang in there for a few weeks, Mr. Dictator, and we'll go away.

And as the families of the victims of Pan Am 103 know better than any of us, a Qadhafi who is unleashed to commit acts of terrorism around the world will do so with unspeakable barbarity. He might even reconstitute his weapons of mass destruction.

We need to give the President more time to pursue this mission. To do otherwise would be to alienate our allies, to damage our regional interests, and, once again, to invite a horrible massacre of Libyan civilians.

I urge my colleagues to join me in opposing this resolution.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. McKEON), the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. McKEON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Madam Speaker, I rise in opposition to House Concurrent Resolution 51, although I share my colleagues' concerns regarding our operations in Libya. In fact, I sent a letter to the President 2 weeks ago, to which I have not received a reply, making it clear that I would have serious reservations regarding a request for authorization of military force in Libya.

Moreover, I support House Resolution 292, which we have also debated here today. I do not believe the President has adequately sought congressional authorization, nor has he provided sufficient information for Congress to perform its constitutional oversight.

Nevertheless, I cannot support the resolution before us. This resolution would require the President to remove all U.S. forces within 15 days. Such a short lead time offers our allies no time to prepare for the withdrawal of U.S. forces, and, make no mistake, the hasty withdrawal of U.S. forces would cripple allied operations and embolden Qadhafi. The United States provides adequate capabilities that our NATO allies and other partners cannot provide, either in kind or at all levels required.

We provide over 75 percent of all aerial refueling; 70 percent of all intelligence, surveillance, and reconnaissance; nearly a quarter of all the aircraft, including fighter aircraft, for suppression of enemy air defenses; armed Predators, providing aerial surveillance and strike capability, including low-level targeted strikes in urban centers where Qadhafi's forces have entrenched themselves; and electronic warfare aircraft for jamming and support in targeting.

Reasonable people can disagree about the extent to which involvement in Libya was in our national strategic interest, but having committed our forces, a precipitous withdrawal would certainly have implications for U.S. national security and our strategic interests around the world. We should make certain allied efforts are not undermined at the last minute.

As chairman of the Armed Services Committee, I will continue to ensure that the committee conducts robust oversight of ongoing military operations, and I will continue to press the President for answers, but this resolution is not the appropriate means to bring about an end to the stalemate in Libya.

I urge my colleagues to join me in opposition.

Mr. KUCINICH. I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL).

Mr. RANGEL. Let me thank Mr. KUCINICH, and I support his efforts over the years, but especially today, in allowing this very sensitive constitutional question to be debated.

I asked him and almost pleaded that he allow me to follow my friend DAN BURTON, because nothing could better prove to our colleagues and those that know both of us how nonpartisan this issue is and should be.

This is not a question, really, of past Presidents who always thought they were doing the best for the United States of America when they put our men and women in harm's way. Not one of them ever thought that they were doing anything immoral.

This is not a Democratic problem; it's not a Republican problem; it's not a problem of the President of the United States, not Nixon, not Kennedy, not Johnson, certainly not President Obama, certainly not the Bushes. It's a problem of the House of Representatives and the United States Senate. This is a congressional problem. We have not fulfilled our responsibility.

Some people I have heard say, well, this hasn't reached a level that it should be war. Well, ask the men and women that make the sacrifices and come home and leave their fallen friends there whether this was a war. Ask those mothers and fathers and children who have lost their loved ones whether this is war.

It's easy for us to say that we are not going to get involved; let the President have the authority. But in the final analysis, when we go to the funerals, these brave men and women may not come from your districts because they don't have to make the sacrifices somehow in these United States. We know who has to volunteer, who makes the sacrifices, and we sit back and wash our hands and say we didn't think that this reached a level that we had to give approval to the President of the United States. I am not saying that the President is right or wrong. I am saying we are.

And, Mr. KUCINICH, I thank you for the opportunity, because no longer should there be a debate as to whether or not it's Libya, whether it's Korea or wherever it is. We have a constitutional authority. Thank you for giving us an opportunity to talk about this as Members of the United States Congress.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. ROGERS), the chairman of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

Mr. ROGERS of Michigan. I agree with the gentleman from New York, and our political philosophies may be different. I think it's a powerful and passionate speech. What frustrates me, I think, the most, and the fact that we are even having this debate in this way is because the President has not led on this particular issue. He should have come before Congress. I think that's clear.

I don't think anyone really objects to the fact that he should have come here anytime when we put our troops in harm's way, absolutely. I think he's done not a great job talking about what our national security interests are in Libya and what role we're playing in Libya. Bad marks all the way around.

But the Kucinich resolution is dangerous. I do believe we have national security interests at stake here. Even though the President has gone about it in all the wrong way, they're our national security interests. And to stand up today and say we're frustrated with the President, we're going to stomp our feet and we're going to bring them home, leaving our allies holding the bag, is unconscionable—unconscionable.

Here's what happens if the Kucinich resolution passes: the naval blockade becomes at risk, Qadhafi gets stronger, our ability to refuel aircraft—NATO aircraft who are doing strikes, not the United States who are doing strikes mind you, our British, our Italian and our French allies who are doing combat strikes—goes away.

The fact that we cannot get in and do particular efforts on making it very difficult for them to see through radar and actually target planes happens by the United States, that goes away. Who would do that to friends and allies in the middle of a fight?

And here's our national security interests. They have thousands and thousands of pounds of chemical weapons. This isn't a guess. We're not reading some analytical sheet. Many of you have seen it. I have personally seen it. We know it's there. It's declared. What happens to those chemical weapons in a place where al Qaeda in the Magreb is growing stronger, not weaker? There's only one country in the world that has the unique capability to keep an eye on it and take care of it when the opportunity arises. That's the United States of America. That is in our national interest. There are thousands and thousands and thousands of shoulder-fired, anti-aircraft weapons that keep me awake at night.

We have the unique capability in the United States to make sure that those weapons systems don't fall into the hands of those who would do us harm—the terrorists who proliferate in northern Africa right now. Those are in our national security interests.

So, yes, let's have the debate. I think the Speaker's approach is absolutely appropriate. It's sad that we had to come to that point where we had to inform this administration, "Sir, you have not made your case. You need to come and make your case." And I argue when he does that, when he makes his case, I think the American people will be with him. But he has to make the case, and he needs Congress' consult and advice on this particular issue. And I argue he needs our approval to continue to move forward.

I hope that we don't get really small in our politics and we're so angry at this President for not making his case on something as sensitive as this that we would ruin our national interests as we move forward. They are important allies, our French and our British. Now we've been frustrated at them, and I'm sure they're frustrated at us. But they've spilled their blood and their treasure in places like Iraq and Afghanistan, and they currently help us fight terrorism where we find it in the world.

Do you poke your friend in the eye because you're mad? No. This is an important issue that has to be bigger than our political parochial beliefs. It has to be bigger than our congressional districts. This is about America, our future, our allies, and, yes, our national security.

Who better to make sure that those shoulder-fired weapons don't go someplace than us? Who better to make sure that those chemical weapons don't fall in the hands of terrorists who seek to kill innocent men, women and children? Qadhafi has been proven to be a state sponsor of terror. The Pan Am bombing, he killed hundreds. He killed U.S. soldiers in Germany in the eighties, our U.S. soldiers, through an act of terrorism. We know he still has terrorism hit squads. We know it. We can't prove that he's engaged them yet, but we know they exist. Why would we walk away from that threat when we know he's under siege and feeling desperate?

This is the time we should stand with our allies, Madam Speaker. This is the time that we should say, yes, our national security interests are at heart. And, yes, Mr. President, come down and meet your constitutional obligation and show this Congress why we're there, what role we're playing and what it means to our national security.

I would urge a strong rejection of cutting and running in the Kucinich amendment and a strong support of the Speaker of the House's right approach to bring the President to Congress, as he needs to be.

Mr. KUCINICH. Madam Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. MCCLINTOCK), who has been very closely involved in helping construct bipartisan support for H. Con. Res. 51, and I thank him.

Mr. MCCLINTOCK. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I rise in strong support of this resolution. We need to be crystal clear on this. Without prior congressional authorization, under the War Powers Act, the President may only commit Armed Forces to hostilities for 60 days if there is a direct attack upon the United States, its territories or possessions or its Armed Forces.

There was none, so there is no 60-day clock, and the unprovoked attack on Libya—from day one—constituted an illegal and unconstitutional act of the highest significance.

And the question is, What are we going to do about that? If the President felt there was moral justification to attack Libya, he was constitutionally required to make that case to the Congress and to get its authorization. He did not.

Now, the argument we hear against this resolution comes down to this: we're already committed; it's too late for Congress to order a withdrawal without harming America's reputation or undermining its allies. Well, if we take that position, we have just changed the entire Constitution to read as follows: the President may attack any country he wants for any reason that he wants and the Congress has no choice but to follow. That's what they're saying.

The President has crossed a bright constitutional line, and this Congress has a clear moral and constitutional duty to intervene, and only the Kucinich resolution actually does so, short of sending a strong letter to the President.

If we fail to do so, we will have destroyed the work of the American Founders by fundamentally changing the legislative and executive functions on the most momentous decision that our Nation can make, and we will take our country down dark and bloody roads that the American Founders sought to avoid.

Mr. KUCINICH. I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. LYNCH).

Mr. LYNCH. I thank my friend for yielding and for his leadership on this issue.

Madam Speaker, it's a sad irony that at the same time that we're committing our sons and daughters to an armed conflict in Libya in support of democracy and the rule of law, that we are also trampling on the fundamental principles of separation of powers and the plain language of our United States Constitution, which is the supreme rule of law here at home.

The United States Constitution clearly states that the President's power as Commander in Chief—to introduce our Armed Forces into hostilities—may be exercised only pursuant to three circumstances: number one, a declaration of war; number two, a specific statutory authorization; and, number three, a national emergency created by an attack upon the United States. That has not happened.

So despite my great respect and affection for our President, a lawful premise for this Libyan operation does not exist.

In closing, I'd just like to say that I've been to Iraq 13 times and Afghanistan 10 times. I don't meet any of our kids on their first tour of duty anymore. They're all on their third tour of duty or fourth tour of duty.

We are stretched thin, and this was a gratuitous action. We should not be there. There's no lawful basis for the prosecution of this war. So I ask for the support of this resolution.

Mr. KUCINICH. I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. JOHNSON).

Mr. JOHNSON of Illinois. Thank you, Mr. KUCINICH, and thank you Members of the House.

This issue of war and peace and separation of powers transcends partisan politics. A few years ago, together with my good friend, STEVE ISRAEL, I began what's known as the Center Aisle Caucus, which has a large membership now. Our goal is bipartisan solutions to America's challenges, and this bill reflects that approach.

H. Con. Res. 51, on paper, addresses our illegal war in Libya; but, in spirit, it calls into question American presence in the Middle East, and it should command the attention of the national media, if you're listening, and every American citizen.

Today I issue a challenge to an often divided Congress. To my Democratic colleagues, I ask you to candidly acknowledge that war is war, even when a Democratic President initiates, or perpetuates, that war. To my Republican colleagues, I ask you to acknowledge that a sincere and effective attack on our crippling national debt, without defense spending squarely on the table, is indefensible and disingenuous.

To all of my colleagues, I ask you to acknowledge certain realities: one, our global warfare kills American men and women and innocent people all around the world every day.

Two, we cannot impose our standards of democracy, humanitarianism, and culture—as much as we want to—on nations that don't care and resent our self-proclaimed role as judge and jury.

Three, there is little, if any, connection between our actions in Libya and the safety of citizens in St. Louis, Missouri, or Mount Zion, Illinois. We spend almost $700 billion a year on defense, a significant portion of that for three wars.

Three days ago, we voted on the issue of whether to increase our national debt limit to nearly $17 trillion. From President Bush to President Obama, and well before, Presidents have flagrantly and arrogantly violated article I, section 8 of the Constitution, not to mention the War Powers Act.

The Speaker's resolution that we will vote on here in a few moments was strongly worded—and I believe sincerely offered—but it was just that: words. It is not and should not be a cover for any Member of this Chamber to fail to support the Kucinich bill, which puts teeth, real teeth, into congressional prerogatives.

Support the Constitution, support fiscal responsibility, and support peace. Support the Kucinich resolution.

Mr. KUCINICH. I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER).

Mr. NADLER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Madam Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia earlier said that the Kucinich resolution would tie the President's hands. Yes, it would. The whole point of the Constitution is to tie the President's hands. The President, not this particular President, any President, must not have the power to commit this country to war on his own authority without the concurrence of Congress. That is the point of the Constitution.

George Washington said the Constitution vests the power of declaring war in Congress. Therefore, no offensive expedition can be undertaken until they shall have deliberated upon the subject and authorized such a measure.

Abraham Lincoln said they—meaning the Framers—resolved to so frame the Constitution that no one man should hold the power of bringing this oppression—meaning war—upon us. And that's what this really does.

Now, over the last 60 years since World War II, during the Cold War, power has flowed to the President—again, Presidents in general. The exigencies of time when bombers were over the Pole, or we thought bombers were over the Pole, you couldn't call Congress into session. And Congress, in effect, surrendered much power to the Presidency.

Korea was an undeclared war and should not have happened that way.

Vietnam, Congress was fooled. They called the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution the “functional equivalent of a declaration of war” which Congress would not have voted had they known what was in store or what they were voting on, or that it was going to be cited as a declaration of war.

The issue before us is not consultation with Congress; it is not a lack of information to Congress. It's the fact that Congress must act, and that is why the Boehner resolution is beside the point.

Now, in the past, there was a good reason. There was time, there were emergencies. But here, Secretary Gates said there was no threat to the national security of the United States. We had time to negotiate with the Arab League, we had time to go to the U.N., and there was time to go to Congress and ask for an authorization of military war.

The President gave us his reasons for going into Libya. Not everyone agrees with those. But the question is not the wisdom of the war in Libya; it is enforcing the Constitution. And if we pass the Kucinich resolution, the President would have 15 days to come before us and ask us to authorize the use of force, if that is necessary.

Mr. KUCINICH. I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. POE).

Mr. POE of Texas. Madam Speaker, the United States is engaged in a war in the name of humanity. The President's actions did not follow the Constitution. They do not follow the War Powers Resolution. It is an unconstitutional action on the part of the United States.

I served on the bench in Texas for over 20 years trying criminal cases. In our daily business, we followed the law. And the law required that you have a trial. If convicted, the person was sentenced. I never tried a case that a person was so bad we just skipped the trial and we went ahead and sentenced them and then had the trial later to prove it was a good idea. We followed the law. And the same law that required a procedure in a trial that is in the U.S. Constitution, the Constitution also says there is a procedure for going to war. And the procedure is that Congress, not the President, instigates war.

James Madison, a person who wrote the Constitution, said the Constitution supposes what the history of all government demonstrates: that the executive is the branch of power most interested in war and most prone to it. Therefore, with studied care, we have vested the question of war with the legislature. That would be us, Congress. We have not fulfilled our obligation.

The war in Libya violates the Constitution, the War Powers Act. It is not in the national security of the United States. It is said, Well, the French, we may disrespect the French. Well, I say to the French: You respect our Constitution, and our Constitution says that the declaration and going to war is the responsibility of Congress, not any executive.

It has been said that the Constitution may be inconvenient, but it is meant to be, Madam Speaker. War is a serious matter, and Presidents and Congresses should be inconvenienced on the road to war.

Mr. KUCINICH. I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY).

Ms. WOOLSEY. Madam Speaker, the first airstrikes against Libya were launched in March. Now it is June. Seventy-six days after this mission began, Congress still hasn't been given an opportunity to vote for or against a declaration of war.

Every Member of this body, regardless of individual feelings, should demand—demand—that their constitutional authority be respected. The engagement in Libya is lingering without accountability or checks on Presidential power, without a vigorous debate about the consequences of our actions. What is the endgame? What is the timetable? What are the metrics or benchmarks of success?

With the United States already fighting in two theaters, with the human and financial costs of Iraq and Afghanistan mounting every day—$10 billion a month alone in Afghanistan, our military is stretched to its breaking point. We simply cannot take on a third war.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentlewoman has expired.

Mr. KUCINICH. I yield the gentlewoman an additional 15 seconds.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Last week, by an overwhelming majority of 416-5, this body voted to say “no” to boots on the ground in Libya. Today, we must go one step further. We must support H. Con. Res. 51 and end the war in Libya altogether.

Mr. KUCINICH. I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES).

Mr. JONES. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio for introducing this resolution.

It is just so ironic that on May 26, a CNN poll found that the majority of the American people, 55 percent, believe Congress, not the President, should have final authority for deciding whether the United States should continue its military mission in Libya.

Yes, American people, you are exactly right, and that is why we need to support Mr. KUCINICH's resolution.

It has been amazing to me that I have heard so much debate today about NATO's feelings—NATO's feelings. Well, how about the feelings of the American people? How about the people that pay the taxes in this country, how about their feelings? Isn't it time their feelings come first?

That is why I sincerely believe, and I wanted to be on the floor today because—and I thank Mr. BOEHNER, the Speaker of the House, for presenting a resolution, but that does not do it. That does not do it.

The Constitution says that Mr. KUCINICH is right with this resolution. The American people say that he is right with this resolution. The American people are calling on the Congress to meet their constitutional duties and to vote for this resolution.

Madam Speaker, before I close, I want to say again to Mr. KUCINICH, thank you for taking the lead on this. This should actually be the only resolution we are voting on, but let's show the American people that we believe in the Constitution and let's support Mr. KUCINICH's resolution.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I inquire of the amount of time remaining for all of the managers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California has 11 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Ohio has 13¼ minutes remaining. The gentlewoman from Florida has 1½ minutes remaining.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN).

Mr. MORAN. Madam Speaker, this resolution is not as much about Libya as it is about us. Wouldn't it be wonderful if we could control events around the world, determine the way that people see us and always accurately predict the consequences of our actions? But that's not what life is all about. The best we can do is establish the values and the principles that define us individually as citizens and collectively as a Nation.

This resolution is not about whether we should be involved. We are always going to be involved in what is taking place around the world, because we are the world's economic, military and moral superpower. To choose not to act, particularly at a time of such crisis and transformation that is occurring throughout the Arab world, is, in fact, to choose. In this case, it would be to choose to define us as a people who has decided to look the other way, to choose not to hear the cries of desperate help from the Libyan people who have chosen to put their lives on the line in the cause of democracy, of individual liberty and of freedom from oppression.

These are the values that define us as a people and as a Nation. They are the values, frankly, that give hope to a world of repression and despotism that will, in fact, continue to exist and, in fact, will gain strength if we do not stand up, speak out and “have their back” at such a time as this.

That's why we should defeat the Kucinich resolution, because it is really about who we are as a people and whether we still have the courage and the constancy to defend the moral high ground. As long as the rest of the world has to look up, not down and not sideways as this resolution would place us, we will, in fact, be advancing our own security and prosperity and the integrity of our moral force as a Nation of principled people.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BERMAN. I yield the gentleman an additional minute.

Mr. MORAN. We must always bear in mind that we live in a world that wants more than anything to shine as brightly as the beacon of freedom and hope that we represent. We should always bear in mind that we have the privilege of representing and burnishing ever brighter that beacon in a time of crisis when there is clear cost and consequence to our actions. This is when we show the courage and the constancy that must define us. Once again, we are called upon to be equal to our history to the legacy of those who have gone before us.

This may not seem like a terribly critical vote in the scheme of things; but to all of the Libyans who have chosen to put their lives on the line for the values that define us as Americans, it is a big deal. It is everything. It is their lives. It is their hope. It is their future. That's why this resolution should be defeated. Because this is about us and a world that looks to us for its moral leadership.

Mr. KUCINICH. I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Utah (Mr. CHAFFETZ).

Mr. CHAFFETZ. This is a defining moment for us as a people. This is a defining moment for this body. This is a defining moment for the United States Constitution.

With the civil war in North Africa, there is no clear and present danger to the United States of America. Therefore, in acts of war, the President has a constitutional duty and obligation to come to the Congress to seek approval. For the President to suggest that he got approval from the United Nations is offensive, and it's wrong.

No, Mr. President. Authorization to go to war comes from the American people, and it comes from the United States Congress. We must stand tall and true to the Constitution. We have no choice but to vote on this action. This is a defining moment.

What is absent in all this discussion, I'd point out to my colleagues, is I see no resolution to go to war. I don't see a resolution that says this is what we should be doing.

Please vote in favor of this amendment. Stand true and tall for the Constitution. This is a defining moment.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Members are reminded to direct their remarks to the Chair and not to others in the second person.

Mr. KUCINICH. I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL).

Mr. PAUL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I rise in strong support for H. Con. Res. 51. We need to pass this resolution to send a very strong message.

We have been told by those who oppose this message that we should not have an abrupt withdrawal from the region, but I would strongly suggest that what we should be talking about is the abrupt and illegal entry into war. That's what we have to stop. Since we went in abruptly and illegally, we need to abruptly leave.

It has also been said by those who oppose this resolution that they concede that Congress should assume its prerogatives over the war powers but to do it gradually. I would strongly suggest that when we took our oath of office we assumed that radically and suddenly. We took an oath of office to obey the Constitution, not to defer to the United Nations, and that we already have assumed that responsibility.

I would also suggest, if we do nothing, if we do not pass this resolution, it is the sin of omission that we commit.

Mr. KUCINICH. I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE).

Mr. FLAKE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I rise today in support of the Kucinich resolution. I had hoped to be able to support the Boehner resolution. I share the Speaker's concern that a precipitous withdrawal called for by the Kucinich resolution sends a less than optimal signal to our NATO allies.

Yet, while we are on the subject of signals, I am far more concerned about the puzzling, confusing, mystifying signal that we send by passing a resolution that affirms that the President has not fulfilled his constitutional or statutory obligations, yet offers no remedy, only a mild rebuke, followed by a questionnaire.

Madam Speaker, I was here in 2001 when we authorized the use of force to enter Afghanistan. There was just one dissenting vote. When a genuine threat to our national security is perceived, it has been the longstanding practice of Congress to support the administration in its actions. The greater threat today, in my view, is the perpetual acquiescence of this body, in situations such as we face today in Libya, where we tolerate the use of military force when the threat to our national security is less obvious.

Mr. KUCINICH. I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. FRANK).

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Madam Speaker, I think the President erred in not following the War Powers Act in the spirit of the Constitution. He should have asked us. If he had, I would have said "no" then, and I say "no" now.

Let me disagree with those of my colleagues who have talked about what a terrible man Qadhafi is as a reason for the United States to be spending our money there. Yes, he's a thug who ought to be removed, but it cannot be that America has to be the 911 for the world and that we are the ones who have to respond everywhere every time.

I heard one of my colleagues on the other side say, Well, the Europeans are there. Let's not poke them in the eye. Poke them in the eye? We have for years, since the beginning of NATO, been subsidizing them so that they have military budgets less than half of ours as a percentage of their GDP, so that they can do better than us in health care and better in competitiveness and every other way.

Yes, he should be opposed. There are European nations, developed, wealthy nations just across the Mediterranean. Why do they have to have America come nearly 4,000 miles to do it?

And it's not just Libya. This is defining. Are we going to go forward with a situation in which America undertakes to defend everybody in the world everywhere, even when they are not greatly threatened, as is the case with NATO or with missile defenses against non-existent missile threats from Iran, or do we say that we will bear our fair share but not more? We have got to stop subsidizing the rest of the world, particularly now.

And when members from the Appropriations Committee come up and tell us, You've got to go do this, but let's cut police in Massachusetts, let's cut housing in Ohio, let's cut transportation in California, we cannot reduce our deficit in a way that allows us to maintain any concern for the quality of life here if we continue to spend money promiscuously all over the world.

By the way, let's go beyond that. We're not just talking about Libya. What about the paradox of Afghanistan, where we will spend $100 billion a year to be told by the President of Afghanistan that he doesn't like what we're doing. Fine, let him have it. Stop forcing him to take our $100 billion a year.

Mr. KUCINICH. Madam Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SOUTHERLAND).

Mr. SOUTHERLAND. I thank the gentleman from Ohio for yielding me a minute this morning.

Today I think we owe the American people an apology because we all as a House are here to defend and protect the Constitution of the United States and it has been way too long before this debate has been had on this floor.

There is much more at risk today than Libya. What is at risk today is the very Constitution that we have sworn to protect and to uphold. If the Constitution is at risk, then this House is at risk.

When this House is blatantly ignored by another branch, by the President of the United States, then the people are blatantly ignored by the President of the United States and this House will fall.

I applaud those that have sponsored this resolution, and I rise in support of it today.

Mr. BERMAN. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KUCINICH. I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. STARK).

Mr. STARK. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Madam Speaker, I support H. Con. Res. 51, a bipartisan resolution directing the President to remove the United States Armed Forces from Libya within 15 days. I'm proud to support this resolution by Representatives KUCINICH, BURTON, and CAPUANO. It gives Congress, and therefore the American people, the power to decide whether America enters into or continues a war which destroys our economy, which destroys unnecessarily human lives who do not oppose us and are not a threat.

For us to be wantonly killing people around the globe, entering into a war—there's no other question about that—without permission from the American people through this body is unconstitutional, it's wrong, and we should support the Kucinich amendment.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. FORTENBERRY), a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Mr. FORTENBERRY. I thank the gentleman from California, our ranking member on Foreign Affairs, for the time.

Madam Speaker, this is a very tough call, a tough set of circumstances. There is much complexity here with the convergence of war and diplomacy and geopolitics and allied relations.

What is clear, however, is that the President has not communicated effectively with the United States Congress, nor has he sought this body's authorization for the undertaking in Libya.

Let's have a brief history lesson here, though: Some in this body called for unilateral action against Libya just 3 months ago. That was appropriately resisted by this administration until other nations, particularly the British and the French, were willing to put up their own assets and give structure to a NATO coalition.

However, now U.S. actions, in an important allied effort to save Libyan civilians from imminent slaughter, have clearly moved beyond the scope of humanitarian relief and stabilization efforts.

With that said, an abrupt and imminent cut-off of U.S. participation in Libya causes numerous complications and would be highly disruptive. Yet we should not creep, we must not creep toward opening up a third front in Libya, which is the root cause of this debate.

The general framework for intervention without express congressional authorization has precedent and some parallels within the last 30 years. Let's look at Lebanon in 1982, Panama in 1989, Bosnia in 1995, and Kosova in 1999. All of these interventions had various levels of controversy, particularly the one in Lebanon; but they were undertaken by Presidents of the United States.

The Boehner resolution, considered before this one, gives the President a small window of time to better make his case. If the President cannot, Congress can assert its authority and disapprove.

Raising principled questions about war powers is a laudable goal, and I do want to commend the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH) for his leadership in this important debate. It would not have happened without him.

However, I think we should move forward very carefully. Speaker BOEHNER's resolution pushes the President for answers but stops short of requesting congressional authorization or abrupt withdrawal of U.S. participation in the Libya mission. If this approach is unfruitful, we can then exercise further options.

Mr. KUCINICH. Madam Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CAPUANO), who has been a driving force behind this resolution.

Mr. CAPUANO. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Madam Speaker, I am proud to be one of the original cosponsors of this resolution. But I want to be honest, I take no pleasure in this. I'm an early and ardent supporter of the President on most everything. This has nothing to do, in my mind, with the President or, truthfully, even with the action in Libya. For me, this is about the Constitution, plain and simple.

The Constitution is clear. It's not even about the War Powers Act. I personally think the War Powers Act is probably unconstitutional. The Constitution is clear. On many things it's not. It is unequivocally clear that the declaration of war is the responsibility of Congress, period. No gray area there.

Now, I know you can try to fudge on what the definition of war is, but when someone is shooting at someone else, that's war. If it's one person, 10 people, or 10 million, that's war. For me, that's what this is about.

Now, don't get me wrong. I would hesitate strongly—I doubt that I would support the action in Libya. But that's not why I cosponsored this.

And I've had some people say, well, 15 days is unreasonable. Well, okay. Then if this passes, they have 15 days to come back to us and ask us for more time, which I would be inclined to do if that's necessary on a military basis.

□ 1300

What this simply says is that Congress has to stand up on our own two feet and take the actions that we took an oath to take, which is to uphold the Constitution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KUCINICH. I yield the gentleman an additional 30 seconds.

Mr. CAPUANO. Now, I understand that people may see things differently and I respect people that would differ, but I cannot believe that anyone can honestly read the Constitution on this matter in an unclear way.

Congress has the authority to declare war, period. That's why I'm here today. I'm not here to debate today whether we are right or wrong to be in Libya. That will come another day—maybe or maybe not. But I am here to say, uncomfortable as it is, unpleasant as it is, as difficult as it is, it is our responsibility to take action when it comes to declaring war. Every Member of Congress should be voting for this resolution because of that simple fact, and we can have other debates on another day.

Mr. KUCINICH. Madam Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN).

Mr. SHERMAN. Madam Speaker, the author of this resolution is known for his opposition to the use of American military force, and those who agree with him on foreign policy may well vote for this resolution. In contrast, I have voted for every authorization to use military force that has come before this Congress in the last 15 years, and I would support the authorization to use force in Libya if it had the proper conditions and limits.

This resolution would not actually result in the immediate withdrawal; instead, it would force the President to come to this Congress and seek authorization pursuant to law—and would get that authorization, I believe, with the appropriate limits and conditions. That would be an improvement to our foreign policy. More importantly, it would mean we're following the Constitution. The War Powers Act is the law of the land and it requires congressional authorization for military actions that take more than 60 days.

We long for democracy and the rule of law in Libya, but not at the expense of democracy and the rule of law in the United States. If we don't require compliance with the War Powers Act, who will? And if the War Powers Act becomes a dead letter, who will constrain some future President with imperial ambitions?

If your constituents insist that you stand up for the rule of law, don't go back to them next week saying you voted for the Boehner resolution. That Boehner resolution does not mention—let alone enforce—the War Powers Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KUCINICH. I yield the gentleman an additional 30 seconds.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Boehner resolution just grudgingly acquiesces to an imperial vision of the Presidency. The Kucinich resolution enforces the War Powers Act and starts us on the War Powers Act process.

We owe it to our fighting men and women that when they risk their lives, they do so pursuant to our laws and our Constitution. And when they risk their lives for an extended period of time, they do so not because of the decision of one individual but, rather, because of the decision of the representatives of all of the American people.

Mr. BERMAN. Madam Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the ranking member of the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS).

Mr. DICKS. The debate in the House today concerning the extent of U.S. involvement in the military action in Libya, now led by NATO, is a necessary and important debate, and I appreciate the role that DENNIS KUCINICH has played in this.

Both resolutions being considered today recognize the essential role of Congress in authorizing and in funding the use of U.S. Armed Forces consistent with the War Powers act and the Constitution. Both resolutions require the Members of the House to reflect on the appropriateness of the use of military force in this operation, as outlined by the President. And both resolutions initiate the entirely appropriate debate over the objectives of this operation as well as its duration.

In my judgment, the President's initial commitment of U.S. airpower and naval forces to support the international effort was appropriate and certainly within his power as Commander in Chief. The U.S. effort was undertaken in concert with a broad coalition of nations, some of our closest friends, and it followed a resolution adopted in the United Nations Security Council authorizing all necessary measures to protect Libyan civilians attempting to overthrow the oppressive regime of Muammar al Qadhafi. The Qadhafi government's response to the uprising—inspired by the Arab Spring movement—was to use force against civilians and opposition forces, and the brutal measures prompted the international outcry and the U.N. action.

At the time, the President stated clearly that our leadership of the NATO effort would last a matter of days, not weeks. While the direct U.S. leadership of this effort lasted a brief time, U.S. forces remain engaged in the NATO operation; and at this point, it is clear that Members of Congress are not comfortable with the extent of information they have been given about the direction, the duration, or the cost of the operation. Under the War Powers act, the President has an obligation to report to Congress and to seek concurrence if our military involvement extends longer than 60 days, and clearly such consultation has not been effectively accomplished.

We are encouraged by statements from the Obama administration that U.S. ground forces will not be used in Libya. And last week, 416 Members of Congress supported the Conyers amendment to the Defense authorization bill that would prohibit funds in the bill from being used to deploy ground forces in the country.

At issue now is whether Congress should act through the Kucinich resolution to effectively terminate the U.S. involvement in the NATO effort within 2 weeks or whether Congress, through the Boehner resolution, should scold the President for not providing greater detail about specific actions, contributions of other nations to the effort, and the possible involvement of Hezbollah, the Muslim Brotherhood, al Qaeda, and other organizations in and outside the region in providing support to the Libyan Government.

I believe the Kucinich resolution is premature and that it could materially harm our relationship with NATO allies from which we will undoubtedly require support in the future.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BERMAN. I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. DICKS. I believe the Boehner resolution is an attack on the President, something most of the Republican Caucus would vote against if its party was in control of the executive branch.

I do support a wider debate and greater oversight of the use and the cost of U.S. military forces engaged in the Libya operation, both in the Defense and Foreign Affairs-related committees here as well as in the full House. I am neither prepared to end our involvement unilaterally, as in the Kucinich amendment, nor do I believe Congress should officially declare our involvement in this effort that has not been properly explained by the President.

I think the President made a very strong statement to the American people about why we were going to use this for humanitarian reasons. I think the Qadhafi regime is a brutal regime that should be replaced, and I hope that we can accomplish that.

Mr. KUCINICH. Madam Speaker, may I inquire of the Chair how much time remains for all?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio has 3 minutes remaining; the gentleman from California has 45 seconds remaining; and the gentlewoman from Florida has 1½ minutes remaining.

Mr. KUCINICH. I yield myself 1 minute.

Members will be asked to vote on two resolutions, H. Con. Res. 51, and a resolution offered by Speaker BOEHNER, H. Res. 292, both of which address U.S. military involvement in Libya.

I do not believe that H. Res. 292 is at odds with H. Con. Res. 51, but it's not a substitute for the resolution that Mr. BURTON and others have worked on. It's imperative that Members clearly understand this, because the consequence of voting for one—that's the Speaker of the House resolution—and not the other, H. Con. Res. 51, ends up being an endorsement of unconstitutional action that was taken by the White House.

So how does Congress deal with the failure of any President to adhere to the Constitution? If Congress does not challenge a President's dismissal of the clear meaning of article I, section 8, then we will have tacitly endorsed a President's violation of the Constitution and guaranteed the perpetuation of future constitutional transgressions. A mild rebuke alone of the usurpation of a constitutionally mandated war power is insufficient to defend the Constitution.

Many of us want to support our President, but the President has ignored Congress' assertion of the war powers by failing to obey the War Powers Resolution.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, just in closing our time in the debate, I would take up Mr. KUCINICH's comments.

If you think there has been an inappropriate abuse of power here, voting for the Boehner resolution does not cure that. But the Constitution doesn't say the President must come to Congress and get a declaration of war. It says Congress must declare war.

I agree very much with the thinking of my friend, the chairman of the Intelligence Committee, Mr. ROGERS, that there are national security issues involved here as well as humanitarian issues, and that's why I oppose Kucinich. But the notion that the President has to come to Congress when Congress has the authority to address this issue directly through a declaration or through an authorization or a limited authorization is the right way to do it.

I urge a "no" vote on both the Boehner amendment and the Kucinich amendment.

Mr. KUCINICH. I yield myself 1 minute.

There are those who may hesitate to support my resolution because of the supposed negative impact it will have on the NATO mission and on our image in the eyes of our NATO allies.

In the weeks leading up to the war, the administration had time to consult with the Arab League, the United Nations, and the African Union, but apparently had no time to come to this Congress for approval. If our image in the eyes of NATO is a reason to stay in Libya, the administration should not have committed the U.S. to a war of choice without consulting with Congress for an action that was so far outside that which is allowed by the War Powers Resolution.

Far more damaging is a Congress that ends up being more concerned with our image in the eyes of NATO than our fulfillment of our constitutional responsibilities and the continued usurpation of the war power by the executive. Our loyalty to NATO and to our President, regardless of party affiliation, does not trump our loyalty to the United States Constitution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. YODER). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KUCINICH. May I ask the gentlelady, will she be closing?

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Yes, we will use the time to close.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. KUCINICH. I want to thank all Members on both sides of the aisle who have participated in this important constitutional debate.

What does it mean to defend the Constitution? Well, if you know that Congress very clearly has the power to declare war, if you believe the President violated the Constitution in this regard, then you cannot come to any conclusion other than to say that we stand up and defend the Constitution by voting for H. Con. Res. 51.

Let us also defend the Founding Fathers and the doctrine of separation of powers. Let us defend the doctrine of checks and balances. Let us defend the institution of the Congress of the United States. And as we stand here, having taken an oath to defend the Constitution, this, my friends, is our moment to stand up for that oath, to act in defense of the Constitution.

I urge a "yes" vote on H. Con. Res. 51. I ask Members on both sides of the aisle, who I know are ready to step forward in this moment, to join me.

Thank you very much.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to yield the remaining time to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KINZINGER), a member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce and a captain in the U.S. Air Force Reserve.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for 1½ minutes.

Mr. KINZINGER of Illinois. I appreciate the gentlelady for yielding.

Ladies and gentlemen, we are at a moment in time. The Middle East is awakening to freedom. They're seeing the opportunities that lie before them that we have experienced for hundreds of years, and they're begging for freedom.

The greatest disinfectant to terrorism is not necessarily bombs. It's not necessarily armies. It's freedom. This war, this action in Libya, I believe sells itself. I believe it is in the United States' interests and in the interests of freedom-loving people everywhere to support it. But, Mr. President, you need to come to Congress, and you need to say what our interests are there and allow Congress to vote on that, because I believe the action in Libya sells itself.

People all across are begging for this. In 50 years, when boys and girls in school read about the great awakening in the Middle East and the wars and the consternation that we used to have to fight and now you have a bastion of freedom, let us be on the right side of history. Let us be the ones that stood up with people that said, we're going to throw off the reins of terrorism and the reins of dictatorship. This sells itself.

Thank you.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would remind all Members that remarks in debate are properly addressed to the Chair and not to the President.

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H. Res. 292, offered by Representative BOEHNER and H. Con. Res. 51, offered by Representative KUCINICH.

I strongly oppose putting any U.S. forces on the ground in Libya and voted in support of the amendment offered to the 2012 National Defense Authorization Act by Representative CONYERS which prohibited funds from being used for that purpose.

These resolutions are both flawed. I cannot support either of them because they ignore the reasons the U.S. joined NATO operations in Libya and the president's efforts to keep Congress informed, and each fails to recognize the support role American forces now play since we transferred leadership of the mission to NATO.

I disagree with the Boehner Resolution's accusation that the president has failed to provide Congress with a compelling rationale for U.S. military activities in Libya.

On March 21, 2011, President Obama wrote to Congress notifying us of his decision to deploy U.S. forces against the Qaddafi Regime in response to a request from the Arab League. In his letter, President Obama stated that his actions were undertaken to prevent a humanitarian catastrophe and to address a growing threat to international peace and security.

Further, the president fulfilled his pledge to greatly redefine the role of American forces and they now play a non-combat, supporting role comprised of intelligence gathering, logistics, surveillance and search and rescue.

Finally, I oppose the Kucinich resolution's call for an immediate withdrawal of forces from Libya. In his speech last month on North Africa, the president said the U.S. joined the NATO operation in Libya because "we saw the prospect of imminent massacre and we heard the Libyan people's call for help."

Not acting in the face of Qaddafi's threat to show "no mercy" to his people and to go door to door hunting them like rats would have been an abdication of our moral duty as global citizens and would have sent the wrong message to the tyrants of the world.

In his speech on Libya the president said, "To brush aside America's responsibility as a leader—and more profoundly—our responsibilities to our fellow human beings under such circumstances would have been a betrayal of who we are. Some nations may be able to turn a blind eye to atrocities in other countries. The United States of America is different."

Given the convergence of special factors in Libya, I believe the president's decision has been justified.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Con. Res. 51, a bipartisan resolution directing the President, pursuant to section 5(c) of the War Powers Resolution, to remove the United States Armed forces from Libya within 15 days after the adoption of this resolution until Congress is able to review how our Nation should move forward.

With no stated goal, no input from Congress and no end in site, a continuation of our involvement in Libya is unreasonable and unconstitutional. With Congress considering cuts to Medicare, Medicaid and other vital programs, we cannot afford yet another war.

We have now been involved in a war with Libya for over 60 days with no constitutionally required authorization for the use of military force or declaration of war. And we were not attacked. It is time for Congress to reassert its Constitutional war powers authority and end the war in Libya.

I am proud to support this resolution by Representatives KUCINICH, BURTON and CAPUANO that gives Congress, and therefore the American people, the power to decide whether America enters into or continues a war.

I urge my colleagues to follow the will of the American people and support this resolution.

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of President Obama's foray into Libya, I have been a vocal critic of his decisions. Shortly after the United States' bombing campaign began in Libya, I spoke out in opposition, expressing my belief that intervention in Libya is not in the vital national security interest of the United States. I stand behind that belief today. In writings, interviews, and Armed Services Committee hearings, I have made it clear that I believe the President is in violation of the War Powers Resolution. I am proud that my colleagues on both sides of the aisle acted to send a clear message to the President and his Administration that they must take our country to war only when they absolutely must, and then only when they have fulfilled their Constitutional obligations, as defined in the War Powers Resolution.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to both H. Res. 292 and H. Con. Res. 51 which address our ongoing allied efforts in Libya. While I strongly support Congress's continued oversight and debate of the mission in Libya and its effect on our national security, I do not believe that either of the resolutions before us represent the most appropriate approach to this issue.

I recently voted for an amendment to the FY2012 Defense Authorization Act to prohibit the use of American ground troops in Libya as the operation progresses, and I continue to believe this is the right path for America's involvement. However, it is not in the best interest of our national security today, or in the long term, to remove all forces from the effort, including U.S. Air and Naval assets, as H. Con. Res. 51 demands. The ongoing NATO operation is intended to preserve the lives of the Libyan people. By completely removing ourselves from this effort, we weaken our global standing on human rights, risk damage to our relationship with NATO allies, and threaten our national security by putting the stability of the region in jeopardy.

Similarly, while I support the ongoing discussion of our involvement in Libya and feel that the Administration's initial coordination and consultation with Congress could have been improved upon, I find H. Res. 292 unduly critical of the Administration's efforts. Furthermore, this resolution would have no actual impact on Congressional oversight of the President's authority or conduct of operations. Rather, it seems designed to serve a political purpose that does nothing to advance the genuine, substantive discussion we should be having about this issue.

Congress should continue to debate U.S. involvement in the Libyan effort, however we must do so smartly and in a manner that does not undermine our military efforts or global standing. I urge my colleagues to vote against both of these measures.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, today I voted against both House resolutions that are the wrong response to the United States participation in an international coalition to deal with the humanitarian crisis in Libya.

I do not, however, support an open-ended commitment. Additionally, my vote last week for the Conyers amendment to bar all funds from being used to deploy, establish, or maintain a presence of Members of the Armed Services or private security contractors on the ground in Libya makes clear I only support a limited U.S. role.

Too often the greatest powers, including the United States, have failed to act when they could have intervened in a responsible way to stop the slaughter of innocents. In Libya, it was clear that there was a crisis developing and America, with our NATO allies, the Arab League, and the UN Security Council, appropriately provided limited support to rebel forces.

That assistance included a no-fly zone that has undoubtedly saved thousands of lives.

It would have been an unfortunate precedent and undermined key global institutions if we failed to act with such a clear, unified call for intervention.

Inaction would have endangered the recent display of democratic aspirations by so many in the region.

Our failure to act would have emboldened the despots of Syria, Iran, Yemen and others, suggesting there were no consequences for murdering peaceful protesters.

Our primary role in the NATO mission has been to provide operational and logistical support to other countries that have taken the lead on enforcing UN Security Resolution 1973.

The Kucinich resolution is ill-advised, requiring U.S. forces to cease all operational support for the NATO mission in Libya within 15 days. I believe that we must not turn our backs on our allies and more importantly, the innocent civilians in Libya who want the right to choose their own government.

Speaker BOEHNER's resolution, while not calling for an end to U.S. involvement in Libya, is factually inaccurate and attempts to rewrite history.

I will welcome thoughtful legislation acknowledging that the U.S. has chosen to answer the cries of the innocent Libyan people, but makes clear that our commitment to their aspirations of self governance is not open-ended, and which clearly defines our goals and—more importantly—limits.

Mr. WEST. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Con. Res. 51 by my colleague Congressman DENNIS KUCINICH, which directs President Barack Obama to remove the United States Armed Forces from Libya by not later than 15 days after the adoption of this concurrent resolution.

Let me be perfectly blunt—the reason we are here today voting on two resolutions that deal with the President's role and responsibility under the War Powers Resolution is because of President Obama's failure to abide by the law, and our failure to address this issue before day 74.

The War Powers Resolution was enacted into law on November 7, 1973, overriding President Richard Nixon's veto. The law states that the President's powers as Commander in Chief to introduce United States forces into hostilities or imminent hostilities are exercised only pursuant to either (1) a declaration of war; (2) specific statutory authorization; or (3) a national emergency created by an attack on the United States, its territories and possessions, or its forces.

The War Powers Resolution requires the President—in every possible instance—to consult with Congress before introducing American armed forces into hostilities unless there has been a declaration of war or other specific congressional authorization, such as the Congressional Resolution that provided President George W. Bush authority to engage in Operation Iraqi Freedom in 2003.

The War Powers Resolution also requires the President to report to the United States Congress any introduction of forces into hostilities or imminent hostilities, into foreign territory while equipped for combat, or in numbers which substantially enlarge U.S. forces equipped for combat already in a foreign nation. Such a report is required within 48 hours. Once this report is submitted—or required to be submitted—the United States Congress must authorize the use of forces within 60 days, or the forces must be withdrawn within 30 days from the 60 day mark.

Before discussing the current situation the United States finds itself in, it is important for the American people to understand the reasoning behind the passage of the War Powers Resolution in the 1970s.

Article I, Section 8 of the United States Constitution gives the United States Congress the power to declare War, not the President. However, Article II, Section 2 declares that “The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States.” Many Presidents have cited their authority under Article II, Section 2 to defend the United States against attacks, or to take actions in our nation’s national security interest, through military action without a formal declaration of war.

Presidents Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson and Nixon used their authority as Commanders in Chief in order to send American combat “advisors” forces into Vietnam beginning in the late 1950s. By the 1968 Tet Offensive, the United States had over half a million troops on the ground in Vietnam engaged in intense military conflict. Unclear about the American strategy in Vietnam, many Members of Congress became concerned about their eroding authority granted by the Constitution to debate, decide and declare when to involve the United States in a war.

As such, the War Powers Resolution enacted in order to ensure the checks and balances mandated by the United States Constitution would remain intact during times of armed conflict.

On March 19, 2011, U.S. military forces began operations in Libya. Two days later, on March 21, 2011, President Barack Obama informed the United States Congress that Operation Odyssey Dawn was aimed at “assisting an international effort authorized by the United Nations Security Council . . . to prevent a humanitarian catastrophe and address the threat posed to international peace and security.”

To date, President Obama has not provided a clear and defined mission for the United States involvement in Libya. Since the opening hours of military action on March 19, the President has had no clear direction in Libya. President Obama has not defined the mission, defined success, nor defined the end state. Further, the President has still not identified who the so-called rebels are that are receiving millions of dollars of American support in terms of weapons, ammunition, and resources, as well as attacks against Moammar Qaddafi’s forces.

As a 22-year Army combat veteran, I can tell you from experience that successful mission completion is obtained by properly defining the very things I have mentioned, which President Obama has failed to do. As a Member of the United States House of Representatives, I swore an oath to protect and defend American citizens against all enemies, foreign and domestic.

Is Moammar Qaddafi an enemy of the United States—absolutely. But because President Obama has not informed us of whom the rebel forces we are supporting are, how can we be absolutely certain that they will not be an enemy of this country? Quite simply, we cannot because the President has failed to define our strategy.

It has now been 74 days since President Obama informed the United States Congress on the introduction of American forces into Libya as required by the War Powers Resolution. Since March 21, 2011, the United States Congress has not declared war or enacted a specific authorization for the use of force, has not extended the 60-day period required by the War Powers Resolutions, nor is United States Congress physically unable to meet as a result of an attack upon the United States. In fact, United States Congress has met nearly 30 times since March 21, 2011. Therefore, President Obama is in violation of Title 50, Chapter 33 of United States Code—the War Powers Resolution.

Section 5, Paragraph C of the War Powers Resolution states that “at any time that United States Armed Forces are engaged in hostilities outside the territory of the United States, its possessions and territories without a declaration of war or specific statutory authorization, such forces shall be removed by the President if the Congress so directs by Concurrent Resolution.”

The Concurrent Resolution offered by Congressman KUCINICH falls right in line with Section 1544 of the War Powers Resolution, and simply states that pursuant to Section 5c of the War Powers Resolution, the United States Congress directs the President to remove armed forces from Libya within 15 days of enactment.

President Barack Obama is in violation of the law—plain and simple—and he must comply with the law. The very foundation of our Republic lies on the rule of law, and is guarded by a system of checks and balances, and as a Member of the United States Congress, I have a Constitutional obligation to ensure this system is upheld.

I support the Concurrent Resolution offered by Representative KUCINICH.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H. Con. Res. 51, which expresses the sense of Congress that we must withdraw our armed forces from Libya no later than 15 days after H. Con. Res. 51 is adopted. It is the constitutional authority of the Congress to declare war. In my view, the President committed U.S. troops to a hostile environment without Congressional consent. Therefore, I voted for H. Con. Res. 51.

Simply stated, military intervention endangers the lives of our brave men and women in uniform and that of civilians on the ground. And such a heavy responsibility necessitates concurrence by the Congress. Moreover, our Nation’s long term foreign policy cannot be driven by threats of military action in every corner of the world. In order to achieve long-lasting peace and stability, we need to lead by example and look past the sword for solutions. As lessons in Afghanistan and Iraq have taught us, military action alone is not a winning strategy for long-term security and peace. Hearts and minds are not won over by tanks and bombs. Instead, they are won by engaging local populations and offering resources that uplift entire communities.

I commend Representative KUCINICH for bringing this Resolution to the Floor and I am proud to support it. I always have and always will use my vote and my voice to promote a foreign policy aimed at bringing lasting peace and prosperity to fragile, conflict-ridden regions around the globe.

CONGRATULATING KOREAN CULTURAL CENTER

(Mr. DOLD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DOLD. Madam Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the Korean Cultural Center of Chicago on the grand opening of a new cultural center in Wheeling. Because of the hard work and determination of the Korean Cultural Center, its president, Younghee Kang, and her staff, and its board of directors and supporters, we now have a focal point for the Korean-American community in the Chicago area.

The story of the Korean immigrant is an important part of Illinois' history, and we are fortunate to now have a facility that is a repository and exhibition of that story. The new cultural center will add a rich cultural tradition to the village of Wheeling, and will also benefit the neighboring communities. I hope it will also serve to strengthen the important relationship between the United States and the Republic of Korea.

The opening of this new center is the culmination of many years of effort and is a cause for great celebration. Congratulations and best wishes on many years of success.

RESPONSIBILITY TO PROTECT

(Mr. GARAMENDI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GARAMENDI. Madam Speaker, America's intervention in Libya was initially based on the international community's “Responsibility to Protect,” a mandate agreed upon in the wake of the horrific Rwanda genocide. This important international doctrine calls for international intervention in a country where a government is unable or unwilling to protect its civilians, or is actively assaulting and killing inhabitants in that country.

I agree with this doctrine and America's initial response to the Qadhafi threat to wipe out a large segment of the Libyan population. For 3 months, the U.S. and U.N. have engaged in military action. At this time, it is unclear if the mission is any longer one that fulfills the Responsibility to Protect doctrine, or if it has changed into a larger and/or different role. Given the continued military action and the lack of clarity of the U.S. mission's goal, I support House Resolution 292, which requires the administration to provide information on the American military, diplomatic, and humanitarian activities in Libya and seeks clarity on America's objective and strategy to achieve that goal.

YUMA, COLORADO, CELEBRATES 125TH YEAR

(Mr. GARDNER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

MR. GARDNER. Madam Speaker, in the late 1880s, landmen circulated flyers throughout the country about a place in the Republican River Valley with fertile soil and plenty of open land—a place named Yuma, Colorado. By 1886, the town had established itself a school, churches, and a thriving ranching community.

This year Yuma celebrates its 125th year, a community defined by the cycles of Mother Nature and the Ogallala Aquifer, made vibrant by agriculture and energized by businessmen and -women who are constantly looking for new ways to be successful.

A little town on the high plains of Colorado, population just over 3,000 people, Yuma has been home to a U.S. Open PGA champion; an Emmy winner; a National Book Award finalist; a Medal of Honor recipient; professional football players; some of the Nation's leading farmers, ranchers, and business owners; and, yes, even a Member of the United States Congress.

Yuma lies in the heart of Colorado agriculture. Yuma County is often the Nation's leader in corn production. It has weathered the boom and bust of farm prices, hailstorms, drought, and wind. For a small town, it seems like no matter where you go, you find someone who is either from there, lived there, or has family there. In many ways, it is one of the biggest little towns in the Nation.

From its Old Thresher celebration in the fall and the Yuma County Fair to high school sports and academics, it is an incredible place to live, to raise a family, to grow, and to do business. I am proud to call Yuma, Colorado, home. Congratulations on 125 years, and here's to wishing the people of that great town many more years of success.

RAISING THE DEBT CEILING

(Mr. CARNEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

MR. CARNEY. Madam Speaker, this week the Democratic and Republican caucuses met with President Obama to discuss the need to increase the debt ceiling. The President said we need to raise the debt ceiling soon, and I agree. Defaulting on our debt is not an option for a great Nation like ours. No one wants to send the economy into another tailspin. Now is the time to restore fiscal discipline. That is what the American people, the global financial markets, and U.S. creditors expect, and that is why I support the attachment of a strong deficit reduction plan to any increase in the debt ceiling.

Congress should attach a balanced and broad-based budget plan to the debt ceiling increase. The plan should include smart cuts that would total at least $4 trillion over the next 10 years. The budget agreement should also protect important investments in a strong economic future.

We can't delay any longer. We can't pass these tough decisions on to our children and grandchildren. The people we serve sent us here to get this done, and it is time for both sides to do just that.

GET RUNAWAY SPENDING UNDER CONTROL

(Mr. PENCE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

MR. PENCE. Madam Speaker, Americans awoke this morning to the heart-breaking news that unemployment has increased to 9.1 percent. The U.S. economy added only 55,000 jobs in the last month. The American people are understandably concerned. But the numbers don't tell the tale. Beneath those numbers are literally millions of American families who meet this morning's headlines with heartbreak and heartache because the opportunities just aren't there.

The truth is more government, more spending, more regulation, and more taxes of the recent past are stifling our recovery. But nothing is stifling our recovery more than runaway spending in Washington, D.C.

Even as we speak today, Congress and this administration are locked in a debate over increasing the Nation's credit card, increasing the debt ceiling. And let me say from my heart, some people don't see the connection between the debate over debt and red ink and the debate over jobs, but they are related.

If we will take the decisive step to put our fiscal house in order, we will restore confidence in capital markets, and businesses and individuals will invest in ways that will put Americans back to work. There should be no debt ceiling increase without real and meaningful cuts in the way we spend the people's money in the short term and the long term. Get spending under control in Washington, D.C., and we will get this economy moving again.

THE PRESIDENT: WRONG ON ALL COUNTS

(Mr. GOHMERT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

MR. GOHMERT. The Speaker is to be commended for bringing these two bills to the floor. Unfortunately, we have a President who cared more about what the Arab League and the U.N. thought than he did his own elected Congress. We've been kept in the dark about the basis for his decisions, and I voted "no" on our Speaker's bill because he didn't need any more time.

The President should be aware, Madam Speaker, that there are an awful lot of people who are ready to switch their votes and to vote "yes." I would prefer that we not do it through the War Powers. We could do like the Democrats did in '74 and just cut off the spending.

It is ridiculous. He said we'd enforce a no-fly zone. That's it. We wouldn't put ground troops in Libya. He said that NATO was going to take over and that we wouldn't be that involved.

Wrong on all counts.

We know from the rules of the House the President wouldn't lie, but he sure is misrepresenting things.

LIBYA: THE PRESIDENT'S WAR

(Mr. POE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

MR. POE of Texas. Madam Speaker, every Member of this body, every elected official in the United States, every member of our military takes an oath to uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States of America. We do not take an oath to the President of the United States.

The war in Libya is the President's war. The Constitution requires that Congress declare war. The War Powers declaration requires that Congress be authorized and notified if the President leads us into war. This has not occurred. The President's war in the name of humanity, although it may be a good idea in the moral sense and Qadhafi is a rotten person, violates the Constitution of the United States. It violates statutory law that we have passed.

It is incumbent upon this body to stop the war in Libya. That is the President's war and not the war of the people of the United States.

OUR DEFINING MOMENT: RECLAIMING THE U.S. CONSTITUTION

(Mr. KUCINICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. KUCINICH. Madam Speaker, this House has just had a great constitutional debate about the meaning of article I, section 8, where the Founders made it very clear that the war power is placed in the hands of Congress.

This debate that occurred today is not an end. It is a beginning. It is a beginning because we have seen one resolution which derived its presence from a resolution that I put forward on a bipartisan basis. One resolution passed which put the White House on notice that Congress is beginning to take a more appropriate role with respect to the Constitution, and that's a good thing.

But make no mistake that this issue of liberty is not going to go away. With the spending soon approaching $1 billion and with NATO openly talking about the commission of ground troops, we'll be back here another day to consider further what our appropriate constitutional role is.

I want to congratulate Members on both sides of the aisle no matter how you voted. This is our moment to begin to reclaim the Constitution.

PUTTING THE U.S. ECONOMY BACK ON TRACK

(Mr. SCALISE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. SCALISE. Madam Speaker, just today we got the bad news again that the jobless numbers have gone up, that our unemployment numbers have gone up and that much smaller job increases were created than were expected.

I think, as we continue to see unemployment going up over 9 percent—9.1 percent now according to the latest numbers—it is very clear that the President's spending and borrowing agenda has been a dismal failure. Yet the President continues to go down that path.

It is time for the President to start working with the House Republicans, who have sent jobs bill after jobs bill over to the Senate. For whatever reason, the President and the liberals in the Senate don't want to address the ability that we have presented to create jobs.

One real clear example is in our State of Louisiana where we have lost over 13,000 jobs because of the President's policies, where they won't let our people get back to the work of drilling safely for energy in America.

We don't want to get our energy from Brazil or from the Middle Eastern countries, many of whom don't like us and who use the billions we send to them to do us harm. We could keep that money here. We could keep those jobs here. There is a plan to do it. Plan after plan has been sent to the Senate, and for whatever reason, the Senate and the President continue to ignore them. Let's finally get our economy back on track.

THE MANY CHORDS OF MAKING IT IN AMERICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 5, 2011, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON LEE) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Ms. JACKSON LEE of Texas. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

When we finish what sometimes may seem a complicated debate, where both sides can seemingly make sense when we have the time to reflect upon the week's work or the work and philosophies of the different political perspectives in this House, I believe it is very important to communicate with your colleagues, so let me be as clear as I can be.

As I heard my friends on the other side of the aisle, one after one, claim that the Libyan war was the President's war, well, today, on June 3, 2011, the President of the United States happens to be President Obama. Yet if you look at the Constitution of the United States, which provides provisions for the separation of powers, there is a section that articulates that the Congress, irrespective of any Presidential person in place, declares war.

So I would ask my friends on the other side of the aisle: Would they have been as quick to rise to the floor on the Iraq war, which could be called the "Bush war"? or the continued 10-year plus war in Afghanistan the "Bush war"?

When we discuss these issues for the American people, we have to be true to ourselves and the Constitution. There was a reason the Founding Fathers separated out the right to declare war. That reason, of course, was to protect you, the American people. When we send men and women into battle, it should be a deliberative process, but we should also have the right to defend ourselves.

The initial attack in Afghanistan—that was the first act—was in response to the heinous and horrific attack of al Qaeda on the soil of the United States. From my perspective, the immediate response of President Bush was legitimate. The question becomes: What came afterwards? The Congress was never given the chance to declare war. Subsequently, there was a statutory discussion and vote that gave unending opportunities and authority for the war to go on and on and on.

□ 1410

Buried in the Afghanistan decision was the authority to go on and on and on. The sad part about it was that we did not go on in Afghanistan. We distracted our troops and went into a war that saw the large numbers of our soldiers lose their lives in a war that had actually never been declared by the United States of America and the United States Congress.

We have something today in 2011 called the Arab Spring. But I don't think Americans understand that, and they, frankly, believe that we cannot promote democracy everywhere in the world. Policymakers understand the crucialness of what is going on in the Arab area as it relates to the geopolitics, the political structure of the world.

But I know what Americans of goodwill do understand: the slaughter of a people. The slaughter and the misuse of power in Bahrain; the misuse of power in Egypt; the gruesome misuse of power to the extent that a mutilated body of a 13-year-old boy can be dumped in their parents' home in Syria; and, yes, the violence in Libya. Americans understand that and I understand it.

So I applaud the President of the United States for going in in Libya to stop the horrific violence. He went in in coalition with our NATO troops. That same action occurred under President Clinton, going in with NATO, taking the lead in this instance, in the slaughter of Muslims in Kosovo and the horrible wars in Bosnia.

I happened to have been able to go on an initial inaugural mission into Bosnia—the former Yugoslavia—and Croatia, and I walked the streets of Sarajevo and I saw mothers who had not seen their sons for 10 or 12 years and asked us where they were. It was a violent time.

So the Libyan action by the President was an appropriate one. He happens to be a Democratic President. I applaud his action. But the Constitution is not labeled by Democratic or Republican. It has no provisions to exempt if you happen to be a Democrat with a Democratic President. So my values argue for consistency, and that is adhering to the Constitution.

I believe Resolution 292, Mr. BOEHNER's resolution that was crafted in the last 24 hours, was a nice statement about a report. But I don't vote on actions on the floor out of contempt and dislike for anyone.

Let me be very clear. I applaud President Barack Obama for the courage that he has taken in moving forward to establish America's mark as a believer in democracy and justice and encouraging the people in the Arab States to stand up for their rights and to object and reject the oppressiveness of their regimes, and I hope that NATO becomes strategic in what they're doing so that we can be successful.

But if we are going to be true to the Constitution of the United States that is, in fact, part of the document that we hold true, then we must hold any Commander in Chief to the same standard.

The War Powers Resolution asks that the President of the United States come to the Congress within 60 days. The constitutional provision in article II requires that the Congress declare war. One could argue that we have not declared war on Arab States and we've not declared war on Libya. We're at war. We're at war because al Qaeda declares that they are at war with us. So it is a dicey circumstance.

I, instead, voted for the action to occur under the War Powers Resolution that was just occurring today, a vote that we lost, a vote that I would have voted for under President Bush, under President Reagan, under President Carter, and with the opportunity, under President Clinton, as the wars proceeded to a long extent of time.

However, we are dealing now in the backdrop of a failed resolution. But I voted because it is necessary to be consistent as to whether you believe the Constitution and the authority of the Congress and the separation of three branches is a valid one to protect the rights of the American people. And I believe that.

But my message to General Qadhafi is this: If you have any sense of human dignity left, you will stop the murderous attacks on your people. I am sensitive enough to offer my sympathy to you for the loss of your family members because I believe in the value of human life. War is ugly. But every effort of peace that we have made has been one that you've ignored. Every effort that we have made, every step that we have taken toward peace you have ignored. You have arrogantly insisted on the world stage that you're in charge, while your country is in a state of confusion and disaster. You have opened the doors to the confusion and the violence of terrorist cells, al Qaeda and other ne'er-do-wells who desire no good to you or your people. You've allowed groups to, in essence, begin to spark so that the continued frustration of world leaders in trying to bring resolution continues; but, more importantly, the violence of all falls on the backs of innocent women and children, young boys and families in Libya.

I feel a kinship to the Libyan people, as a human being and as someone whose heritage started on the continent of Africa. But the one good thing about America is that we care about all people no matter what background they come from, no matter what country. I know that because I've had the privilege of representing the United States in South and Central America, in Asia, on the continent of Africa, in the Mideast and Europe and other places maybe not mentioned—because we care.

Mr. Qadhafi, I beg of you, as an African who has met with the President of South Africa, who knows that the African Union would like for you to cease and desist this violent attack on your own people, stand down. And I would ask, as I have asked before, leave the country. Let us find the kind of government that might, in fact, move Libya forward. And if your people decide that you should stay, then you should have a reformation and a change not only of mind but of heart. The violence does not get you anywhere and it is both insane and absurd.

So I would hope that as this vote was taken, that it is not in any way, as was evidenced by the discussion in the debate by the Republicans, it is not Mr. Obama's war. He is the President of the United States and the Commander in Chief, and it was a determination to go in to stop the murderous acts of those who were killing innocent people.

Read your early history. The early Founders of this Nation in the Revolutionary War against Great Britain had other countries come to the aid of this little, tiny, baby series of States that called themselves the United States of America. It has been the world order for centuries that big countries or those who are able will go to the aid of those who are not able. And this vote today should not in any way deny the respect that is owed to the President of the United States. This is a vote premised on the Constitution and reflecting the desires of the American people, that we do not live in a dictatorship and that if you're a Member of the United States Congress, come here and do your job.

And our job is defined by the Constitution.

I believe that our duty was partly handled today, and I would encourage our President, as he has done over the stages of the Afghan war and now the continued redeploying in Iraq of our soldiers, and I would add that we are in an engagement of discussion that gives us the roadmap for redeploying or moving toward a resolution in Libya.

I would also join in the debate that I've just made on the question of Libya with the need for the immediate review and designation of time for redeployment of our troops out of Afghanistan, and the President has indicated that he expects that that redeployment will begin in July 2011.

My plea to the President is, as we look at these economic times, when America is crying out for jobs, when the middle class feels splashed and unattended to, when others believe our jobs are not creeping offshore and overseas, but fleeting and flying and literally by way of speed that is faster than sound, it is time now to find the mutual courage to say to the people of Afghanistan that we have provided a duly elected government, a parliament. We have laid down our lives. We have built up the Afghan national security forces, which I was introduced to in the many times that I've been into Afghanistan, all parts, including Kabul and Kandahar and places beyond. I know there are good people there.

So I'd ask the President of the United States to ramp up the redeployment, bring home 50,000, 100,000 troops and begin to let those troops rebuild their lives. Invest in military readiness and preparedness and find a closure to the presence of United States boots on the ground in Afghanistan.

To President Karzai, I ask you to stand up and be counted, to initiate policies that would end the poppy growing and heroin production, to allow girls and boys to go to school, to produce your teachers and lawyers, doctors and scientists, generals, captains and leaders of government. I would ask President Karzai to provide the funding and resources for your Afghan national security forces. I would ask him to weed out the Taliban that is destroying his own people in the mountains of Afghanistan. And, yes, I would ask whether or not it is even possible that all of us could claim the value of peace, and by doing that, it would not be non-courageous to stand up and accept the fact that we have won in Afghanistan and we've won in Iraq, and we thank our soldiers.

And so I'm on the floor today thanking my colleagues because last week we voted 419 votes to declare a National Day of Honor for our returning troops from combat areas, more than we've ever done in any other war, and to celebrate them all over America. So I am not asking for America to leave any battle place with her head held down. Our Vietnam vets, during a very tumultuous time and a war that we disagreed with, should have been welcomed home for their service, for their duty, for the reason that they took up arms—not of their own accord, but because a President called them.

I believe America learned her lesson as she focuses on trying to help our returning combat veterans with jobs and education and health care. We know that we should honor them. So with the amendment that I passed on the floor, 419 votes, I hope the American people will call their Congressperson and thank them, but also ask that that proclamation be declared and that we have a National Day of Honor to welcome our soldiers home from all around the world in combat places.

As we welcome them home, I think it is extremely important to recognize that America has a number of concerns. Those concerns are the tragedies that we face, the horrific loss of life in Joplin, Birmingham, Tuscaloosa, all the flooding that has gone on. People in the United States are suffering.

So what does it mean to raise the debt ceiling? What it means to raise the debt ceiling is not what Americans believe—there they go again, spending, spending, spending. What it actually means is that we're saying to working Americans and middle class Americans, we feel deeply about your inability to pay your mortgage, to pay tuition costs. If you have one or two credit cards with those old interest rates of 19, 20, 21 percent that we've been able to bring down somewhat because of legislation we've passed, we understand that. If you don't have a job, if someone in your life doesn't have a job, we understand that. We understand folks that don't have a job, but they don't have a job, a home, a car, a place to live.

The debt ceiling actually is the ability to pay our bills. It is not the ability to spend and find ways to spend money unnecessarily; it is the ability to create the jobs that America is crying out for. The 9 percent is not a reflection so much of the President of the United States not desiring and working hard to create jobs. Let me remind my colleagues that it was Democrats and the President that helped to, in essence, provide a safety net for the automobile industry. A lot of people complained about that. But we were in the middle of the fight not to pay special interests off; we were in the fight to save the auto industry of the United States of America.

It was the right thing to do. Two big reasons: one, the infrastructure of automobile building was car dealerships across America that had thousands, millions of workers selling American cars. You let that industry collapse, and you would let, in essence, some small town in America literally have no economy. It might have been that the car dealership was the largest business in that small area.

I'll add three. The second is we obligated the industry to pay us back, and we have been paid back. We, the United States taxpayers, have been paid back. And you know what else? They have actually brought jobs back to the United States of America. If I wasn't in this very august place, I would say hallelujah, celebrate, applaud: jobs have been brought back to the United States. Ford, of course, did not take those resources. We applaud them. Some of you are buying some new smart cars by GM. Some of you are buying new smart cars by Chrysler—better gas mileage, got a new attitude.

We gave the American innovative genius the opportunity to survive. We allowed inventiveness to thrive. We built on Henry Ford's genius, and we let it spread around. And as well, as we developed jobs for monies that the taxpayers invested, and we put the right kind of restraint for you to be reinvested.

The debt ceiling means that it allows us, the government, to create jobs for you. You turn the economy and invest back. We then provide the protection for you through jobs or maybe unemployment insurance or maybe Social Security or maybe Medicare, or maybe when you're at your lowest end. When you have lost loved ones in a natural disaster that you cannot comprehend, it is the cause of the Federal Government to be able to pay the bills, to be able to come to a place where there is no fire station, no houses of worship, no hospital, no schools, no homes, for us to come and to be of help.

I don't know how we can abdicate our responsibilities. I don't know how we can frivolously play with raising the debt ceiling. I don't know how Republicans can put on the floor of the House a bill under suspension, which requires a two-thirds vote, to make a joke of helping the people in Joplin, in Alabama, up and down the Mississippi and whatever other disaster may come. How do you make a joke with that? How in essence do you in the face of the frustration of those who have suffered? I have not experienced a tornado, but I have experienced and walked the streets during hurricanes. I have seen in my own town the pain. I have come up to doors and knocked on persons' doors where someone has laid dying because they have just gone through a process where all the lights are out and they're on oxygen. I've seen seniors in homes that cannot be repaired. I've seen people lose items that can never be replaced. And so that is what your Federal Government does. And do you mean to tell me we would make a mockery of raising the debt ceiling so that America can simply pay her bills?

There is a value to reducing the deficit. And might I just say something with all good intention. It is always the person who has got money in their pocket, who's got a wallet full of credit cards that they can pay for, that can smile when you're talking about Social Security and Medicare and has an uncaring spirit. Because it doesn't matter to them. It is the philosophy that has not made this country great, the philosophy of "I've got mine, you get yours."

Young people, I have gotten my college education. I don't care whether you can go to college or not. I don't even care if you get a job. "I've got mine." That's not what this Nation is all about. I will not tell the people of Missouri, Alabama and places around,

"I'm okay in Houston. My house is still functioning, the hurricane season hasn't hit me yet, so I'm not going to worry about your tragedy." Is that America? Is that how we built the greatness of this country? Did we ignore our returning troops coming home from World War II? Or did we say to them, "We're giving you the GI Bill"?

The Democrats gave the second GI Bill. President Truman gave the first. We gave with President Obama the greatest GI Bill in the history of America except the one that was passed by President Truman. We said that we care. We built on the values of a country that always rises to the occasion. And because of that, those people who desire goodness and greatness, they look to the United States of America. I am glad, regardless of whatever faith we believe in, whatever our background is or whoever's our neighbor, that we're a country that cares. And I will tell you just if you follow what your grandmother says, being a good Samaritan will always come back to you. Being kind to someone will always come back to you.

Therefore, I believe that it is imperative that we lift the debt ceiling for America to pay her bills. I am tired of smashing the middle class. I am tired of leaving them on their own. I am tired of them watching jobs go overseas when we have such a brilliant population of innovative, creative, loving people. We overcame some of the hills and valleys in America. We went through the civil rights movement and the era where those who were of a different color suffered under the devastating indignity of segregation. America rose to the occasion. It is not perfect, but we recognize the value of equality of all. You're not relegated to the back of the bus. You're not dismissed from hotels and restaurants. You are open and allowed to travel on America's transportation modes. You even can be accepted into colleges on your own merit and not on quotas. And yes, if you apply for a job, the laws at least protect you, that no matter what your background, that you're given an equal opportunity.

America has traversed some of those difficult valleys. We respect women and a woman's equality. We are able to say that women can be pilots and Presidents and Senators and doctors and heads of organizations and engineers and train conductors and anything a little girl can admire and aspire to be. That's the kind of America that is understanding of the crisis that these people face.

And I'm sorry that the debate on the debt ceiling has been characterized as Democratic and Republican and these are the deficit-cutters and these are the wild-eyed spending-spreers going into the shopping malls of America and grabbing things off shelves. It is important to note that one of the greatest Presidents that we have admired—my little girl used to call him Grandpa—Ronald Reagan asked Congress to lift the debt ceiling in 1983, not because he was a spendthrift but because he understood the responsibility of paying America's bills. And, my friends, I remind you, can we not pay America's bills?

I want to discuss how we do that, how we lift the condition of Americans. We do it like we've done it before. We make it in America. Now I like one part of it that says, We make it in America. Everybody needs to have a chance to make it in America. The young people that are graduating in 2011 should have the right to make it in America. By the way, might I just say, congratulations to all of the graduates across America. From the preschooler that's going to kindergarten, to the elementary child that puts on the robe and is inspired, to the middle school and to the high school graduates of whom I will go home to this weekend and greet any number of high school graduates in my constituency who are making that first leap of faith, to the college graduates who are feeling so empowered to graduate in such a great Nation, to those who are getting graduate degrees, our new lawyers and doctors and business persons, our physicists and chemists and biologists, the geniuses that will go into the laboratories of America.

Congratulations to all of you.

That is why I believe it is important to make it in America. The Democrats have launched a major initiative. I wish we could get our friends to join us in a real jobs bill, of which the President of the United States has committed to introducing a real jobs bill, to make it in America. Many of us in our hearings will ask the witnesses that represent the United States Government, we want you to buy America and make it in America. And I'm not an isolationist. I believe America has been enormously generous in buying goods from other countries, proud of them. We're glad to help developing nations. We're glad to support microcredits and the Overseas Private Investment Corporation that allows investments overseas, but we don't want our jobs to be taken overseas. I don't want to see teenagers with double-digit unemployment, particularly in the African American community. I don't want rural communities to suffer because of the lack of employment. I dread this coming summer when there's no money for summer jobs for young people who are trying to save for going into school in the fall. Sometimes the only resources a family has may be the summer job of a teenager. But we have always encouraged teenagers to learn how to work in the decorum of the workplace. Just look what we're doing now.

For that very reason, can I give a challenge to this Nation, can I give a challenge to the businesses, can I give a challenge to corporate America: Bring some young people, maybe unpaid, to be able to be interns.

City governments, maybe unpaid, bring some young people into your offices. Teach them something else but hanging out on the streets. Let them see an adult role model working. But we might not have to have that kind of plea if we could make it in America again.

In the 18th Congressional District in Texas and all around America, we're going to be honoring the individuals who have manufacturing businesses. I would ask you, colleagues, to go and shake the hand of a manufacturer who's making something, who's struggling to keep the doors open, who's making a widget or a gadget. That's what we're talking about.

Solar panels. Wouldn't it be a shock if we went across America and began to make our own solar panels, our windmills of course, that create wind energy. Unfortunately, I hate to tell you that that equipment, that kind of technology we get from overseas. If I wasn't on the floor of the House, I would hold my head down.

When has America needed to depend on someone else, something that was their idea or that they could make better? Again, as I said, I don't mind being part of the world family, where we share and we buy items and we help develop economies, but not to the point where all our jobs, like I said, are taking wings and flying away. What kind of America is that for our young people that are graduating in 2011?

So I want us to focus on building buses, building submarines, and major aircraft carriers, building bridges, freeways, improving dams, building the rails, or the trains for high-speed rail, of which I am an avid supporter, and requires an investment in this country to be able to be fiscally conservative as well as to ensure that we use our energy resources right.

To have an energy policy as well that speaks about all of the energy resources, to do them effectively, as the President has articulated; and to make sure that if we are using fossil fuels, whether it's oil or gas, that we are doing it here in the United States and that we are in fact doing it safely and securely.

That we appreciate wind and we make the equipment or the kind of technology right here in the United States. Solar, that we make all of our panels. Natural gas, that we do it safely and securely, and that we create jobs that way. That we bring down the cost of energy. That we stop calling upon the American people to take $5 out of their pocket and put a few ounces, if you will, of gas in their car.

That we begin to recognize the pain of America, and the way that we recognize the pain of America is that we begin to go aggressively toward the American people with solutions. And the demagoguery of raising the debt ceiling, and I'm not going to vote on it unless you burden it down with draconian cuts that will end Medicare as we know it on all seniors, eliminate Social Security, destroy Medicaid and throw it to the winds so that disabled children suffering from autism or those who have other diseases cannot be taken care of, that's not the America that has made us so great.

It is one that pulls up our pants and puts on our shoes, pulls up our skirts and gets empowered by the joy of work and helping others. And when we did that, we were able to invest in this Nation.

I will not vote on a debt ceiling increase that destroys Medicare as we know it. And I will not vote on a debt ceiling increase that destroys Social Security, or Medicaid, or violates the premise that this country owes a debt of gratitude to veterans and returning soldiers. That's what my friends on the other side of the aisle are trying to sell the American people, a bill of goods. A bill of goods that the philosophy that is anti to President Reagan, who asked for the increase in the debt ceiling himself, that we cannot count and speak at the same time. I believe America is greater than that.

We can bring down the debt with a very meticulous plan over a period of time, the same way you save for college or plan to bring down your debt, or stop using credit cards. We can do that. But at the same time, we can pay America's bills. And we cannot leave one American alongside of the road, languishing and reaching out for help, and we say there is no room at the inn.

Where is the America that is a Good Samaritan? Where is America that sent young men to war, World War II, and if you talk to any of that generation they say, I didn't know all the facts, but I was glad to be part of what America was standing for, helping those who were languishing alongside the road.

We have had any number of conflicts, and some that I have agreed or disagreed with; but the premise was, whether we had the agreement of the American people on the premise of that conflict, it was to help someone along the road.

I am now calling in a clarion cry for Americans to help America. I am calling on this Congress for this Congress to help America. I am calling on the President, as a friend of the American people, to help America. And to do that, whatever is heard that will now come behind me, and disjangled chords will sound attractive, and it will be about who is going to burden our grandchildren and the long-term debt, but it will not be infused with values by many of our faiths.

Those of us of a Christian faith and many other faiths have an element of the document under which they worship that talks about the Good Samaritan and charity and love. And albeit that you are asking why on the floor of the House, it is because the infusion of those tenets were part of the design of this Nation when we organized around the concept of forming a more perfect Union. And when the Declaration of Independence said that we seek to pursue happiness, we hold these truths self-evident that all of us are created equal, we don't abandon that just because it happens to be June 3, 2011. We are able to keep those values, and those values have kept this country on a straight and productive path.

All the noise that comes sometimes in a confused sound to the ears of the American people, if as Members of Congress we can declare our commitment to helping the American people and keeping the values of the American people in place, and that of our faith, that is to help, to love, and to present charity to those who are in need, there is no limit to the greatness of America. And there is no limit to the restoration of making it in America, both in terms of our success and survival, and then in terms of making things that we need and putting America back to work.

Madam Speaker, I am grateful for being yielded this time by the Speaker of the House, and I am grateful for the opportunity to live in a Nation where disagreement does not result, in this century and even in the past century, of taking up arms against each other. I am grateful that maybe in the debate that we have on the floor of the House at some point my colleagues can hear not disjunctured sounds of discord and disrespect and dislike, but they can actually hear the chords of reason, my friends, that to pay for our bills as you pay for yours, we must do the right thing: raise the debt ceiling, and to be able to preserve Medicare as we know it, and not to destroy it as it is being destroyed by the budget proposals of the Republican Party.

It is necessary, if you will, to be able to come together and to listen in one voice, finally, that we act to help America.

With that, Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

HEALTH CARE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 5, 2011, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BURGESS) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. BURGESS. This afternoon, the Congressional Health Care Caucus wants to talk a little bit about the future of the government's role in health care in this country.

I recognize, for those of you studying your Constitution as of this very moment, you don't find the government's role for controlling health care in this country, but we will do our best to help you understand why we are where we are and perhaps where we are going with some of the Federal programs that are run by the Federal Government. Again, the Congressional Health Care Caucus, the Web site healthcaucus.org.

This hour, I am grateful to the leadership of the Republican Party for the use of this hour. I and my cochair, Mr. G.T. THOMPSON from Pennsylvania, will be leading the discussion.

We have had a lot of talk over the past 4 weeks about the future of Medicare in this country. Certainly, if you look at the three plans that are on the table right now—and I understand you may be scratching your head and saying, Wait a minute. I thought there was only one plan out there. I thought there was only the Republican plan. But the Medicare Trustees Report that was issued some 2, 2½ weeks ago, came forward and articulated how the Medicare trust fund would be exhausted in the year 2023 or 2024. This is a significant fact that right now this Congress and the White House are trying to ignore, but it can't be ignored, and that's why the responsible Republican budget passed in April would deal with this fact.

One plan would be to continue on the current course and make no change at all, and that is what the trustees' report articulated. The trust fund is exhausted by 2023 or 2024. That means, then, all funds to pay for part A, part B, and part D of Medicare, hospitalizations, physician payments, and pharmaceutical payments would all come from the Federal Treasury. The trust fund would be depleted at that point.

What are the implications for that? As we sit here even now and talk about things like expansion of the debt limit, the implications are that all of the funding for Medicare for the hospitalizations, for the physicians part, for the pharmaceutical part, all of the funding would come strictly out of the general revenues, that part that is paid by the taxpayers every year.

Are there things that could be done under the trustees' report to prevent this from happening? There are. And one of those things would be to raise the tax on the payroll tax that is paid by individuals for their Medicare. All of us pay a 1.2 percent tax. The employer matches with a similar amount, so that comes out of our paychecks every 2 weeks or every month. However we are paid, there would be a way to increase that tax to perhaps sustain Medicare farther into the future.

But I must remind the Speaker that this law, which was signed by the President in March of 2010, the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, already had a Medicare tax increase included therein. So there is a .9 percent Medicare payroll tax that is included in the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, which leaves us very little room to maneuver unless the payroll tax goes up even further.

Many people argue that the payroll taxes are some of the least progressive and most regressive taxes in this country because they are administered across the board without regard to income, so this is a potential problem. It is one that perhaps could have been solved with a payroll tax increase, but that payroll tax increase has already occurred. You say, well, but okay, if there is a payroll tax increase in the Medicare trust fund, that's good news, because that means that Medicare goes on farther.

Unfortunately, under this law, the money that is taxed on the payroll, collected by the Medicare trust fund, makes a very short stop in the Medicare trust fund and then goes to fund a very different program, a program that, in fact, does not exist today but will start in 2014, a program of subsidies for entitlement for people to purchase private health insurance in the non-Medicare years in what are called the State exchanges.

So the money goes from the Medicare trust fund to fund a new entitlement. That money will have to be paid back to the Medicare trust fund, make no mistake about it. It is money that we are borrowing from ourselves, but it is not money that is there to save Medicare today.

But as the administration argues that, hey, within the Affordable Care Act we have already done some things to sustain Medicare into the future, nothing could be further from the truth. In fact, they have probably poured gasoline on the fire that was already in existence.

One of the other things the trustees' report suggested was that benefits could be cut in the future. And I dare say that if nothing else happens and we get to the point where the trust fund is exhausted, those benefit cuts will be enacted not by this Congress, not by the next Congress, but by some Congress in the future, because of the intergenerational strife that will occur because of the inability to keep pace with the problems that were made by generations before, with generations yet to come. The unfunded liabilities in the Medicare trust fund will soon begin to outstrip every other activity of the Federal Government. That is, there will be no money left for defense, no money left for transportation, no money left for education. All of it will go into health care in some way, shape, or form.

Well, did the President have a plan for sustaining Medicare? Well, yes. You heard about the tax that he already enacted in the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, but that may not have been so helpful. In fact, that may have been more detrimental.

What other things has the President put out there on the table as a plan for saving Medicare?

Now, bear in mind, there is no Presidential plan to save Medicare. We have encouraged the White House to provide us with such a framework. We would like to see such a framework. They could send it over to the Congressional Budget Office and have it scored, have it compared to Republican proposals that are out there, but this ask has not yet been honored. So, as a consequence, what we are left with are the bits and pieces that the White House has articulated, the administration has articulated: Here is our plan for Medicare.

One of the big plans they have for Medicare is contained within the pages of the compilation of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, on page 423, where it talks about a new board that is created that is going to administer Medicare costs. This is the Independent Payment Advisory Board.

Who will these individuals be? Well, they will be 15 in number. They will be nominated by the President. They will be confirmed by the Senate. They are to be made up of academics, of people who have worked in government, people who have expertise in health finance and economics and actuarial science, health facility management, health plans, and integrated delivery systems. And way, way down at the bottom of the page, yes, you might get a doctor or nurse on that board as well. Fifteen people that are paid by the government to do nothing but identify cuts in the Medicare system. Well, perhaps that's a good thing. Perhaps that's something that's necessary.

Now, look, I am a Member of the United States Congress. The Speaker is a Member of the United States Congress. We are the people's House. It is our job to deal with the people's money, to tax the people, to raise the money, to spend the money and be good stewards of the people's money. It is not our job to hand off that obligation to the executive branch or, worse yet, to a board that is appointed by the executive branch and is accountable to no one. It is not our job to do that. It is our job to have the oversight over the Federal agencies and boards so that we can ensure that things are done properly with the people's money.

In this case, the Independent Payment Advisory Board will be just that. It will be absolutely independent of the legislative branch. Once an action is taken by the Independent Payment Advisory Board, it becomes very, very difficult for Congress to impact the decisions that are thereby made.

Now, true enough, their job is to deliver back to the House and the Senate their recommendations for cuts in the Medicare system, and it's very detailed in here on those pages as to just how much they are required to cut. It's very detailed as to the procedure for bringing those cuts to the House and the Senate and which committees they go to for evaluation.

But here's the deal. At the end of the day, Congress either votes up or down on this menu of cuts that's provided by the Independent Payment Advisory Board. And, yes, we can vote "no." Yes, we can turn down the recommendation of the Independent Payment Advisory Board.

What happens then? According to statute, we are not finished. Congress then is required to produce the same level of cuts that was recommended by the board, maybe taking it from different places. But still the same amount of money has to come out of the same Federal program, that is, the Medicare program.

Well, what if Congress gets together and says, "We don't like what the board has delivered to us. We're going to produce a different menu of cuts"? But then, wouldn't you know it; Congress can't agree on what those cuts should be.

I know, I know, Madam Speaker, you'll find that hard to believe that Congress could ever get to a point where it didn't agree with itself on very much, but it could happen at some point in the future that things could be so contentious in Washington and so contentious in the House and the Senate that we couldn't agree with each other on what those cuts would be. Well, what happens then?

What happens then is the cuts recommended by the Independent Payment Advisory Board are, in fact, delivered to the Secretary of Health and Human Services; and that person, whoever he or she may be, the following April, will enact those cuts. There is no getting away once those cuts are recommended. Again, they are dictated in statute. Once they are recommended, they are going to be enacted. There is almost no way around that.

We've got kind of a similar situation today with a different formula that deals with only part B. That's only the part that reimburses physicians. It's called the sustainable growth rate formula. It is a very complex set of figures and numbers that deals with some Federal targets, that deals with conversion factors, and that deals with update adjustment factors. But suffice it to say that it requires a reduction in reimbursement for patients' visits to doctors, and it does this every year.

Now, Congress, historically, has come in at the last minute and rolled those cuts back and said that we won't enact those cuts. The problem is, with the formula as written, every year that we come in and say, "okay, doctors and patients, we're not going to actually cut reimbursement rates this year," that aggregate number that should have been cut is added to the sum that ultimately must be cut.

So, right now, we are existing on a gift, if you will, done in the lame-duck session of the last Congress where the cuts in Medicare were given a 13-month reprieve. But, if Congress doesn't act by December or January, December of this year or January of 2012, an almost 30 percent cut goes to physicians who practice in the part B part of Medicare.

Now, I know you can say, well, doctors probably make too much money anyway and the government needs to save money, so what could that hurt? Where that hurts is that doctors are having a tough enough time keeping up with their expenses. When we cut them 30 percent, the nurse that works in the front office or the company that delivers the electricity that keeps the lights on in their practice doesn't say, "Gee, Doc. We know you're having a tough time and the government cut your reimbursement, so we're going to give you a break on your electricity bill." That does not happen. The good people in the municipality that allow the doctor to practice don't come up and say, "Doctor, we know this is tough on you. We're going to give you a 30 percent reduction in your school taxes this year on your business property." That does not happen. Those fixed overhead expenses occur, and the Federal reimbursement rate for Medicare in the part B program reduces year over year. That is why you have doctors leaving the Medicare program.

As a consequence, that is why you have people who are entering the Medicare program, turning 65 or older, who move to a new location, call up a doctor's office and say, "I need to be seen for my whatever," and the answer is, "We are not taking new Medicare patients."

That unfortunate reality is hitting people today. The Independent Payment Advisory Board is theoretical. That's in the future. The SGR is the "here and now" that Congress is dealing with even this year.

Now, I'm very fortunate to have been joined by my counterpart on the Congressional Health Care Caucus. Again, healthcare.org is the Web site.

GLENN THOMPSON from Pennsylvania, thank you for being with us this afternoon. Let me yield to you such time as you might consume.

Mr. THOMPSON of Pennsylvania. I thank my good friend, Dr. BURGESS from Texas, for yielding and also for being able to work with him in terms of our Congressional Health Care Caucus. We cover the health care industry from both important aspects—you as a physician and all of your experience specifically in the medical field.

My background came up through therapy. Most of my almost 30 years of working in nonprofit community health care was really on the administration side; some as a therapist, but largely in administering programs in hospitals, in comprehensive rehab centers, and nursing homes. I was licensed as a nursing home administrator towards the end of my career there. And, frankly, I dealt very, very closely with Medicare out of necessity because Medicare is, on the in-patient side, at least 60 percent in terms of market share, in terms of payment. So Medicare is very important.

I have to say to my good friend, I was pretty naive when I came to Washington in January 2009. That's when I was sworn in. I won election in 2008. I thought everybody knew that one of the impending crises had to do with the insolvency and the eventual bankruptcy of the Medicare program, only to get here and find out that that was not on the agenda under the previous leadership. And, frankly, it has emerged because it is a truth.

When you look at the situation today with the Medicare system, Medicare is in jeopardy. And what we're trying to do, what the Republicans are trying to do, is to save Medicare. The thing that would hurt Medicare the most is to do nothing, to further kick that can down the road.

Just by coincidence, I was off the Hill and stopped by, and I picked up a prescription earlier today. The only prescription to save Medicare is a Republican prescription. I have to tell you, on the Democratic side, they're just willing to pull the plug and let it die, because if you don't make changes to the Medicare program, that's exactly what happens. And that's not political rhetoric. That's coming from some pretty credible sources that you talked about.

Last Friday, the Medicare trustees' report confirmed that the Medicare program is already contributing to the Federal deficit and will continue to do so for the next decade and that, since 2008, the program has run a cash flow deficit. That's a fact that has been largely ignored in Washington. Still there are those of our colleagues who choose to pretend it's not true, but it is the truth. In fact, in 2011, it exceeds $32 billion. That's a program that, if we don't make the necessary reforms to save, will go bankrupt.

And what an injustice that will be for all of us, all the people across this Nation who have paid into that program, who are looking forward to hitting those retirement years to be able to access and utilize that benefit. If we allow it to go insolvent, if we don't reform it, if we don't save it, it goes bankrupt.

The only thing keeping the program afloat financially, really, is the sale of Treasury bonds in the Medicare trust fund. And when those bonds are cashed, that increases the deficit.

The President's plan, I guess, is to let it go insolvent, because I read today he's restated he doesn't want to do anything about Medicare, leave Medicare alone, which essentially says let's let it go bankrupt, and let's let it go away.

In fact, the measures—and you did a great job of, I think, talking about one in particular, the Independent Payment Advisory Board, which essentially takes the decision-making out of the hands of those of us who are accountable, of those of us who are elected every 2 years to make decisions about Medicare. Those decisions will not be about what benefits to expand in this financial situation. This will be about where to make cuts, where to ration care.

The Federal Government already does that. Under part B, if you are in a nursing home and you need to receive rehabilitation therapy, the Federal Government has already put a cap on how much therapy that you're able to receive. It has nothing to do with what your need is. It has to do with how many dollars have been spent. So if Americans think the Federal Government would not do rationing, it already happens. It already happens.

You talked about the board. What the President has done, I think, in his plan, which really is going to pull the plug on Medicare, a program that is already financially insolvent and challenged, is cut $575 billion from the Medicare program to fund his health care initiative. He cuts over $200 billion for Medicare Advantage and forces over 7 million seniors out of their current Medicare plans. The projection from the CMS actuary—this is the person who is responsible for really crunching the numbers for the Medicare agency—Richard Foster, in April 22, 2010, said that 15 percent of hospitals, nursing homes and home health will close because Medicare pays less under ObamaCare.

We have an opportunity here to do the right thing and to reform Medicare and to save Medicare. The President has an obligation to do that. Under the Medicare trust fund—and what a lot of folks don't know—is there is a requirement, a statutory requirement, that at whatever point the Medicare trust fund reaches a 45 percent level for more than 2 years, the President is required—is required—to put forth a plan essentially to save Medicare, to be able to address Medicare.

We are way past that trigger, and President Obama knows that. I assume he knows it. It's part of his job. So he has chosen to ignore his responsibilities to really put a plan forward. In fact, when we were at the White House just earlier this week, the President said that he was not going to put a plan forward for dealing with Medicare.

He was going to just not take the leadership on that issue. We have, and I am very pleased with the plan we have put forward. It has to do with putting premium supports. Our plan would direct Medicare to go out and to bid out for many different vendors health care plans that seniors could then shop through. Medicare sets the standards, and these companies that would put these products forward would have to meet Medicare requirements. It is not a new concept. It is what we do under Medicare part D today, and Medicare part D is probably one of the few government programs which has actually come in under budget. Most government programs come in way over budget, but Medicare part D has come in under budget. It also will put an emphasis on prevention and wellness. We are keeping people well. That is what we need to do. Obviously, that is the best thing for individuals, for folks to remain as healthy as possible.

We are not talking about voucher programs. We are not talking about privatizing Medicare. Those are concepts. That is just not true when people claim that we are. We are talking about providing people the choice of quality products that meet minimum standards and that the Medicare agency will ensure are there, because they are the ones who will bid this out and manage the process.

Then we're going to provide premium supports that allow our seniors—and we're talking about just impacting people that are younger than 55 years of age. If you are 55 years or older, there won't be any change. Although, I have bumped into a few who wonder why they can't have this opportunity. They think that it sounds like a really good thing. We are holding those harmless aged 55 and older. I think it is important that we have this debate, and it is a debate that brings forward all of the facts and the realities of what we are talking about.

We are talking about doing something that will improve Medicare, just like Medicare part C, which is Medicare Advantage. It has been shown that seniors on that, because of the emphasis on prevention and wellness, have been hospitalized for fewer days and smaller length of stays, which has saved money in the long run. So we are talking about a positive investment in the health care of our seniors, in saving the country money and, frankly, in saving Medicare.

So I appreciate the opportunity to join my good friend from Texas. This is a conversation that I think is going to be very important that we continue throughout the rest of the spring and well into the summer.

Mr. BURGESS. Well said, because that is exactly the point of this exercise this afternoon. These are difficult concepts. They are very easy to demagogue; they are very easy to demagogue against the Republican plan. The President himself may choose to do this. Certainly the Democratic leadership in this House has chosen to do that. They do that in the absence of putting forward their own plan.

But let's be realistic. We talk about things like premium support. Now, in the 1990s, I'm just a regular guy practicing OB-GYN in Texas, and President Clinton recognizes that Medicare is going to be headed for difficulty in a few years. He convenes a big commission, the bipartisan Medicare commission that is going to save Medicare.

Senator Frist, who at the time was relatively new in the Senate, was a heart surgeon from Tennessee. At that time, he was recognized as one of the thought leaders and forward thinking in health care reform. So Senator Frist was on that commission. Senator Breaux from Louisiana, a well-respected conservative Democrat, was on the commission; Bill Thomas, who subsequently became chairman of the Ways and Means Committee in the House, was on the commission. The Breaux-Frist Commission came up with a series of recommendations to the Clinton administration on how to sustain Medicare into the future.

The Breaux-Frist Commission had a number of recommendations, but the centerpiece of what they recommended to President Clinton was this concept of premium support. It was not necessarily new with them. It had previously been described by the Brookings Institute, certainly not a conservative think tank, probably regarded more as a moderate to somewhat left of center think tank, but the Brookings Institute had come up with the concept of premium support. People liked to try to describe what the Republican budget produced as a voucher system. That is, in fact, incorrect.

I will tell you, I was a little bit surprised that members of the administration, when the Republican conference was called down to the White House earlier this week and had a discussion with the administration, required some instruction as to what premium support actually was and what the history of premium support actually represented: that it was in fact developed by a moderate think tank, that it was embraced by a centrist to center left Democratic administration in the Clinton administration, and that the Clinton administration essentially took this idea, evaluated it and put it on the shelf and said we are not going to consider it because there were too many special interest groups on the left who did not like the concept of Medicare moving away from central Federal control.

But what premium support represents is, in this case a purchaser, in this case the United States Government, going out and negotiating with insurers, saying we have a bank of patients that is going to require care, i.e., our seniors on Medicare, and this is the type of claims history they have had for the last several years, and we would like to see if you would be interested in developing a proposal for what you can do for our patients.

So it is essentially a request for proposals that goes out from the Federal Government—yes, to private health insurance companies, some for-profit, some not-for-profit. The only requirement is that they be able to show that they can take care of the patients where the government needs help with its seniors and produce a product that is going to be cost effective and is going to deliver quality care to the patients.

A voucher system—and, again, I was somewhat startled that members of the administration required instruction in this regard. A voucher system would be essentially giving a check to someone and saying: Go out and negotiate and cut your best deal with an insurance company. A premium support system is the government going out, negotiating with the insurance companies and then saying: Come to us with your best proposals for taking care of Medicare patients.

Some people would say: That is preposterous. That would never work. Congressman THOMPSON, you were not here when Medicare part D was passed. I was. Part D was built on that premise. It was let's see if there is an interest out there in providing a prescription drug benefit for seniors. Since we were criticized that no one in their right mind would provide such insurance for seniors, we had a fallback position.

It was a Medicare prescription drug program exclusively, not one run through a private intermediary. The fear was there would be parts of the country that no insurance company would show up to make a proposal. What we got was, indeed, a surprise. After being criticized for several months that no one was going to show up to participate, we were criticized by the other side because people said there are too many plans out there from which seniors have to choose. In the State of Texas, there were 45 plans available subscribing at different rates. You could pick the one that most consistently met your needs for a prescription drug program. But it really was a pleasant surprise.

Because of the competition between so many plans, the prices were vastly under what had been projected by both the Congressional Budget Office and the Office of Management and Budget, and one of those few programs that came in on time and under budget where the satisfaction rate is in excess of 94 percent. Very few seniors today would be willing to give up their part D coverage under the Medicare prescription drug program.

Yes, it has had some bumps and bruises along the way, but a lot has been learned in the process. Now the concept of premium support is much more developed in 2011 than it was in 2003 when the Medicare Modernization Act passed.

So premium support—and again, I was surprised that members of the administration required sort of remedial learning on this. But at the end of the morning, I hope they understood better that it is not necessary to demagogue against the Republican plan because, after all, it is a reasonable plan that has been tested with Medicare part D satisfaction rates high and the cost of delivering the care under what was projected. Why in the world wouldn't we draw on that worthwhile experience?

Now, what do you do about someone who is between the ages of 55 and the end of their life? What do you do with someone who has reached that point where they have basically made all of their assumptions and plans based around what the government promised they were going to do? For that individual aged 55 or older, nothing changes. I happen to fall into that age group. As Mr. THOMPSON alluded to, I would happily opt into the group that is going to have choices because I would rather have choices than a prescribed benefit.

Nevertheless, those individuals who are 55 and older will see no change, the thought being that they have already structured their lives and their retirements based on the fact that this promise had been made. For individuals who are younger than that, when there is still time to make some adjustments in your post-work years, your retirement years, there will be a different program.

Now you ask: For people who are 54 years of age and younger, is that fair to do this?

Well, I think both Mr. THOMPSON and I have articulated what "fair" will look like if you don't do something. What "fair" will look like if you don't do something is either vastly restricted benefits, as has been recommended by the Medicare trustees, vastly restricted benefits as dictated by the Independent Payment Advisory Board, or perhaps no Medicare program at all. After all, the makeup of the voting public in 10- to 15-years' time is going to be different than what it is today, and the makeup of the voting population in 10- to 15-years' time may feel significantly different about paying 60, 65, 70, 75 percent of their paychecks in order to continue benefits that were promised by a Congress 60 years before.

This type of intergenerational anxiety is just around the corner, and if we don't deal with it head on, if we don't take it as a serious responsibility, then it, indeed, could set the stage for some significant strife down the road between today's children and tomorrow's grandparents. That is why it is so important that we address this situation today.

G.T., I have said what I had intended to say today. If you have any additional comments or closing thoughts, we'll wind down this hour a little early.

Mr. THOMPSON of Pennsylvania. I appreciate that. Thanks again for hosting this hour.

Whether we're talking about addressing the deficit or whether we're talking about saving Medicare—frankly, both of those issues are intertwined—we've got to save the country, and we've got to save the Medicare program. What we cannot do is allow the politics of 2012 to affect the problem-solving of critical problems in 2011. That's what we have seen so far. Where the facts are evident and clear that this country is facing a critical deficit that could bankrupt it and where the numbers for Medicare are such that its insolvency is impending and bankruptcy occurs and it goes away, these are critical problems, and they shouldn't be demagogued as we bring solutions to the floor to debate. That's what has been happening. So there is no way we should allow the politics of 2012 to affect the critical problem-solving of 2011.

After the Balanced Budget Act of 1997, I had the privilege as a health care professional to be recruited to serve on a technical expert panel for Medicare. At the time, it was the Health Care Finance Administration. Today, it's the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services. Based on that experience, this is necessary. This is a necessary debate. This is necessary in order to save Medicare, and it's an opportunity for us.

We have had previous reforms. The most recent one I saw was under President Bush where he created the waiver program. That was a reform to an entitlement program that actually increased the quality of life and decreased the costs of many people who were institutionalized, living in nursing homes. Frankly, I like nursing homes. I think they can be very quality facilities, and I was an administrator at one time. Yet people should have the choice of where they live if they're living with a significant disability. It was President Bush's waiver program, a reform actually, that allowed that to occur.

So "reform," I think, can be a word used to scare people, but we need to talk about the specifics of why it is necessary and the opportunities that we have, I believe, to increase the quality of care, to decrease costs, to even increase access—all those—and certainly choice since the health care consumers are making decisions. Those are four principles that we share as a caucus as to whatever we do in health care. In looking at Medicare reform, I think that our plan, which is really the only viable plan, honors all four of those qualities.

So I look forward to continuing this debate. We need to have a good, transparent debate, but it needs to be a debate that is not based on demagoguery. It's a debate that needs to be based on the facts. I thank my colleague for hosting this Special Order time.

Mr. BURGESS. I think we'll look forward to having similar discussions in the future, probably frequently, because it's important that we not just have the debate with both sides of the Chamber. It's also important that we have the conversation with the American people.

I would remind people that the Republican budget that was passed in April was an aspirational document. It wasn't terribly long. If you look at something that becomes an actual law, it can get fairly long and intricate, but the budget was an aspirational document that set the goals. In 10-years' time, we want to see Medicare on a sustainable path. We want to preserve, protect and defend it for the future, and this aspirational document sets the pathway for achieving that goal.

All of the work that will be done to actually develop the legislative product will be done in the committees that Mr. THOMPSON and I are on in the House and that Members of the other body are on in the Senate. The actual work will be done on those committees, and there will be ample opportunity for people to comment, for people to contact their legislators. There will be periods of open comment at the Federal agencies as those laws are written. They won't be written in the next couple of months. They will be written over the next several years.

The point I would end with is that we are entering a phase of a long conversation with the American people about what the future of this program is, which arguably has been a good program in the past but, left untouched, is headed for some significant problems in the future.

So what is the forward-looking path for our Medicare system and for our seniors of both today and tomorrow? It will be a long conversation, but we are both up to it, and we can talk for a long time without pausing. I look forward to working with you on many afternoons on this very subject.

Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Under Article 1, Section 2 of the Constitution, "the House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States." As described in Article 1, Section 1 "all legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress." I was elected in 2010 to serve in the 112th Congress as certified by the Secretary of State of Washington state.

Article III, Section 2 states that the Supreme Court has "the judicial power" that "shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States." Article II, Section 1 of the Constitution provides that the Supreme Court is the supreme law of the land when stating "The judicial power of the United States, shall be vested in one supreme Court."

The power of judicial review of the Supreme Court was upheld in Marbury v Madison in 1803, giving the Supreme Court the authority to strike down any law it deems unconstitutional. Members of Congress, having been elected and taken the oath of office, are given the authority to introduce legislation and only the Supreme Court, as established by the Constitution and precedent, can determine the Constitutionality of this authority.

The constitutional authority on which this bill rests is the power of the Congress to provide for the general welfare of the United States, as enumerated in Article I, Section 8, Clause 1 of the United States Constitution; to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution such power, as enumerated in Article I, Section 8, Clause 18 of the Constitution; and to make rules and regulations respecting the U.S. territories, as enumerated in Article IV, Section 3, Clause 2 of the Constitution.

By Mr. PRICE of North Carolina:

Congress has the power to enact this legislation pursuant to the following:

Congress has the power to enact this legislation under Article I, Section 8, clauses 1 (“[t]o provide for the common Defense and general Welfare of the United States”) and 10 (“[t]o define and punish . . . Offenses against the Law of Nations”).

However, the Supreme Court has held that Congress’s authority to legislate with respect to matters outside U.S. boundaries is based on national sovereignty in foreign affairs and, consequently, is not limited by the enumerated powers delegated to Congress. For example, in United States v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corp. (1936), the Supreme Court ruled that the “broad statement that the federal government can exercise no powers except those specifically enumerated in the Constitution, and such implied powers as are necessary and proper to carry into effect the enumerated powers, is categorically true only in respect of our internal affairs.”

On March 30, 2011, in United States v. Brehm, the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia upheld the constitutionality of the Military Extraterritorial Jurisdiction Act (MEJA, on which the current legislation is modeled), on this basis.

By Mr. RENACCI:

Congress has the power to enact this legislation pursuant to the following:

Clause 1 of Section 8 of Article I of the Constitution, whereby Congress shall have the power “[t]o lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States.”

As affirmed by Justice Benjamin Cardozo in Steward Machine Company v. Davis, 301 U.S. 548 (1937), upholding the constitutionality of unemployment benefits.

By Mr. RICHMOND:

H.R. 2138.

Congress has the power to enact this legislation pursuant to the following:

This bill is introduced pursuant to the powers granted to Congress under the General Welfare Clause (Art. 1 Sec. 8 Cl. 1), the Commerce Clause (Art. 1 Sec. 8 Cl. 3), and the Necessary and Proper Clause (Art. 1 Sec. 8 Cl. 18).

Further, this statement of constitutional authority is made for the sole purpose of compliance with clause 7 of Rule XII of the Rules of the House of Representatives and shall have no bearing on judicial review of the accompanying bill.

By Mr. ROSKAM:

H.R. 2139.

Congress has the power to enact this legislation pursuant to the following:

Article I, Section 8, Clause 5 states “The Congress shall have Power . . . To coin Money, regulate the Value thereof, and of foreign Coin, and fix the Standard of Weights and Measures.”

By Mr. SIMPSON:

H.R. 2143.

“The constitutional authority of Congress to enact this legislation is provided by Article I, Section 8 of the United States Constitution, specifically clause 3 (relating to the authority to regulate commerce among the several states).”

By Mr. SIRE:

H.R. 2144.

Article 1, Section 8 of the U.S. Constitution.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

HONORING MR. RICHARD
ROEHRKASSE FOR HIS 20 YEARS
AS A TRUSTEE OF SOUTH-WESTERN ILLINOIS COLLEGE

HON. JERRY F. COSTELLO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing the dedicated community service of Mr. Richard Roehrkaske, as he marks his 20th year as a Trustee for Southwestern Illinois College.

Richard Roehrkaske was appointed to fill a vacancy on the Board of Trustees for Southwestern Illinois College (SWIC) in 1991 and has been continuously re-elected since that time. A resident of Red Bud, Illinois, Mr. Roehrkaske had experience in the Information Technology field as a systems analyst, designer and project manager. He had a desire to serve his community and pursued membership on the SWIC Board of Trustees as a way to help ensure access to quality education for area residents.

As a SWIC Trustee, Mr. Roehrkaske has enthusiastically worked with faculty, administration and staff on the Strategic Planning Committee since its inception. He helped to update existing and develop new Board policies and procedures to address strategic planning priorities.

Mr. Roehrkaske has been a consistent, active participant in helping SWIC maintain its longstanding accreditation with the Higher Learning Commission (HLC), and achieve model-institution recognition from the HLC for its Academic Quality Improvement Program (AQIP) initiatives and achievements.

With his background in Information Technology, Mr. Roehrkaske has been a longstanding champion of IT—from smart-classrooms to community-wide applications—helping to establish SWIC as one of the leading IT-supported community colleges in the state and the nation.

In his longstanding role as Board of Trustees Facilities and Finance Committee Chair, Mr. Roehrkaske has helped to develop and identify funding resources for SWIC and to complete numerous major capital development projects. Among the significant projects to benefit from his involvement are: the Liberal Arts and Information Sciences buildings at the Belleville Campus; renovations and expansions at the Sam Wolf Granite City and Red Bud Campuses; and the Schmidt Art Center, in collaboration with the SWIC Foundation Board.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in an expression of appreciation to Mr. Richard Roehrkaske for his 20 years of service as a Trustee of Southwestern Illinois College and to wish him the very best in the future.

RECOGNIZING MR. CARMEN A.
POLICY

HON. TIM RYAN

OF OHIO

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Mr. Carmen A. Policy, who received the prestigious National Education and Leadership Award from the Sons of Italy Foundation on May 25th. This award is presented by the foundation annually to the Italian American who has upheld a commitment to educational excellence, leadership and the betterment of society. Previous recipients of this outstanding award include Joe Paterno and Antonin Scalia.

Mr. Policy, a native of Youngstown and Ohio's 17th district, graduated from Youngstown State University in 1963, and in 1966 earned his Juris Doctorate Degree from Georgetown University Law Center here in Washington, DC. For many years, he pursued a successful law practice career in Ohio.

In 1983, Carmen traded in the courtroom for the gridiron and became Vice President of the San Francisco 49ers. In 1991 he became President and CEO of the franchise. As an executive in the 49ers organization, Mr. Policy played a key role in delivering 4 Super Bowl trophies back to the city of San Francisco. In 1994 he was named the National Football League Executive of the Year by The Sporting News and GQ listed him as one of the most powerful men in professional sports. In 1998, Carmen became President and CEO of the Cleveland Browns and during his five years with the Browns, he served as a member of the NFL's Finance, Business Ventures, and Super Bowl Advisory Committees.

After 25 years in the NFL, Carmen, along with his wife Gail, began a new life of wine making in the Napa Valley and the couple founded the Casa Piena Winery. The roots of Casa Piena go back to Policy's childhood in Youngstown's Smokey Hollow neighborhood, where the making and sharing of wine played a central part in the vibrant family life of this largely Italian-American community.

He has sent a strong and clean message to the youth of the Mahoning Valley; if you work hard, play by the rules and get a good education, America will reward you with all the blessings of this great land.

Mr. Speaker, today I rise to congratulate and honor the hard work and dedication of Mr. Carmen Policy and his wife Gail. I invite my colleagues to join me in recognition of this award.

HONORING GOVERNOR RAUL H.
CASTRO ON HIS 95TH BIRTHDAY

HON. ED PASTOR

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. PASTOR of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Raul Hector Castro, Arizona's first Hispanic Governor, on the occasion of his 95th birthday on June 12, 2011. Raul Castro's legacy is imbedded in my home State's history for his high achievements despite the racism he experienced as a young Mexican immigrant raised in Arizona. Besides holding Arizona's highest State office, Governor Castro served as a United States Ambassador three times: to El Salvador, Bolivia, and Argentina. Last year, Governor Castro was honored with the prestigious Cesar E. Chavez Legacy Award at the Ninth Annual Cesar E. Chavez Foundation Gala in Phoenix. In addition, Governor Castro received the Arizona Legacy Award at the 52nd Annual Arizona Hispanic Chamber of Commerce's Black and White Ball.

Governor Castro and co-author Dr. Jack August, Jr. have written a fascinating biography entitled "Adversity Is My Angel: The Life and Career of Raul H. Castro." The book traces the astounding life of the former Governor through his childhood as a Mexican immigrant in a harsh land to his election as Governor and Presidentially appointed Ambassador. It chronicles how he overcame personal and racial prejudice to rise to the highest levels of accomplishment.

During the last couple of years, the former Governor has been on a mission to visit and speak with middle school and high school students and encourage them to stay in school and get an education. Governor Castro has visited several schools throughout the State of Arizona sharing his legacy and more importantly stressing the value and importance of an education. Education is a top priority of Governor Castro, and the Institute that carries his name is housed at Phoenix College. The Raul H. Castro Institute is focused on improving the quality of life for the Latino community in Arizona and educating and strengthening partners that serve the Latino community by fostering connections with research institutions, promoting best practice dissemination, and impacting policy decisions in education, health and human services, leadership, and civic participation.

The Honorable Raul H. Castro continues to provide vision and leadership in the State of Arizona, and I ask my colleagues today to join me in recognizing his life's accomplishments and his 95th birthday.

WALTER "BUS" BERGMAN
TRIBUTE

HON. SCOTT R. TIPTON

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. TIPTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Walter "Bus" Bergman, one of Colorado's great student-athletes, coaches and war heroes.

Mr. Bergman, originally of Denver, Colorado, was a three-sport star in high school and college. He even hit the game winning shot to give Denver's North High School the state hoops championship in 1938. At Colorado A&M, now Colorado State university, he lettered in basketball, baseball and football, while also serving as student body president.

During World War II, Mr. Bergman enlisted in the United States Marine Corps. He earned the rank of Major and received the Bronze Star for heroism during the Battle of Okinawa.

After graduating from college, he became one of the most successful coaches at Mesa State University. He led multiple teams to conference championships and took pride in preparing every athlete for life after college. The college renamed its athletic fields in his honor and its athletic hall of fame is one of six that has inducted Mr. Bergman.

Family was an extremely important part of Mr. Bergman's life. He was devoted to his wife, Elinor, and their three children. His daughter, Jane Norton, was Lieutenant Governor of Colorado and his other daughter, Judy Black, was an assistant to President Reagan for intergovernmental affairs and has held several national Republican positions.

Mr. Speaker, it is truly an honor to stand and pay tribute to a husband, father, teacher, athlete, war hero and a great American. Colorado is indebted to his work and I am grateful for his devotion to the State.

HONORING PATRICIA K. MACHT

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, as Dean of the California Congressional delegation, I rise to highlight the career of Patricia K. Macht, who is retiring after more than fifteen years of service with the California Public Employees' Retirement System (CALPERS).

Ms. Macht is currently the Deputy Executive Officer for External Affairs at California Public Employees' Retirement System (CalPERS). She has served under six CEOs and Interim CEOs, and four deputy executive officers. During her tenure, she has attended more than 400 committee meetings and 200 board meetings.

While at CalPERS, Ms. Macht established the vision, guiding principles, structure, and resources to administer a world-class communications function. She spearheaded the creation of a media relations program, an executive speechwriting support function and special events support services. She maintained the high quality of the services provided, keeping up with the tremendous changes in speed of communications methods.

Ms. Macht also ensured that CalPERS communications did not take place in a vacuum, as she led the integration of governmental affairs and public affairs and added a stakeholder relations function. She greatly expanded the system's ability to ensure that all stakeholders groups have equal access, timely and quality communication, and participation in the System's policy formulation and administration as possible. Through this integration, CalPERS has enhanced efficiency, access, and timeliness of dissemination of information and education.

Ms. Macht worked cooperatively and collaboratively regarding communications and advocacy with other leaders in the public pension community, including the National Institute of Retirement Security (NIRS), National Association of State Retirement Administrators (NASRA), California Association of Public Retirement Systems (CALAPERS), State Association of County Retirement Systems (SACRS) and numerous other industry groups and association.

Ms. Macht greatly expanded the reach to CalPERS 1.6 million members. Under her leadership, the CalPERS communications office issued more than 800 press releases, resulting in more than a million references to CalPERS in local, state, national and international media articles. She guided the development, execution and dissemination of the widely-read CalPERS' "PERSpective" newsletter. She also created the institution's "Retirement Planning Month", the CalPERS Member Network video programming on cable television, and a robust CalPERS website that is continuously improving to meet the needs of our members and employers. Ms. Macht created the first California Retirement Dialogue summit—bringing stakeholders from labor, employers, and policy experts together to review and discuss pension issues in the wake of the pressures upon employers to meet their pension obligations due to the market downturn.

She received the 2008 Lifetime Achievement Award for her career in the communication field from the State Information Officers Council and garnered high praise from all who worked with her.

She began her career in government as the Director of Public Affairs and Education at the California Integrated Waste Management Board. Prior to entering public service, she worked in corporate communications/public affairs positions in the private sector for five years. Previously, she was a journalist for 10 years covering local government issues in the state of Maryland. Ms. Macht has a Bachelor's Degree in journalism from the University of Maryland.

Once again, I would like to commend Ms. Macht for her dedicated public service and wish her all the best in her future endeavors.

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, the Hebrew Institute of Riverdale, the Bayit, is a cornerstone of the Riverdale community. Today it is honoring Daniel Perla and his wife Valerie Altmann for their involvement in the HIR since they moved to the community in 2000.

Danny was elected President of Hebrew Institute of Riverdale in June 2004, shortly after he completed the prestigious Wexner Heritage leadership training program. Under his leadership, the HIR embarked on a major capital campaign and has completed a building expansion and renovation. The campaign has already raised over $5 million, half way to its goal with the rebuilt Bayit now accommodating nine separate Shabbat groups, and six different Shabbat tefillot.

The Bayit also houses Yeshivat Chovevei Torah, the preeminent Open Orthodox rabbinical school where Danny is currently studying full-time. Before beginning his Rabbinic studies, Danny worked as an analyst and portfolio manager for a variety of firms, most recently working as a Managing Director of Indian Asset Management, a major institutional money management firm. In addition to his involvement at HIR, Danny serves as a board member of SAR Academy, Yeshivat Chovevei Torah and Yeshivat Hadar.

Valerie is a full-time faculty member at Long Island Jewish Medical Center where she oversees residents and practices Obstetrics and Gynecology. She is also an assistant professor at the Albert Einstein School of Medicine. Valerie is a frequent lecturer on medical issues related to health and halakha and recently played an important role in the kallah conference co-sponsored by YCT, JOFA and Yeshivat Maharat. #### HONORING ANDREAS D. COMODROMOS

HON. STEVEN R. ROTHMAN

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. ROTHMAN of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor my dear friend, Andreas Comodromos, for his exemplary involvement in many community, business, and political endeavors, both locally and at the national level. While his dedication to serving others extends to numerous causes, today I would like to recognize his unwavering commitment to the nation of Cyprus, the Cypriot-American community, and the Hellenic-American community at large.

Andreas "Andy" Comodromos was born in Vatili, in the Famagusta District of Cyprus, on March 27, 1949. The oldest of six children, Andy married Cyprus native Anna Zachariades in 1973. They made their home in Cyprus and, after having their first child, moved to the United States in 1974 so that Andy could pursue a college degree. He graduated magna cum laude from Saint Peter's College in Jersey City, New Jersey with a B.S. in Accounting, and soon joined the international accounting firm of Ernst & Ernst. Andy earned his CPA certification in 1982 and, the following year, co-founded the accounting firm of Comodromos Associates, P.A. with his late brother, Michael. Andy has served as president and managing partner of the Paramus-based firm ever since.

Despite leaving Cyprus nearly four decades ago, Andy's dedication to his homeland and to Cypriot-Americans is unwavering, and the well-deserved accolades he has received are numerous. He is the founding president of the Federation of Hellenic-American Organizations of New Jersey, a group which is proudly honoring him at their annual gala on June 5, 2011. He has served in several capacities on the Executive Committee of the Cyprus Federation of America, CFA, including two consecutive terms as the CFA's Supreme President, from 1991 to 1995. He was honored with the Offikion Archon Dikaiophylax by his Eminence Archbishop Iakovos in March 1996, and was subsequently elected to the National Council of the Order of Saint Andrew, for which he serves as Assistant Treasurer. He is a member of the Metropolitan Council for the Greek Orthodox Metropolis of New Jersey, of Evangelismos Tis Theotokou Greek Orthodox community, and of Saint Athanasios Greek Orthodox Church in Paramus. In 2000, Andy was honored as "Man of the Year" by Evangelismos Tis Theotokou Greek Orthodox Church in Jersey City. He received the 1996 Ellis Island Medal of Honor for outstanding contributions to America and distinguished community service, and in 2009, was appointed by Governor Jon Corzine to the New Jersey Hellenic-American Heritage Commission.

Andy is the Founding President and current Chairman of the Cyprus-U.S. Chamber of Commerce, serves on the board of the Cyprus Children's Fund, and has served as Treasurer of the World Federation for Overseas Cypriots (POMAK). He is a member of the Council of Hellenes Abroad (SAE) of the North and South American Region, as well as the American Hellenic Educational Progressive Association, AHEPA. And, while his involvement in these and many other organizations is as extensive as the plethora of honors he has received, Andy's family is his proudest accomplishment. He and his lovely wife Anna have been blessed with two children and three grandchildren.

Mr. Speaker, today I rise to congratulate my dear friend, Andy Comodromos, and thank him for his devotion to the Cypriot-American community, both in the great State of New Jersey and across the Nation.

HONORING THE LIFE AND LEGACY OF JOHN HARDWICK

HON. ALCEE L. HASTINGS

OF FLORIDA

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor of the life and legacy of John Hardwick. John Hardwick was the personification of a community servant. Born in Miami on March 27, 1970, Hardwick grew up in Hallandale, Florida. It is in the City of Hallandale that he touched the lives of so many with his hands and his heart.

Hardwick served as president of the Class of 1988 of Hallandale High. By the age of 19 he started his own business as a barber and three years later he chose to reinvest and renovate his business rather than relocate. He would go on to serve on the Hallandale Beach Chamber of Commerce board of directors, he was instrumental in founding Top Shops, a consortium of mostly minority owned beauty salons in Miami-Dade and Broward counties, and he also served on the committee that gave his often forgotten community a name, "The Palms of Hallandale."

Hardwick's community service efforts sent young children to see live theatre, he was instrumental in organizing the city's Martin Luther King Day parade, and he fought to remove a sanitation transfer station thereby keeping his community beautiful. In general, Hardwick was the type of individual who could give you a haircut while simultaneously educating you about the events in your community. He was the cornerstone for personal grooming and civic awareness. Hardwick's life was cut short last week by complications he suffered from a stroke at the young age of 41.

Mr. Speaker, John Hardwick kept his community looking good and feeling good because he was a good person. It is with privilege and sadness that I honor his life today.

TRIBUTE TO MRS. KAREN BOUNDS

HON. GREG WALDEN

OF OREGON

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. WALDEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the career of Mrs. Karen Bounds of Hermiston, Oregon. Today millions of young people across the country are graduating and looking forward with hope and confidence to the next step in their lives. Whether it is college, service in our armed forces, or civilian employment, young adults are prepared for success by the caring and invested teachers they encountered throughout their education. Karen was one such teacher.

It is with a note of sadness that I honor Karen today, because I do so on the occasion of her retirement. For more than 20 years, she has taught essential courses including English, history, and government at Hermiston High School, which is located in my district. Future students at HHS will, regrettably, miss the opportunity to learn from Karen's knowledge and enthusiasm as well as her manifest passion for teaching and compassion toward her students.

Karen has never been one to call it a day after putting in the minimum number of hours; she has consistently volunteered her time and resources to enhance the educational opportunities available to her students. Many times over the years, for instance, Karen brought groups of exemplary students to Washington, D.C., to participate in the Close Up program, which gives high school students firsthand exposure to their nation's capital. She also dedicated much of her time to training Hermiston's successful Mock Trial team and escorting it to district and state competitions.

Karen never missed an opportunity to expose her civics and government students to the real work of government. I myself enjoyed the opportunity to address her class as a guest speaker. It will come as no surprise that the questions I faced from her students were pointed and informed. It was a pleasure to meet those students and witness their interest and curiosity about our system of government. It is more important than ever that Americans take an active and informed interest in their government, and Karen equipped her students with the foundation essential for doing so.

A California native, Karen met her husband of 45 years, Roger Bounds, while attending their alma mater, Stanford University. Karen and Roger raised four children and, as you might imagine, Karen's efforts on behalf of her students represent just a fraction of the commitments she has assumed over her years as a teacher, a mother, and an involved citizen. Between the kids' sporting and scholastic events, Karen found the time to participate in many community-service organizations, including as a founding director of the Desert Arts Council, which has brought live performances to Hermiston for almost three decades, and as a member of the vestry of Saint John's Episcopal Church.

Mr. Speaker, I acknowledged a trace of sadness in marking Karen's retirement from Hermiston High School, but it is just a trace. I am delighted that she will have even more time in retirement to dedicate to her family, her friends, and her community in Hermiston, Oregon.

On behalf of that community, which I am pleased to represent, I thank Karen Bounds for her years of service and dedication to the students at Hermiston High School. While she will be missed, we wish her a long, productive, and enjoyable retirement.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE PENNSYLVANIA SMALL BUSINESS PERSON OF THE YEAR, MR. JOSEPH SANTELLI

HON. MARK S. CRITZ

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. CRITZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize an individual who exemplifies a successful small businessperson in our country, Joseph Santelli, who was recently honored, by the U.S. Small Business Administration.

The week of May 16–20, 2011 was the 48th Annual National Small Business Week. This is a time when the President of the United States and the country as a whole recognizes and honors the contribution that small businesses are making to our nation. Small businesses are the engines of growth and innovation, and Mr. Santelli, who was honored by the Small Business Administration of Western Pennsylvania, is truly moving his small businesses towards greatness. Mr. Santelli took the honor of being the 2011 local and state Small Business Person of the Year in Pennsylvania.

Mr. Joseph Santelli is the President of Santelli Tempered Glass, located in Monessen, PA. He was involved in the glass and window industry for many years prior to selling tempered glass himself. For fifteen years prior he sold tempering furnaces to companies so they could make the glass. With an ambition to grow his business and some help from outside investors, Mr. Santelli ventured into the manufacturing of tempered glass.

With his investment in the business, Mr. Santelli set up the first tempered glass outfit of its kind east of the Mississippi River. As his business became more successful, Mr. Santelli was able to buy out his business partner and expand his operation to factories in the states of Indiana and Florida.

Through his exploration of tempered glass, he has helped change the lives of residents throughout Pennsylvania and the United States. This type of tempered glass won't shatter if it is broken and greatly reduces injury in case of an accident. Recognizing that success bears responsibility, he has given back to the community by donating tempered glass for Habitat for Humanity projects and to ABC-TV's "Extreme Makeover: Home Edition."

In this tough economic time, small businesses are creating jobs, innovative products, and services people need. They are the engine of economic growth. Mr. Santelli epitomizes intuitive and responsible business practices in this country. Mr. Speaker, I would once again like to honor Mr. Santelli for his extraordinary work and commitment as a small business owner.

Mr. TIPTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Augustine Abeyta for his service and heroism defending the United States of America. The Colorado native is a decorated veteran who helped defend our country and our values during one of its most trying periods.

Mr. Abeyta enlisted shortly after the outbreak of World War II, in 1944. As an infantryman, he fought in two campaigns in Germany and Ardennes. His bravery in both arenas was quickly recognized and earned him two Bronze Campaign Ribbons. Almost a year after his enlistment, he was wounded in Germany by an enemy combatant on Christmas Day, 1944. He was given the Purple Heart for the injuries he suffered protecting his country.

Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to stand and pay tribute to a man who served the United States with such valor. His sacrifices are an inspiration and I am truly grateful for his service.

HONORING MR. KENNETH AHLSTROM

HON. BRIAN HIGGINS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the life of the late Kenneth Ahlstrom of Dunkirk, New York.

Mr. Ahlstrom was a proud, patriotic American. He served in the United States Navy during World War II aboard the USS Phoenix in the southwest Pacific. During his service, Mr. Ahlstrom participated in 25 landings in New Guinea, New Britain, the Philippines, and Borneo.

Professionally, Mr. Ahlstrom worked for many years as a salesman with Eber Brothers Wine and Liquor Corporation. Throughout his life, Mr. Ahlstrom demonstrated a deep commitment and devotion to his local community. For more than 50 years, Mr. Ahlstrom has remained active in the American Legion Post 62, serving as treasurer, post commander, an officer of the board of directors and county vice commander. Concurrent with his service at Post 62, he also belonged to the VFW, Dunkirk Exempt Firemen, Dunkirk Lakeside Club, First Ward Falcon Club and the Buffalo Bills Booster Club. Mr. Ahlstrom had served on the Boys State Committee and the American Legion Baseball Scholarship Committee and was a past president and member of the Dunkirk High School Marauder Booster Club. He also had served as secretary-treasurer at Willowbrook Park Cemetery.

Of the many significant accomplishments of his life, Mr. Ahlstrom took the greatest pride in his family. Married to Nancy Ahlstrom for more than 63 years, Mr. Ahlstrom was patriarch of a great Western New York family that includes 8 children, 17 grandchildren, and nine great-grandchildren. His is a wonderful legacy that each family member may cherish for years to come.

It is with great pride that I rise today, only a few days after our Memorial Day holiday, to honor and commemorate that service of Kenneth Ahlstrom. I hope that you will join with me, Mr. Speaker, and the entirety of our membership in the House in expressing the condolences of the House to the Ahlstrom family.

HONORING THE WORLD WAR II VETERANS OF ILLINOIS

HON. MIKE QUIGLEY

OF ILLINOIS

Mr. QUIGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the World War II veterans from my district who are traveling to Washington, DC, with Honor Flight Chicago, a program whose goal is to provide as many World War II veterans as possible the opportunity to see the World War II Memorial here in Washington, DC, a memorial that was built to honor their courage and service.

The American veteran is one of our greatest treasures. The Soldiers, Airmen, Sailors, Marines, and Coast Guardsmen traveling here today answered our nation's call to service during one of its greatest times of need. From the European Campaign to the Pacific Asian Theatre to the African Theater, these brave Americans risked life and limb, gave service and sacrificed much, all while embodying what it is to be a hero. We owe them more gratitude than can ever be expressed.

I welcome these brave veterans to Washington and to their memorial. I am proud to submit the names of these men and women for all to see, hear, and recognize, and I call on my colleagues to rise and join me in expressing gratitude.

HONORING THE VIRGINIA AQUARIUM & MARINE SCIENCE CENTER

HON. E. SCOTT RIGELL

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. RIGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize an important milestone in the history of an organization that has been a leader in the national effort in marine science education, conservation, and research—the Virginia Aquarium & Marine Science Center.

Since 1986, the Aquarium has been educating our youth, saving the lives of marine mammals and sea turtles, and spurring economic growth in the region. During the past 25 years, the Virginia Aquarium & Marine Science Center has attracted 11 million guests, including one million students, making it the Commonwealth of Virginia's most popular non-historical, nonprofit tourist attraction.

The Aquarium has been instrumental in educating our future generations with its unique experiences involving live animal displays, interactive science exhibits, marine science programs, the country's only interactive Seal Splash activity, and boat trips.

The Aquarium's Ocean in Motion vehicle has transported live marine animals to visit over 337,000 school students in 78 cities and counties in Virginia, Maryland, West Virginia, North Carolina, and Tennessee to offer hands-on activities related to watersheds and key ocean literacy concepts. The vehicle has also traveled to the U.S. Capitol, U.S. Department of Education, and the U.S. Department of Commerce to allow federal workers to learn hands-on.

In addition to its education initiatives, the Aquarium leads the way in conservation efforts through its renowned Stranding Program by responding to marine animals along the East Coast and providing an impetus for numerous research projects on seals, dolphins, right whales and endangered sea turtles.

The Virginia Aquarium has been influential in attracting economic development to the region with winter whale-watching trips which result in hundreds of thousands of dollars in direct spending to the regional economy. Out-of-town tourists who visit the Aquarium spend more money and stay longer in the area. The Aquarium is a key partner in the resort area's master plan for the retail, cultural, maritime, and natural environment, serving as an economic engine for the region and the state.

Congratulations to the Virginia Aquarium & Marine Science Center on this 25 year anniversary and for the education, conservation, and economic contributions to the region. We all look forward to many more years of inspiring work.

Mr. Speaker, it is with pride and admiration that I offer my thanks and recognition to the Virginia Aquarium & Marine Science Center.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, during rollcall No. 394 on June 2, 2011, I inadvertently cast a "no" vote on an amendment offered by Mr. SHERMAN of California, prohibiting the use of funds made available in the underlying bill from being used in contravention of the War Powers Resolution.

RECOGNIZING THE 44TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SIX DAY WAR

HON. ALLEN B. WEST

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. WEST. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the 44th Anniversary of the Six Day War, in which Israel—our greatest ally in the Middle East—turned a massive buildup and aggression by Egypt, Syria, and Jordan into a tremendous victory in just six days.

After months of continued aggression against it, Israel launched a preemptive attack against the massive Egyptian buildup in the Sinai, destroying most of the Egyptian Air Force and Army in a number of hours. After repeated air and artillery attacks by Jordan and Syria, Israel liberated all of Jerusalem two days later on June 7, 1967, including the Western Wall and Jewish Quarter in the Old City. For the first time in decades, Jerusalem was unified and the Jewish people could visit their holiest site, the Western Wall.

By June 10, just six days after it began, war was over. Israel's superior fighting force had destroyed the armies and air forces of their Arab aggressors, and had captured the Gaza Strip, the West Bank, the Golan Heights, Mas'ada, and the Sinai Peninsula to the Suez Canal.

However, this victory came at a great cost to the Israeli people. Nearly 1,000 Israelis were killed, and over 4,500 were wounded. Last weekend Americans celebrated Memorial Day with cookouts and a day off of work. However, when Israel commemorated their Memorial Day—Yom Hazikaron—a few weeks ago, they honored the memory of the tens of thousands of Israeli soldiers who gave their life in defense of their country by sounding a siren that can be heard all over the country.

During this one minute sounding of the siren, Israelis stop whatever they are doing and stand in silence to commemorate those who were lost—traffic stops in its tracks, throughout the country, people pray. The names of those who gave what President Abraham Lincoln called the last full measure of devotion for their homeland are displayed on television screens throughout the day.

Mr. Speaker, make no mistake, there has always been a Nation of Israel and Jerusalem has been and must always be recognized as its rightful capital.

As a Member of the United States House of Representatives, I believe the United States Congress has a solemn duty to ensure that the homeland of the Jewish people remains as such. The State of Israel is the one bright light shining in a dark ocean of tyranny and oppression.

Israel must be allowed to defend itself from external and internal aggression; the Israeli people must be allowed to continue to build within their borders, and Jerusalem must be recognized as the nation's only capital.

Furthermore, the United States must stand by Israel's side in the face of a United Nations who clearly views the State of Israel through the lens of anti-Semitism and hatred. Anything less than full support for Israel and its citizens at the United Nations by the United States government is simply unacceptable.

The United States and Israel share the common bonds of freedom, liberty, democracy, and the right to worship in the name of any religion you see fit. We share a common enemy in radical Islam, and have both seen our citizens murdered and maimed by terrorist thugs who kill women and children in the name of religion. We are indeed each other's greatest ally—without the United States, Israel would not exist; without Israel, the United States would soon fall.

Next week, Israel will mark the 44th anniversary of the Six Day War. It will be a time of reflection and remembrance, and will undoubtedly render memories of when Jews—from Israel, the United States, or anywhere around the world—were not allowed to pray at their holiest of sites.

At this time of great challenge for our strong and loyal ally, America must take a stand and show not only Israel, but the rest of the world, that Jerusalem—an undivided Jerusalem—is the capital of the Jewish State, and that security will always come before a two state solution.

ON INTRODUCTION OF THE TRANSPORTATION INFRASTRUCTURE
ON FEDERAL LANDS ACT OF 2011

HON. MAZIE K. HIRONO

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Ms. HIRONO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce a bill that will significantly improve traffic safety and mobility in our national parks and other public recreational lands through increased funding and expanded authorities. I urge my colleagues to support this bill, the Transportation Infrastructure Improvements on Federal Lands Act of 2011.

Our national parks contain some of the most important and valuable historic, cultural, and natural treasures in our country. Millions of visitors flock to these parks every year. Yet safe access to and movement around these sites are compromised by severe and chronic underfunding and irrational provisions in current law.

The state of park transportation systems is deplorable. A recent assessment by the National Park Service (NPS) found that 90 percent of the park roads are in poor or fair condition. This compares with 14 percent for major rural roads in the overall federal-aid highways system. One person is killed or injured on a park road every 4.5 hours. If the National Park System were a state, it would rank 13th highest for road fatalities and injuries among all the states.

The NPS received $240 million in FY2010 through the Park Roads and Parkways program to build, repair, and rehabilitate roads and bridges, less than a third of what the NPS estimates it needs to provide safe and efficient access for visitors. My legislation would double the annual funding to accelerate the retirement of the growing road repair backlog now estimated at $4.9 billion.

The poor state of park roads is not caused by insufficient funding alone. Under current law, Federal highway funds can be used for reconstruction and rehabilitation, but not for regular maintenance that would help extend the life of roadways and preserve taxpayers' investments. Consequently, maintenance of roads and bridges is deferred until they have deteriorated to the point where they qualify for major rehabilitation or reconstruction, at far greater expense. Visitors are put at risk when they try to drive around potholes that are too common on our park roads. My legislation would make regular maintenance of park roads eligible for federal highway funding.

As our national parks become increasingly crowded, alternative transportation systems are being relied upon to a much greater extent to help move visitors around. Unfortunately, that program is also severely underfunded. A third major focus of my bill would raise the annual funding level for the federal public lands transit program from the current $24 million to $100 million, with 60 percent of it being targeted for qualified projects in national parks.

Visitors from throughout our country and around the world are discovering the natural, cultural, and historic wonders that are embodied in our national parks. Their experience should not be diminished, and their safety certainly should not be placed at risk, while they visit our national parks. I urge you to join me in sponsoring this legislation to improve visitor safety and enjoyment of our parks through improved maintenance and management of its transportation systems.

HONORING MR. WILLIAM CORNELL

HON. BRIAN HIGGINS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the life of a faithful resident of Western New York, and a good friend, William F. "Bill" Cornell of Jamestown, who recently passed away at the age of 69.

Bill started his career as an instructor of English at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio. In his later life, he worked as a data processing manager for Hopes Architectural Products, a position he held for twenty six years. He was also employed by the Carriage House in Fredonia.

Bill was an active member of the Chautauqua County Democratic Committee and was active in many civic and political causes in his hometown. A parishioner of Holy Angels Roman Catholic Church, Bill and his wife Peg were devoted parents to their children Chuck and Kathryn, and they were doting grandparents to 5 beautiful grandchildren.

I got to know Bill Cornell well during my initial campaign for Congress in 2004 and have come to know him well in the years that have passed since. A steadfast Democrat proud of his roots in Jamestown, Bill was the kind of fellow who would give you the shirt off of his back. While he will obviously be greatly missed by friends and family, as a rare breed of Jamestownian, he will be just as sorely missed by the community at large.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you to join with me and with our colleagues to honor the life of Bill Cornell and offer the sincerest condolences of the House to Peg, Chuck, Lori, Kathryn and Kurt, and to his entire family.

CELEBRATING 25TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE AU PAIR PROGRAM

HON. RUSS CARNAHAN

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. CARNAHAN. Mr. Speaker, on June 9th, the Department of State will hold a reception celebrating the 25th anniversary of the au pair program. Host families, au pairs from Germany, Brazil, Thailand, South Africa, France, Sweden and Mexico, along with other countries, and federal officials from the Department of State, will participate in this event recognizing the strength and longevity of this cultural exchange program.

The first au pairs arrived in New York City in June of 1986. Since that time, the program has witnessed dramatic growth, thanks in part to the leadership and vision of one of the first authorized sponsors, Au Pair in America, a division of the American Institute for Foreign Study (AIFS), located in Stamford, Connecticut. AIFS helped establish a regulatory framework that has allowed more than 87,000 young people to live with and care for the children of American families during a mutually rewarding one- or two-year experience.

This exchange experience has profoundly changed the lives of au pairs, the young children they care for and their host families through their daily exchange of ideas and broadening their global understanding through a sharing of culture, language, and religion. Furthermore, au pairs have been active contributing members of their American community where they live through their engagement in community and religious activities, giving of their time and talents to charitable organizations and volunteering their time to teach young children in schools about their native country.

As a proud alumni of one of AIFS's study abroad programs, I can personally attest to the unique educational opportunity living outside your native country provides a young student. For me, it was a life changing experience, helping expand my horizons and alter my way of thinking.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my voice in commending all those who have worked to develop and expand the au pair program over the past 25 years.

HONORING CALL FOR HELP, INCORPORATED FOR 40 YEARS OF SERVICE TO PEOPLE IN NEED WITHIN THEIR COMMUNITY

HON. JERRY F. COSTELLO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues to join me in honoring Call for Help, Inc. an organization that is celebrating 40 years of changing lives.

Call for Help, Inc. provides the only 24-hour suicide hotline in the Metro-East area of Southwestern Illinois. Call for Help, Inc., was chartered in 1970 and began as a suicide and crisis hotline, operating out of a basement. While this critical service is still very much a part of Call for Help's program offerings, they have expanded to meet other critical needs through the years.

Two residential programs have been added, one to serve individuals who are homeless and suffer from chronic mental illness. Participants in this program receive medication monitoring, counseling, life skills training and other services. The other residential program provides assistance to homeless young women who are either pregnant or have small children. These women receive support and skill development so they can achieve long-term independence. Training includes life skills, parenting, workplace readiness, GED and other subjects.

Call for Help, Inc. also provides assistance to victims of sexual assault and sexual abuse. Twenty-four-hour response to victims includes arriving on-site at the hospital or police station and help navigating the medical and legal systems.

Last year, Call for Help, Inc., provided critical assistance to over 25,000 individuals and, through the years, they have recorded countless, remarkable stories of success.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating the Board of Directors, administration and staff of Call for Help, Inc., for their 40 years of changing lives and to wish them continued success in the future.

As a skilled naval aviator and leader of Marines, Major Thompson embodies the American virtues of service and sacrifice.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the United States Congress, I am honored to congratulate Major Thompson on his retirement. My wife Vicki and I wish him and his family all the best for continued success.

CONGRATULATING THE CECIL C.
HUMPHREYS MOCK TRIAL TEAM

HON. STEVE COHEN

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. COHEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the mock trial team from the Cecil C. Humphreys School of Law at the University of Memphis for winning the Thurgood Marshall Mock Trial Competition that took place March 9th-13th, 2011 in Houston, Texas. The team consisted of LaChina Algiers, Angela Harris, Chandra Madison, Joseph McKinney, and their coaches Melanie Stovall Murry and Bridgett Stigger.

The National Black Law Students Association founded this national competition in 2002 to encourage future lawyers to further develop their proficiency in the courtroom. Hundreds of competitors compete regionally each year in the hopes of earning national recognition for their trial advocacy skills.

This year, through their hard work and commitment to their professional development, the team from the Cecil C. Humphreys School of Law took home the national title, defeating delegations from Harvard, DePaul, St. Mary's and Texas Wesleyan along the way. Their victory is a testament to the outstanding students that graduate each year from the University of Memphis to become successful professionals in cities all over the nation and the world.

Since it was founded in 1962, the Cecil C. Humphreys School of Law has graduated over 4,500 students. Just this year, law graduates from the University of Memphis posted a 100 percent first-time passage rate on the Tennessee Bar Exam. As an alumnus of the School of Law at Memphis, I could not be prouder of the entire student body for their achievements and of the exceptional faculty dedicated to their success.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating the Thurgood Marshall Mock Trial National Champions from the Cecil C. Humphreys School of Law. I commend these students for dedicating many hours of study towards this competition. Their time spent in preparation in addition to their already rigorous professional law program is evident and represents the city of Memphis and the University of Memphis well.

At the local level, Marv served his community as Chairman of the Board of Ames National Corporation as well as serving on the First National Bank and Mary Greeley Medical Center boards for many years. Marv was also a proud Rotary member and president. In college, Marv was a proud member of Alpha Gamma Rho and the identity and friendships he established in his fraternity would last a lifetime. He would go on to be inducted to the National Alpha Gamma Rho Hall of Fame.

While his contributions to his city and state have resulted in awards for his distinguished service, Marv would be the first to tell you that his family is what he is proud of most. Marv is survived by two daughters, three grandsons, two step-grandchildren, and several nieces and nephews.

Mr. Speaker, Marvin Walter lived his life like a true Iowan by placing service and family above all else. It was truly an honor to count him as my friend and the friendship and counsel he has provided me over the years will be deeply missed. I offer his family my sincerest sympathies and best wishes in this difficult time. Thank you.

HONORING THE STOWE CENTER OF HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT ON THE OCCASION OF THE 200TH
BIRTHDAY OF AUTHOR AND ABO-LITIONIST HARRIET BEECHER
STOWE

---

HON. JOHN B. LARSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, June 14th of the year two-thousand and eleven will mark the two-hundredth birthday of author and impassioned abolitionist Harriet Beecher Stowe.

Stowe, a teacher hailing from Litchfield, Connecticut, became a central figure during the fight to end slavery in America after writing her seminal work, Uncle Tom's Cabin, which was completed in 1852.

The book's heart wrenching depiction of life for African-Americans held in bondage captivated a nation and inspired the public will to end the reprehensible institution of slavery. This treasure of American literature based on factual events helped change the course of our Nation's history by exposing the horror of slavery to the larger population and became a corner-stone of the abolitionist movement and a "clarion call" for freedom.

Today, the legacy of Harriet Beecher Stowe is carried on by the Harriet Beecher Stowe Center in Hartford, Connecticut. There, the Stowe Center carries on her passion and uses her story to inspire future generations to pick up the torch of social justice and carry forth the movement towards equal opportunity and justice for all.

I want to acknowledge and congratulate the wonderful staff from the Harriet Beecher Stowe Center for their tireless work to continue to inspire the public will to eliminate racial disparities in America and the world. Happy 200th Birthday Mrs. Stowe.

GOOD INTENTIONS GONE HAYWIRE

HON. JACK KINGSTON

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit an article which explains some of the problems and unintended consequences of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (P.L. 111-203).

[From Forbes Magazine, by Mallory Factor]

The Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform & Consumer Protection Act is supposed to shield consumers from problems in the financial services sector that many believe led to the financial meltdown. But Section 342 of the act introduces a brash example of social engineering that masquerades as consumer protection and financial reform. This section imposes gender and racial employment quotas on the financial services industry, which accounts for one-tenth of our economy. The quota provisions will affect over 50,000 financial services firms and other businesses, and the consequences will be enormous.

Dodd-Frank requires at least 29 federal bureaus to open Offices of Minority & Women Inclusion, involving ten branches of the Treasury Department, the Federal Reserve and its 12 regional banks, the Securities & Exchange Commission and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. The new diversity offices will implement rules to ensure "the fair inclusion and utilization" of minorities and women in all firms doing business with each agency. The offices will terminate contracts with any service provider that fails to meet these as yet undetermined standards. Just running these offices is estimated to cost over $58 million annually, says David Patten in a recent story on Newsmax.com.

These new offices will also assess the "diversity policies and practices" at all entities that fall under their regulatory eye, including banks, broker-dealers, registered investment advisors and now hedge funds. Along with more than 40,000 financial services firms, another 10,000-plus businesses, including accounting and law firms that do business with these government offices, will be subject to this new diversity oversight of their hiring.

What does this mean for the financial services sector? Assuming each firm hires at least one new worker to satisfy the new law, this provision could raise costs $4 billion or more annually, depending how far forthcoming regulations will extend. Firms doing business with the government will face additional expenses because they will now have to monitor the hiring practices of their sub-contractors as well. In addition to these reporting burdens, firms must prove to their regulators and to government offices with which they do business that they are meeting or working toward racial and gender hiring guidelines. In many cases this will require additional hiring beyond the needs of the business.

Forcing America's private firms to hire on the basis of racial and gender "guidelines," rather than solely on need and qualifications, is inefficient and makes our businesses less competitive than their global counterparts. Moreover, four out of the eight members of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights wrote a letter to Congress stating that this section of the act would likely "promote discrimination," and urged its removal from the bill.

There is a better, more cost-efficient solution: Let private companies come up with their own approaches. Deloitte's 19-year-old Women's Initiative, for example, has boosted the percentage of female partners, principals and directors from 7% in 1994 to 23% in 2010. And minorities and females currently make up 60% of kpmg's workforce.

While the idea of encouraging greater participation of minorities and women in the financial services sector is admirable, the government is overreaching when it mandates gender and racial quotas for private businesses. An affirmative action provision has no place in a financial services reform bill and puts additional government burdens and costs on an already struggling sector of our economy, putting our recovery at risk.

The megabills that fly through Congress provide legislators the opportunity to insert politically motivated provisions—under the radar. As Rahm Emanuel famously said after President Obama had been elected, "Never allow a crisis to go to waste." The financial crisis has given the President and Congress cover to impose their political agenda on private business activity. Watch out: Your industry could be next.

HONORING THE LIFE OF BYRON WAITE LEYDECKER

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to remember my friend Byron Leydecker, who passed away on May 12, 2011.

Byron was a good friend, and he was a true champion on behalf of the rivers and fisheries of California. Thanks to Byron's passion and determined advocacy, the Trinity River is today in better shape than at any time since the 1960s.

Byron lived his life with passion. Passion for what he believed and for his friends. He expected a lot of those of us in public service; he would let you know of his gratitude when you met his expectations and his disappointment when we disappointed him. At the end of the day, Byron was fun.

He will be missed by all his friends in California and across the country, and generations of Californians will benefit from his dedication to the Trinity and his tireless belief in the fundamental and lasting value of a healthy river.

I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD this San Francisco Chronicle article about Byron Leydecker's life and many accomplishments, and I ask my colleagues to join me in remembering Byron and in expressing our condolences to his children and grandchildren.

[From the San Francisco Chronicle, May 26, 2011]

BYRON LEYDECKER, FORMER MARIN SUPERVISOR, DIES

(By Peter Fimrite)

Byron Waite Leydecker, a former bank executive and Marin County supervisor who helped stop development in the Marin Headlands and, for nearly two decades, drove the restoration and protection of his beloved Trinity River, died May 12 in his home in Mill Valley.

Mr. Leydecker, who was 83, had been battling lung and liver cancer.

Mr. Leydecker was born in Oakland on Aug. 28, 1927. He served briefly on the battleship Iowa at the end of World War II before enrolling in Stanford University, where he graduated in 1950 with a degree in economics. During the Korean War, he served as a public information officer in the U.S. Army in Washington.

He worked briefly as a securities analyst and in 1953 got a job at Chico's Anglo National Bank, which later became Crocker Bank. By the time he left, he had become the bank's youngest-ever vice president. In 1962 he helped found Redwood Bank, where he was chairman of the board and chief executive officer until the bank was sold in 1981.

In 1963, Gov. Edmund G. "Pat" Brown appointed Mr. Leydecker to the Marin County Board of Supervisors. He won re-election in 1964. As a supervisor he fought a proposed development known as Marinello, which would have allowed construction of 20,000 homes in the Marin Headlands.

Never shy about speaking his mind, Mr. Leydecker could be a gruff taskmaster. He may have sometimes lacked diplomacy, but he was amazingly adept at getting what he wanted, said his friends and colleagues.

He started racing cars in the 1970s and, driving a modified Porsche, won the 1977 Northern California championship of the prestigious Sports Car Club of America circuit.

The construction of Trinity Dam and Lewiston Dam in the 1960s and diversions of water as part of the Central Valley Project were sore spots to Mr. Leydecker, who had fished the Trinity in the 1930s when it was nearly pristine.

He decided to take action in 1991, when a channel improvement project by the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation choked the Trinity River with silt. It was so bad that Mr. Leydecker got stuck in the mud on a side channel while he was fly fishing. "He was madder than a wet hen," said his friend Tom Stokely, the water policy analyst for the California Water Impact Network. "He called me up and he must have yelled at me for a half hour. Then he said, 'I've got money. I can hire a lawyer.' It was the beginning of a long and wonderful relationship."

Mr. Leydecker forced the bureau to stop digging along the river and in 1992 founded the nonprofit Friends of the Trinity River. The group fought to establish minimum annual water flows, improve fish habitat and enhance the riparian ecosystem.

"He was an authentic champion for rivers and fish, but especially the Trinity River," said Assemblyman Jared Huffman, D-San Rafael, who chairs the Assembly Water, Parks and Wildlife Committee.

Mr. Leydecker, who always wore a pressed button-down shirt with blue jeans and cowboy boots, fought until the very end for Trinity River improvements and against water diversions in the Sacramento-San Joaquin River Delta.

"He gave so much of his time and effort that it would be remiss as his friend for me not to continue that effort," said Rep. George Miller, D-Martinez, who once spent several days hiking and rafting the river with Mr. Leydecker. "He had a sense of romance about big rivers and what they bring to a society."

He is survived by sons John Leydecker of San Rafael and Mark Leydecker of Aspen, Colo.; daughters Caroline "Lama Palden" Alioto of San Rafael and Criss Troast of Nantucket, Mass.; and eight grandchildren.

A memorial service will be held June 5 at 3 p.m. at Marin Art & Garden Center, 30 Sir Francis Drake Blvd., in Ross. Donations may be sent to the California Water Impact Network, 808 Romero Canyon Road, Santa Barbara, CA 93108.

RECOGNIZING THE 90TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS—DEPARTMENT OF CALIFORNIA

HON. JERRY MCNERNEY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. MCNERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing the Disabled American Veterans (DAV)—Department of California on the occasion of its 90th anniversary. Founded in 1921, the DAV—Department of California has worked tirelessly to improve the lives of service-connected disabled veterans and their families.

Service officers from the DAV—Department of California offer critical support to our state's service-connected disabled veterans. The service officers—many of whom are disabled veterans themselves—help veterans apply for disability compensation as well as the pension, health, and education benefits they've earned. They also volunteer their time at Department of Veterans Affairs medical facilities and rehabilitation centers, and they help disabled veterans find jobs and secure scholarships to pay for college.

In the area I represent, the Disabled American Veterans George E. Morey Chapter 59 hosts an annual Memorial Day ceremony in Lodi to honor the men and women who have made the ultimate sacrifice in service to our country. Another local chapter in my district, the Disabled American Veterans Al Jordan Chapter 15, provides food coupons to disabled veterans during the holiday season. This group also focuses on community outreach and awareness by holding an annual picnic in Stockton for disabled veterans and their families, an event which I have attended.

The Disabled American Veterans—Department of California's work is just as important today as when the organization was first established 90 years ago. I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring the Disabled American Veterans—Department of California on the occasion of its 90th anniversary for its exceptional service to our Nation's disabled veterans.

HONORING ALLAN ALFRED VOIGT

HON. MIKE THOMPSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. THOMPSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor and pay tribute to Allan Alfred Voigt, a truly remarkable Renaissance man who passed away May 13, 2011.

Al Voigt was a scientist who held several patents, an artist, a community leader, a loving and devoted husband to his wife, Judith, a caring and inspiring father to his children, Che and Shanta, and doting grandfather to Logan Allan and Katherine Annabelle.

Al founded a series of aerospace engineering firms in Sonoma County that contributed to some of our most important national defense projects. His technical innovations in tactical missile and surveillance systems led to the development and success of the Stinger missile and Predator drone. More than 350 people in Sonoma County have high paying, technical engineering and manufacturing jobs because of these projects.

But Al's passions were much more extensive. He and his wife founded the Voigt Family Sculpture Foundation, which has placed more than two dozen sculptures, either pieces owned by the foundation or on loan by collaborative artists, in publically accessible places in Sonoma County.

He also won furniture design awards with his abstract chairs and his aerodynamic tricycles have set world speed records.

Mr. Speaker, Al Voigt was a prodigious thinker who never rested on his laurels. He was always looking ahead for the next idea. His fundamental skill was analyzing a problem and finding the solution, whether it was in national defense, art, or a functional piece of furniture. It is therefore appropriate that we honor him at this time for his service to our country and to his community.

HONORING THE BROWARD COUNTY PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEM

HON. ALLEN B. WEST

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. WEST. Mr. Speaker, I realize education is essential for every child in our nation. Education is the great equalizer and with a sound education any child can live the American Dream.

As a former teacher in Broward County, Florida, I am proud to congratulate Broward County Public Schools (BCPS) for the 11 high schools in their county receiving top national ranking in the Washington Post.

The Washington Post named 11 Broward County high schools in its High School Challenge list of top 1,900 public high schools in the nation. The schools were Fort Lauderdale (109), Marjory Stoneman Douglas (238), Nova (285), Miramar (355), Cooper City (376), Stranahan (431), J.P. Taravella (507), Flanagan (554), Plantation (739), Coral Springs Charter (983) and Pembroke Pines Charter (1,108) high schools join an elite group of public high schools nationwide. The Washington Post list represents only seven percent of schools across the United States.

Fort Lauderdale High School placed top among Broward high schools, with a national ranking of 109 and a state ranking of 24. According to the Washington Post, the Challenge Index's formula is to divide the number of Advanced Placement (AP), International Baccalaureate (IB) or other college-level tests a school gave in 2010 by the number of graduating seniors.

The Washington Post advises that while the index is not a measure of the overall quality of the school, the rating can reveal the level of a high school's commitment to preparing average students for college. With a few exceptions, public schools that achieved a ratio of at least 1.000, meaning they had as many Advanced Placement and International Baccalaureate tests in 2010 as they had graduates, are noted on the national list.

The Broward County Public School System is the nation's sixth largest public school system and the largest fully accredited district with over 234,600 students in more than 230 schools and education centers. The Broward County Public School System is committed to giving all students access to a college-ready, job-ready curriculum that meets rigorous expectations which prepares students for post-secondary options and also ensures that students are able to be successful and complete post-secondary schooling once they begin.

To ensure student's can succeed in the 21st century, I will always focus in Congress on what's best for students, parents, teachers, and communities. This means helping children achieve their full and unique potential by equipping them with the tools and knowledge to succeed in the 21st century workforce. I believe the Federal Government must restore local control, empower parents, let teachers teach, and protect taxpayers. These principles should guide our efforts to reform federal education policy and protect the rights and responsibilities of states and local communities when it comes to educating the next generation.

CONGRATULATING FRANK GULLUNI

HON. JOE COURTNEY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. COURTNEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Mr. Frank Gulluni on being honored with the Tom Ahlers Systems Building Award presented by the National Association of Workforce Development Professionals on May 17, 2011.

For 49 years, Frank has played a key role in the workforce development and educational community, touching the lives of countless students. In his position at Asnuntuck Community College in Enfield, Connecticut, he has been a leading force in preparing and training students for careers in our manufacturing sector. And, using his unique experience on the front lines of education, he has been a driver in our community towards finding unique ways to connect the needs of our manufacturing sector with the skills of our students.

Since 2007, I have been proud to work with Frank in advancing his goals of investing in our nation's manufacturing capabilities, helping those who have lost their jobs re-train for new careers, and lay the ground work for a workforce highly skilled in advanced manufacturing of alternate energy technologies and medical devices.

With his leadership guiding the way, Frank and I worked to successfully secure critical funding to expand Asnuntuck's Manufacturing Technology Center (MTC). Thanks to this initiative, new equipment and training services were developed to ensure that the MTC continues to keep pace with the emerging needs of his students and the manufacturing skills they need to fill the jobs of today—and tomorrow.

I have been so impressed and excited with Frank's results. Thanks in large part to Frank's efforts, Asnuntuck Community College has secured a 90% job placement rate for its students. When I visited the MTC last November, I heard first-hand from the students that the newly expanded center allow the program to continue to grow and expand to allow more services to students enrolled both at the college and those in local K-12 schools that partner with Asnuntuck. I also heard graduates of the program are found to be earning 40% more than their counterparts in all other industries.

Mr. Speaker, simply put Frank is someone who "gets it." When so many simply lament the decline of American manufacturing and the skills mismatch between the training of current workers and the needs of industry, Frank has taken action. He is a passionate believer in manufacturing and education. He truly understands the unique struggles of our laid off and dislocated workers as they seek to transition to new careers. He has built the kinds of partnerships with industries that has ensured that his students on to rewarding and meaningful careers in furthering our manufacturing sector. And, Frank has been a true leader in underscoring the unique value that our community colleges play in training the workforce of the future that will be the backbone of our nation's economy.

Connecticut, New England, and our nation are no doubt better off thanks to Frank's tireless work. For that, I urge all my colleagues to join me in honoring Frank for winning the Tom Ahlers Systems Building Award.

HONORING THE 70TH ANNIVERSARY OF ROBINS AFB

HON. AUSTIN SCOTT

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. AUSTIN SCOTT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, please join me in wishing a very happy 70th birthday to the Warner-Robins Air Logistics Center and Robins Air Force Base. This is an appropriate occasion to reflect and celebrate their proud history and heritage.

From the United States' entry into World War II to today's conflicts in Afghanistan, Iraq and Libya, the men and women of Warner-Robins ALC and Robins AFB have been an essential ingredient in our U.S. Air Force's ability to provide airpower for freedom around the globe.

One constant theme these past seventy years has been that the men and women of Team Robins have been most ready when the nation has been least ready. In 1948-1949, Robins' repair and supply personnel played a critical role in the Berlin Airlift. In 1950, workers at the center literally unwrapped and refurbished hundreds of "cocooned" Boeing B-29 Superfortresses. Understaffed and working around the clock, they made sure that United Nations forces in the Far East had the necessary tools to fight the North Korean invaders. And in 1973 during the Yom Kippur War, Warner-Robins personnel surged to resupply Israel during Operation Nicklegrass with dozens of C-141s. Providing the Israeli military with critical supplies helped to prevent their defeat in its war with its Arab neighbors.

As we approach the tenth anniversary of September 11, 2001, we must never forget those who paid the ultimate price that day. I can think of no better way to honor their memory than maintaining a world class U.S. Air Force with world class installations like Robins AFB!

Mr. Speaker, please join me to wish Robins AFB many best wishes during this important anniversary year. I remain confident that the men and women of Team Robins will continue their tradition of excellence over the next seventy years.

RECOGNIZING SGT. PETER P.
KRUPSKI AND PVT. RUSSELL M.
PENNY

HON. TIMOTHY H. BISHOP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. BISHOP of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the lives of two American heroes, Sergeant Peter P. Krupski and Private Russell M. Penny. Sgt. Krupski and Pvt. Penny personified American patriotism and selflessness in making the ultimate sacrifice to protect our freedoms for future generations.

Peter P. Krupski enlisted in the United States Marine Corps in 1941, reaching the rank of Master Technical Sergeant. Sgt. Krupski reenlisted in the Marines in March 1943, earning prominent distinctions such as the American Defense Service Medal, Asiatic-Pacific Campaign Medal, and World War II Victory Medal. In 1943, as the American forces began their offensive through the South Pacific islands occupied by the Japanese, Sgt. Krupski died of wounds sustained during the Battle of Guadalcanal aboard a U.S. Navy mobile hospital. Though just 22 years old when he was killed, Sgt. Krupski has been fondly remembered on the East End of Long Island ever since his passing.

Russell Penny enlisted as a member of the United States Army on January 5, 1940, answering our country's call to service following the advances of the Nazi Third Reich through Europe. Stationed at the U.S. naval base at Pearl Harbor, Pvt. Penny was killed during the surprise attack against the base by the Japanese on December 7, 1941. A lifelong resident of Mattituck, New York, Pvt. Penny holds the tragic distinction as the first casualty of Suffolk County and as one of the first of the over 400,000 Americans killed during World War II.

In honor of the sacrifices made by Sgt. Krupski and Pvt. Penny, a new community room at the Veterans Memorial Park in Mattituck, New York was named in their honor on May 28, 2011. It is my great hope that our community will continue to remember and support our veterans, forever recognizing them for their essential role in defense of our nation.

Mr. Speaker, I commend Sgt. Peter P. Krupski and Pvt. Russell M. Penny for their valor and service, and I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring their memory and sacrifice on the occasion of the dedication of the community room at the Veterans Memorial Park in my district.

STEVEN AND CHANI LAUFER

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, Steven and Chani Laufer came to Riverdale in 2005 and joined the Hebrew Institute of Riverdale the following year after attending a warm and moving Yom Kippur service there. They have been enthusiastic supporters ever since. They love the sincerity of the community, the caring and devotion of the rabbinic team, and the inspirational and progressive vision for the larger community that Rabbi Avi Weiss champions.

Chani grew up in Pittsburgh, and has worked in television, politics, and as a reporter for the Bergen Record and The Philadelphia Enquirer. After earning her law degree, Chani represented children as a law guardian in the Bronx and New York City family courts. She is currently taking care of her family and also serves on the board of Yeshivat Maharat.

Steven grew up in Stony Brook, N.Y., and is pursuing a doctorate in economics at New York University, after teaching high school science for several years. He is a former Tot Shabbat leader and organizes the HIR Purim Texas Hold 'Em Tournament.

Steven and Chani have three children; Shoshana, 5, Ari, 3, and Erez, 4 months. Like their parents, the children are enthused with the Hebrew Institute of Riverdale. They love celebrating holidays at HIR so much that Ari wakes up each morning for weeks afterwards asking "Is it Simchat Torah today? Is it Purim today?"

HIR is honoring this wonderful couple with the Young Leadership Award. I want to join with the HIR in congratulating and thanking this young couple for their good work in the community.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION RE-GION III YOUNG ENTREPRENEUR
OF THE YEAR, MR. CHRIS SIDICK

HON. MARK S. CRITZ

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. CRITZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize an individual who exemplifies a young, ambitious entrepreneur, Chris Sidick, who was recently honored by the U.S. Small Business Administration.

Mr. Chris Sidick is the sole managing member of C-Side Sports Academy, LLC, located in Washington County, PA. This young entrepreneur began playing minor league baseball after college and was left with no income during the off season. With the encouragement of a fan, Mr. Sidick began training young players when he wasn't playing during the summer. Using his parents' garage and a $700 investment in a batting cage he started his own training business.

Mr. Sidick soon took his business from a few kids to almost fifty. He had to move the facility out of his parents' garage and rent a space that cost him $1,000 per month. Realizing that this investment was just the beginning, Mr. Sidick solicited the University of Pittsburgh Small Business Development Center to assist him in developing a business plan and renting a larger space.

Utilizing a credit line, bargaining power, ingenuity, and hard work, Mr. Sidick was able to create a new 13,000 square foot facility to train young athletes. This exceptional space became quickly utilized by many colleges, high schools, and youth teams. While his business practices were extremely successful, Mr. Sidick wanted more for his company. He wanted to offer greater space and services to the young athletes. This is why he reformulated his business plan to get a $1 million bank loan and build a brand new facility.

Mr. Sidick has been able to transform his initial $700 investment in his parents' garage into a soon-to-be completed 27,000 square foot facility that will house a full-size baseball infield and a half-dozen batting cages. The building will also offer additional sports such as football, soccer, and laser tag. His accomplishments have landed him the local and regional Young Entrepreneur of the Year award from the Small Business Administration.

It is the keen mind of young people like Mr. Sidick that we can rely on to keep our economy going. He saw a need for a service, and utilized his specific skill set to fill that void. Even in this tough economic time, Mr. Sidick has been able to keep his business thriving. It is the passion for what he does and the energy he puts in his business that makes it successful.

Mr. Speaker, I would once again like to honor Mr. Sidick—a true young entrepreneur and small business owner who has pursued an idea that helps so many of our young people.

HONORING MR. RICHARD GILFORD

HON. STEPHEN LEE FINCHER

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. FINCHER. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to rise today in memory of Mr. Richard Gilford who was killed tragically while serving his community in the aftermath of the 2011 spring storms and flooding that impacted west Tennessee.

Since 1991 Richard worked for the Crockett County, Tennessee Highway Department. On May 4th, while clearing debris from rain swollen roads, Richard along with his father, Butch, and brother, Frank were trying to cut a fallen tree when it snapped and hit Mr. Gilford. A fellow colleague said of Richard, "He loved his job and always gave 110 percent at everything he did, including putting in 16 hours of overtime during the week of the storms."

Mr. Gilford leaves behind his wife of 13 years, Elisha, and two sons, parents, brother and sisters. He was a Tennessee Titan fan that could often be seen playing in the yard with his children. Richard Gilford, like many unheralded public servants, spent his working life helping the people of Crockett County by making sure their travel back home was always safe. We are forever thankful. The Gilford family can rest assured that the thoughts and prayers of a grateful community are with them during this time.

Please join me in honoring the life, sacrifice, and commitment of Mr. Richard Gilford.

HONORING THE LIFE OF U.S.
DISTRICT JUDGE ALEX T. HOWARD

HON. JO BONNER

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I rise today to acknowledge the loss of a dear friend and a remarkable public servant, U.S. District Judge Alex T. Howard, Jr., who recently died in Mobile following a battle with pneumonia at the age of 86.

Judge Howard grew up in Mobile and graduated from Murphy High School as one of its best and brightest students. He then attended Auburn University, but his studies were cut short by the outbreak of the Second World War. He enrolled in the 106th Infantry division and fought in the Battle of the Bulge. By his 20th birthday, he was commissioned as a Second Lieutenant. He carried that formative experience with him the rest of his life, and the lessons he learned during war allowed him to excel at practically everything he undertook throughout his life.

Upon his return to civilian life, he attended the University of Alabama, and graduated in 1950 from Vanderbilt University School of Law. He eventually settled in private practice in Mobile at the firm now known as Johnstone, Adams, Bailey, Gordon & Harris.

Mr. Speaker, Judge Howard's character, years of service and his wide-ranging experiences in law led him to a nomination by President Ronald Reagan for a newly created position on the federal bench in 1986. He was confirmed by the Senate just 15 days after the President's nomination. From his first days on the bench, his influence was felt throughout southwest Alabama.

Cecily Kaffer, a Mobile lawyer who clerked for Judge Howard from 1988 to 1999, recently told the Mobile Press-Register that Judge Howard was an insightful lawyer and an evidentiary genius.

Outside of the courtroom, Judge Howard taught Sunday School at Dauphin Way United Methodist Church for many years and attended services with his family.

My condolences go out to his wife, Anne Boykin, his daughter, Catherine Dawson, and his son, Alexander. You are all in our thoughts and prayers.

TRIBUTE TO ARTHUR JANECKA

HON. RON PAUL

OF TEXAS

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, today I wish to recognize the achievements of Arthur J. Janeka. This month Arthur will retire after spending more than 45 years with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers (USACE). Arthur, or as his friends refer to him, "Art" serves as the Deputy District Engineer, Chief of Program and Project Management for the USACE's Galveston District. As the congressional representative of a large coastal district, I have had the privilege of working with Art on a wide range of coastal navigation issues. Like so many others, I have always been deeply impressed with his dedication to his job. His retirement, though richly deserved, will be a tremendous loss for both the Army Corps and the people of south Texas.

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers Galveston District was established in 1880 to create deep-water ports along the Texas Coast. Today, the Galveston District's boundaries extend through the entire coast of Texas and 150 miles inland.

As a dedicated servant with the United States Army Corps of Engineers, Art has carried out its mission of protecting the environment, reducing flooding, and ensuring that the nearby waterways are easy to navigate.

Art began his career with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers as an intern in 1964, after graduating from Lamar University in Beaumont, TX. In 1966, he was assigned to the Texas Coast Hurricane Study in the Planning Branch of the Engineering Division. And in 1969 he became a member of the Society of American Military Engineers.

Art joined the Programs Management Branch in 1973 and became Chief of the Branch in 1987. In 2000, he moved to the Project Management Branch of the Program and Project Management Division to serve as chief. In 2005, he was assigned to his current position.

Throughout his career, Art has been involved with many Corps projects along the coast of Texas, including Brazos Island Harbor; Corpus Christi Ship Channel; Freeport Harbor; the Gulf Intracoastal Waterway; the Houston and Galveston Ship Channels; and the Sabine Neches Waterway.

It is clear that Art Janecka has been a tremendous asset to not only the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, but the entire State of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to thank Arthur J. Janecka for more than 45 years of service to this country.

HONORING COLONEL JOHN
RAWLEY, DECORATED VETERAN AND OUTSTANDING MEMBER OF THE CAMDEN COUNTY SHERIFF'S OFFICE

HON. ROBERT E. ANDREWS

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Colonel John Rawley for his dedication to protecting our country, both as a member of the United States Armed Forces and as a member of the Camden County Sheriff's Office.

Colonel Rawley began his distinguished career in the military in 1954 at the age of 20, when he joined the United States Marine Corps as a Private First Class. In 1957, he joined the United States Army and served over 30 years. During his illustrious career, Colonel Rawley earned numerous decorations, including the Soldiers' Medal, the National Defense Service Medal, the Parachute Badge, the Army Service Ribbon, and countless others. He retired from the United States Army on August 8, 1987, after more than 30 years of protecting our country.

After his decades of military service, Colonel Rawley's patriotism and dedication were continued when he joined the Camden County Sheriff's Office in 1997. Colonel Rawley, known affectionately as "The Colonel" or "Ranger John," worked 13 years for the Camden County Sheriff's Office, mentoring and training officers throughout the department. He retired on December 1, 2010 as a respected and distinguished member of the department.

Colonel Rawley's selfless dedication to our Nation demands recognition. His decades in the military and the Camden County Sheriff's Office should serve as an inspiration to others. I thank him for his service, and extend my sincere best wishes to Colonel Rawley in his retirement.

HONORING ELIZABETH BICKFORD

HON. PETER A. DeFAZIO

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. DeFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend Elizabeth Bickford, director of financial aid and scholarships, at the University of Oregon for her years of service.

Ms. Bickford is retiring after 30 years at the university. Since 2000, she has led the university's student aid programs. During her time as director of financial aid and scholarships, Elizabeth Bickford has been a pioneer and leader, including helping to make the University of Oregon one of the Nation's first direct lenders in the early 1990s. I had the privilege of working with Ms. Bickford on many student aid issues including implementation of my contributions to the University of Oregon Presidential Scholarship Fund. I commend her for making a priority of promoting financial literacy for students and parents as well as meeting the financial needs of students and their families. Ms. Bickford has led UO's financial aid programs with an eye to compliance with federal rules. A member of the Cherokee Nation, Ms. Bickford has contributed to a host of efforts throughout our state to support and promote student access to institutions of higher education.

CONGRATULATING NISWONGER

HON. DAVID P. ROE

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. ROE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate the Niswonger Foundation as last month it celebrated its 10th year of service to Northeast Tennessee this month.

The Foundation's work is known by an ever growing number of students and teachers in my district. Its school partnership and scholarship programs are aimed at educating and improving our region through the betterment of its young leaders. Niswonger scholars are chosen based on their proven leadership in the community, strong academics, character, and a pledge to return to our area to work, and lead, in their chosen profession. This need-based scholarship offers students the opportunity to attend the college or university of their choice.

Likewise, the Foundation established the Northeast Tennessee College and Career Ready Consortium, an ongoing partnership with public high schools that will eventually touch 29 high schools and 26,100 students. This program gives county schools best practices, provides additional resources for Northeast Tennessee's dedicated teachers, and gives students a challenging and engaging academic atmosphere in preparation for college or a career.

Again, I commend the Niswonger Foundation and its founder Scott Niswonger on ten years of life-changing service to Northeast Tennessee.

RABBI TOMER AND EFRAT
GROSSMAN

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, Rabbi Tomer and Efrat Grossman moved to Riverdale from Israel three years ago as Jewish Agency Shlichim of Bnei Akiva. Rabbi Grossman worked as the main Shaliach of Bnei Akiva in North America, and helped run Bnei Akiva activities at the Hebrew Institute of Riverdale.

In response to the warmth of the HIR community and its strong connection and commitment to Medinat Israel, Rabbi Grossman organized an Israeli Seder, an Israeli Minyan for Simchat Torah and two fundraisers—one after the Carmel Fire and another for poor families in Israel.

During his stay in Riverdale, Rabbi Tomer was appointed by the Jewish Agency as the Head of Formal Educational Shlichim in North America and as the main organizer of the National Bible Contest. He is currently the rabbi at Brandeis School in Long Island.

Tomer was born in Petach-Tikva and learned at Yeshivat Hagolan in Hispin. He served in the army as a tank commander and as a Division Rabbi in the Reserved Forces, in addition to working as a programming manager at Motorola.

Efrat, as a designer, immediately fell in love with the HIR community's creativity and open mindedness and participated in last year's Shavuot programs and gave a lecture in Hebrew.

Efrat works as a Hebrew literacy teacher at Ma'ayanot Yeshiva High School for Girls as well as a pottery artist. Efrat was born in Jerusalem, and continues a dynasty of more than 10 generations in Israel. In Israel, she was head of the Visual Arts Department of Ariel University after serving as the Head of the Jewish Education Faculty at Emunah High School in Tiberias.

They have two daughters: Ayala, 8, and Hallel, 8 months old.

This marvelous couple is being honored by the Hebrew Institute of Riverdale with the Community Service Award, and I join HIR in congratulating them and thanking them for all their good work in our community.

HONORING MAYOR HENRIETTA BLACKMON OF CAMDEN

---

HON. JO BONNER

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to a citizen turned public servant who has earned the admiration and respect of her Southwest Alabama community.

In 2000, Henrietta Blackmon made history as Camden, Alabama's first female mayor. While a newcomer to politics and the campaign trail, Henrietta was by no means a stranger to the people of Wilcox County.

For some three decades before taking office, Henrietta Blackmon was recognized as an invaluable partner in her husband's local medical practice. She administered the business while her husband, Dr. Sumpter Blackmon, treated the sick. In fact, she never relinquished that role even after becoming Camden's chief executive.

Mayor Blackmon came to office on a mandate to take the city in a new direction and she certainly did. Over her three terms as mayor, she revitalized the downtown, balanced the city budget, secured block grants to upgrade the city sewer system and obtained funding that will be used to build a new city hall.

After 10 successful years guiding Camden, Mayor Blackmon surprised many of her friends and supporters when she announced on February 7 that she was stepping down.

However, anyone who thinks the mayor intends to slow down had better think again. She will not only continue to administer her husband's medical practice, but she has also agreed to help run her son's new local construction business.

Camden has progressed under the progressive leadership of Mayor Henrietta Blackmon and her presence at the helm of the city will be sorely missed. I join with her many friends in wishing Mayor Henrietta Blackmon, her husband, Dr. Sumpter Blackmon, and their family the very best in the days and years ahead.

HONORING THE LIFE AND LEGACY OF ALZEN FLOYD

---

HON. ALCEE L. HASTINGS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor of the life and legacy of Alzen Floyd. He was born March 15, 1919 and passed away on May 20, 2011.

As a young man, Floyd showed leadership by helping his mother in the purchase and renovation of their home while he was just sixteen years of age. In 1937, he joined the U.S. Army and he retired in 1960 as a Sergeant First Class.

After serving his country Floyd returned home and became a prominent member of his community though several entrepreneurial ventures. He owned and operated "Al Floyd's Soul Food," "Al Floyd's Photo Service," and "Al's Security." He would go on to open Broward County's first Black-owned security corporation, "Floyd & Associates Protection Corporation." This company would grow to half a million dollars in assets.

Floyd was a lifetime member of the NAACP and a faithful member of First Baptist Church Piney Grove since 1929, where he was a member until he could no longer attend.

Mr. Speaker, Alzen Floyd's motto was "If I can help somebody." His life was an example of dedicated service: service to his family, service to his country and service to his community. It gives me great honor to recognize his life and his service.

TRIBUTE TO MRS. FRANCIE
MOORE HANSELL

---

HON. GREG WALDEN

OF OREGON

Mr. WALDEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the career of Mrs. Francie Moore Hansell. Children across the country are excitedly looking forward to their last day of school and summer vacations filled with friends and family. While they are focused on their vacation plans, they are also looking ahead to the next school year and wondering who their teacher will be. At Rocky Heights Elementary School in Hermiston, Oregon, students and parents alike will be disappointed when they learn that Francie will not be among next year's teachers because, after 26 years at Rocky Heights, she is retiring at the conclusion of this school year. Over her long career at Rocky Heights, Francie has launched more than 650 second-graders onto their next level of instruction. Francie's service and commitment to her students, her school, and her community are to be commended.

Born in Prosser, Washington, Francie moved to Hermiston after her 1970 marriage to her Washington State University college sweetheart, Tyler Hansell. Together, Francie and Ty became integral members of the Hermiston community. Francie began her teaching career at Umatilla Middle School shortly after their wedding. After five years, she took a break following the arrival of their first child, Erin. Subsequently, Francie and Ty added four boys to their expanding family: Tyler Jr., Kenzie, Lucas, and Ruben. Raising her exuberant family and helping to run the family ranch took most of Francie's time and attention, but throughout she continued teaching Sunday school to the children of Hermiston Presbyterian Church. She also participated as an active member of the church choir and several other community volunteer organizations.

In 1985, Francie returned to teaching by joining the staff at Rocky Heights Elementary School as a second grade teacher. In 2010, Francie was awarded the coveted Crystal Apple award in recognition of her contributions as a devoted, accessible, and encouraging teacher for her many students.

Students always remember the special teacher who inspired them to believe in themselves and appreciate the unlimited power of learning—for many alumni of Rocky Heights Elementary, Francie Hansell was that teacher.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Hermiston community that I have the honor to represent, I want to commend and thank Francie for her many years of service and dedication to her students and community. While Francie is retiring from teaching and as the grandmother of six (so far), I know that she will continue to dedicate herself to her family, friends, and her beloved community of Hermiston.

CELEBRATING THE 65TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE NORTHSIDE CENTER FOR CHILD DEVELOPMENT, INC.

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to celebrate the 65th Anniversary of the founding of the Northside Center for Child Development, Inc.

In March of 1946, shortly upon the conclusion of World War II, two young African American psychologists, Mamie Phipps Clark and her husband, Kenneth B. Clark founded the Northside Center for Child Development. Originally called the Northside Testing and Consultation Center, the Northside Center for Child Development's first home was in the basement apartment located in the historic Dunbar Housing Development on 150th Street in Harlem.

The research of Kenneth and Mamie Phipps Clark challenged the notion of differences in the mental abilities of black and white children, which played an important role in the desegregation of American schools. At the Center, the Clarks conducted experiments on racial biases in education. Their findings were presented at school desegregation trials in Virginia, South Carolina, and Delaware; and in 1954, in a famous footnote, those findings were cited in Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka, Kansas, the landmark Supreme Court decision that ruled public-school segregation unconstitutional.

Kenneth Clark was the first African American to earn a doctorate in psychology at Columbia, to hold a permanent professorship at the City College of New York, to join the New York State Board of Regents and to serve as president of the American Psychological Association. In addition to his work as a psychologist and educator, he assisted corporations with racial policies and minority hiring programs. His books include Prejudice and Your Child (1955), Dark Ghetto (1965), A Possible Reality (1972), and Pathos of Power (1975). During Columbia's student protests in 1968, Clark, whose son Hilton (Columbia College 1968) was a leader of the Society of Afro-American Students, served as mediator between the black student protesters in Hamilton Hall and the administration.

Mamie Phipps began studying self-perception in black children as a graduate student at Howard University, where she met and married Kenneth Clark. Between 1939 and 1940, the two published three major articles on this subject. Phipps Clark continued her work at Columbia where, in 1943, she became the first African-American woman and the second African American (after her husband) in the University's history to receive a psychology doctorate. It was her work on the way black children seemed to prefer white dolls to black ones that particularly impressed the Supreme Court justices. In 1966, Columbia recognized the couple's work by awarding each the Nicholas Murray Butler Silver Medal.

Prior to the establishment of the Northside Center for Child Development (Northside Testing and Consultation Center), the Clarks decided to tackle the lack of services for troubled youth in Harlem. They approached nearly every social service agency throughout New York City with their modest proposal to urge established agencies to expand their programs to provide social work, psychological evaluation, and remediation for youth in Harlem, since at that time there were virtually no mental-health services in the community. Each agency they explored rejected their proposal and they decided to open their own developmental center to address those needs that were lacking for Harlem families and the youth.

In 1948, Northside moved to the 6th floor of the New Lincoln School, located at West 110th Street across Central Park. In 1974, Northside moved its headquarters east one block in Schomburg Plaza on Fifth Avenue.

Today, the Northside Center continues its mission to further the healthy development of children and families and empower them to respond gainfully to negative communal factors, including racism and its related consequences. By providing comprehensive, high quality mental health and educational services, coupled with research, Northside is able to assist children and families in their development to seek their full potential.

Under the leadership of Executive Director Dr. Thelma Dye, Northside Center doors are open to over 500 families and children who walk in on any given day for support, guidance, psychological evaluations, and therapeutic services or just to talk about their day or utilize the library of books available at the center.

Mr. Speaker, in the words of Dr. Dye, "whether children and families come to Northside because they are deeply troubled and look to us for solace, compassion, direction and understanding, or they come because they are excited and happy and look forward to the next enjoyable learning adventure, we welcome them. We work toward empowering and helping them learn and grow in an environment that reinforces their strengths, their cultures, their self-worth and their dignity. What we do at Northside is important, challenging and immensely rewarding."

I ask my colleagues and our Nation to join me in this special Congressional Recognition on the 65th Anniversary of the Northside Center for Child Development, Inc.

IN HONOR OF DR. CHARLES MACCORMACK

HON. JAMES A. HIMES

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. HIMES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the many achievements of Dr. Charles MacCormack, whose tireless work to improve the lives of children around the world serves as an example to all of us.

As President and CEO of Save the Children, Dr. MacCormack has overseen humanitarian aid programs in more than 50 countries. In the wake of natural disasters and in regions of the world torn apart by war, Save the Children helps children avoid unbearable pain and suffering. Dr. MacCormack's retirement creates a void at Save the Children that will be difficult to fill and he will be missed by friends, colleagues and the countless children across the world whose lives are better, because of him.

As many as a billion children around the world go to sleep hungry each night. For nearly two decades, Dr. MacCormack has led a global organization that protects the most vulnerable children and creates real change in the lives of those most in need. Throughout his life, Dr. MacCormack has conducted research, taught, and led organizations that promote greater mutual understanding among cultures, provide basic necessities to those in need, and defend the defenseless.

Before joining Save the Children, Dr. MacCormack was President of World Learning, a non-profit organization that promotes understanding among people from diverse cultures through educational exchanges and research. He serves on the Board of InterAction, an association of more than 160 humanitarian and development organizations, and on the Boards of the Basic Education Coalition and the Campaign for Effective Global Leadership. Dr. MacCormack has taken leadership roles with the Advisory Committee on Voluntary Foreign Aid, the Food Security Advisory Committee, and the Non-Governmental Committee on UNICEF and is a founding board member of Malaria No More.

Dr. MacCormack has enriched the lives of people around the world. But today, let us all turn our attention to him and express our gratitude for his lifetime of service. As a Representative, I am proud to honor him here today; and as a fellow citizen and friend. I am indebted to Charlie for all he has done and continues to do—for the children of the world.

ON THE REINTRODUCTION OF THE FILIPINO VETERANS FAMILY RE-UNIFICATION ACT

HON. MAZIE K. HIRONO

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Ms. HIRONO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to reintroduce two versions of the Filipino Veterans Family Reunification Act, both of which will provide for the expedited reunification of the families of our Filipino World War II veterans.

The first version I am introducing is a companion to S. 1141, a bill recently introduced by Senator DANIEL K. AKAKA. I am introducing this bill in acknowledgement of his leadership on this issue.

The second version I am introducing is identical to earlier versions of the bill that I have introduced in the 110th and 111th Congresses. S. 1141 differs from these earlier versions of the bill in that it provides that the petitions filed by the sponsoring Filipino veteran shall remain valid regardless of whether the petitioning parent is living or dead.

As you know, Filipino veterans are those that honorably answered the call of President Franklin D. Roosevelt and served alongside our armed forces during World War II. They fought shoulder to shoulder with American servicemen; they sacrificed for the same just cause. We made a promise to provide full veterans' benefits to those who served with our troops. And while we have recently made appreciable progress toward fulfilling that long-ignored promise, we have not yet achieved the full equity that the Filipino veterans deserve.

In 1990, the Congress recognized the courage and commitment of the Filipino World War II veterans by providing them with a waiver from certain naturalization requirements. Many veterans thereafter became proud United States citizens and residents of our country. However, allowances were not made for their children and many have been waiting decades for petition approval.

The Filipino Veterans Family Reunification Act would allow for the further recognition of the service of the veterans by granting their children a special immigration status that would allow them to immigrate to the United States and be reunified with their aging parents. It is important to note that the Filipino soldiers who fought under the command of General Douglas MacArthur at this critical time in our nation's history represent a unique category. These soldiers were members of the United States Armed Forces of the Far East. They were led to believe that at the end of the conflict they would be treated the same as American soldiers. It took more than sixty years to begin to make good on our commitment. The Filipino Veterans Family Reunification Act recognizes the special circumstances of this group of soldiers.

I look forward to working with my colleagues by providing for the reunification of our Filipino World War II veterans with their families.

TRIBUTE TO SERGEANT AARON J.
BLASJO

HON. KEN CALVERT

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to a hero from my congressional district, United States Army Special Forces Sergeant Aaron J. Blasjo. Today I ask that the House of Representatives to join me to honor and remember this incredible young man who died in service to his country.

Aaron was born in Riverside, California and graduated from Ramona High School in 2004. He was determined to be in the Special Forces and after graduation he promptly enlisted in the United States Army. Aaron was assigned to A Company, 3rd Battalion, 3rd Special Forces Group, Fort Bragg, North Carolina. His most recent deployment was his third tour in Afghanistan, where he served in the Special Forces canine unit. About Aaron, his grandfather, Wesley Blasjo, stated, "I think he wanted to do something for his country. He liked the camaraderie and all the things that go along with Special Forces."

Aaron was a member of the Palm Baptist Church and traveled to Africa on a short missionary trip to help others. A youth pastor at the church remembers Aaron as serious but caring member of their church community.

In 2009, he married Crystal Thompkins in Riverside. Two months ago, Aaron became a proud father to his son, Talon Blasjo, which was one of the highlights of Aaron's life. On May 29, 2011, the day before Memorial Day, Aaron was killed in action in Wardak Province, Afghanistan, in support of Operation Enduring Freedom. He was 25 years old. In addition to his wife Crystal and son Talon, he also leaves behind his mother and father Daniel and Roberta Blasjo; and his extended family.

As we look at the incredibly rich military history of our country we realize that this history is comprised of men, just like Aaron, who bravely fought for the ideals of freedom and democracy. Each story is unique and humbling for those of us who, far from the dangers they have faced, live our lives in relative comfort and ease. The day they learned of Aaron's death was probably the hardest day the Blasjo family has ever faced and my thoughts, prayers and deepest gratitude for their sacrifice go out to them. There are no words that can relieve their pain, and what words I offer only begin to convey my deep respect and highest appreciation.

Sergeant Blasjo's wife, son and parents have all given a part of themselves with the loss of Aaron, and I hope they know that their husband, father, and son, the goodness he brought to this world and the sacrifice he has made, will always be remembered.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY, MRS.
HORTENSIA G. SILVA

HON. HENRY CUELLAR
OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. CUELLAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and celebrate the 91st birthday of teacher and volunteer, Mrs. Hortensia G. Silva. She has dedicated her life assisting the south Texas community, educating and serving children.

Mrs. Silva was born on June 5, 1920 on a ranch located on the outskirts of Rio Grande City, Texas, to proud parents, Serapio and Martha Guerra. After the passing of her father in 1929, she began working in a local grocery store to help her mother provide for her three younger siblings. During World War II, telegrams were sent to the Juan B. Galindo Grocery Store and Mrs. Silva was often charged with delivering families the heart-wrenching message that their soldiers had fallen. One of the only people with the ability to read or write, Mrs. Silva often wrote catalog orders so that neighborhood persons could acquire clothing and shoes. She attended school in Rio Grande City and graduated in the top ten percent of her class from the city's high school in 1939. She continued working in Galindo's grocery store until her marriage to Nicolas Silva, Jr. in 1947. The couple had two daughters and owned and operated a Texaco Service Station, where she served as the bookkeeper.

Mrs. Silva worked for Rio Grande City Independent School District as a teacher's aide in their pre-school department and continued to teach once the program was annexed by Headstart. She served on the South Texas Development Council until she retired at age 80, after 32 years of service. Throughout her career, she volunteered for her neighborhood's 4-H Youth Development Organization and frequently acted as judge in the program's float and craft competitions. Her dedication to children inspired her two daughters to emulate their mother's passion and attain masters degrees in Education.

In addition to her passion for children, Mrs. Silva was an avid arrowhead hunter—a passion her husband and children all enjoyed. The family has maintained, arguably, the largest personal collection in Texas, which was exhibited in the family's business. She is a faithful member of Immaculate Conception Church, and continues to dedicate her time to children, including her 4 grandchildren, 7 great-grandchildren, and others in her community. She is the beloved matriarch of her family and is sought for advice and guidance to her friends, family, and former students.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored and privileged to have the opportunity to recognize the extraordinary commitment to education and the community exhibited by Mrs. Hortensia G. Silva, and I wish her the happiest of birthdays.

TRIBUTE TO THOMAS H. DAVIS
JR.—RETIREMENT FROM COMMUNITY FOUNDATION OF SOUTH ALABAMA

HON. JO BONNER

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor the work of Thomas Davis Jr., a respected leader in his field and an outstanding citizen of Mobile, Alabama.

Mr. Davis recently retired as President and CEO of the nonprofit Community Foundation of South Alabama, an organization which has flourished under his guidance over the past 27 years. Beginning as the program's development director in 1984, Tom quickly rose to become its executive director in 1985 and went on to become the president of the foundation in 2008.

Under his direction, the foundation's assets increased from $3 million to over $50 million.

Even more impressive is the growth of the foundation's charitable funds and endowments. By the time he left office, this number had gone from 60 funds and endowments to over 400.

Mr. Davis' success is the product of hard work, an exceptional work ethic and an unparalleled ability to lead, which proved handy during his oversight of foundation programs that provided assistance to earthquake and tsunami victims in Japan as well as those recently affected by the Gulf oil spill. He was also instrumental in obtaining health insurance for local underprivileged children.

It would be a hard task to designate one of his many achievements as being his greatest, for Tom accomplished so much throughout his tenure. However, the nonprofit's recognition as a "Partnership to Build Community Capital" by the Kresge Foundation is a distinct honor, placing the Community Foundation of South Alabama in an elite group of which there are only six such programs nationally.

On behalf of the people of Mobile, I want to thank Tom Davis for his service and wish him—and his family—continued success in the years to come.

A TRIBUTE TO MRS. KATHLEEN BATEMAN

HON. BRETT GUTHRIE

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. GUTHRIE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a great Kentuckian, Mrs. Kathleen Bateman. After 33 years of teaching, Mrs. Bateman will retire leaving behind a legacy of dedication to her students and her community.

Mrs. Bateman graduated from Murray State University in 1977 with a Bachelor of Arts in Education and earned her Master's in Counseling from Western Kentucky University in 1986. She obtained her Rank I in Art through the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards in 1990.

Mrs. Bateman's most recent position was at East Hardin Middle School, but she has touched the lives of countless students throughout her career while teaching at several elementary and middle schools in the Commonwealth.

A great teacher has the power to affect students throughout their academic journey, opening new horizons and starting them on a positive path with high expectations for the future.

Mrs. Bateman did just that with the unwavering commitment she gave her students. It takes a special person and a tremendous level of perseverance to be an educator—qualities that Ms. Bateman exuded throughout her years of hard work.

I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring Mrs. Kathleen Bateman for her many great contributions to the Commonwealth of Kentucky and for contributing to the success of many young people in our community.

INTRODUCING THE "SALMON SOLUTIONS AND PLANNING ACT"

HON. JIM McDERMOTT

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, salmon are one of America's most precious but delicate resources. Since the construction of four Federal dams on the lower Snake River in Washington State, certain salmon species have become extinct. Others continue to see drastic declines in number. Today, thirteen salmon and steelhead species in the Columbia and Snake River Basin are listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act. If we do not act now, we stand to lose this valuable resource forever, which is why I am reintroducing the Salmon Solutions Planning Act.

Salmon and steelhead populations have major economic, environmental and cultural significance to the Pacific Northwest. Generations of fishermen have relied on salmon as an integral part of their communities along the west coast. Today, even at their current depressed levels, salmon add hundreds of millions of dollars to the American economy and remain an essential part of communities around the Northwest. If we restore these populations to their original levels their economic benefits will reach well into the billions and these communities will be able to continue their rich traditions.

Already we recognize the importance of preserving this precious resource. The Federal Government and ratepayers in the Pacific Northwest have spent more than $10 billion in salmon recovery efforts on the Columbia and Snake River Basin. These efforts, while commendable, have done little to help salmon populations recover. This legislation commissions studies to focus our efforts so that all factors are taken into account when considering removal. It is critical that our salmon recovery efforts be informed, cost effective, and successful.

Without action, scientists estimate that several of the salmon populations could be extinct in less than 20 years. The time to act is now. Salmon are the lifeblood of the Pacific Northwest, and we, as a country, cannot afford to lose this national treasure.

CONGRATULATING NORB ASCHOM FOR EXCELLENCE IN RADIO BROADCASTING

HON. RON KIND

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. KIND. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Norb Aschom for 50 years of excellence in radio broadcasting. Norb has been news director of WPRE-AM and WQPC-FM radio stations since 1962. Throughout his time at the station, Norb has served a critical role by providing this tight knit town with the news each day, installing a sense of community through the airwaves.

Norb is a fixture in the Prairie du Chien community, a town in southwestern Wisconsin on the banks of the Mississippi River. At 71 years of age, Norb has worked in the same building every day for 50 years. While his broadcasting home on St. Feriole Island in Prairie du Chien was recently flooded, he was forced, along with the rest of the station staff, out of their office and into a temporary workspace in the local Police Department. After a two week hiatus, Norb was able to return to his normal office on April 23. Throughout his time working out of the police department he never veered from his commitment to bring the news to the people of Prairie du Chien.

In his 50 years, Norb has interviewed everyone from former First Ladies Johnson and Carter, to fellow radio personality Paul Harvey. He has covered every major local event including the record floods of 1965, the 1981 closing of the Hwy. 18 bridge and the flooding of more recent years. Norb embodies what every rural community needs, a friendly and thoughtful voice to bring them the events of the day.

With no plans to retire anytime soon, Norb plans to continue making a difference in the lives of the residents of Prairie du Chien. I am proud to know Norb and believe that his work not only impacts his community but serves as an example to the rest of the country.

IN RECOGNITION OF EDDIE PALMIERI, THE DC JAZZ FESTIVAL'S LIFETIME ACHIEVEMENT AWARD RECIPIENT AND FOR HIS CONTRIBUTIONS TO AMERICAN JAZZ

HON. XAVIER BECERRA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. BECERRA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate a distinguished American, Mr. Eddie Palmieri, the recipient of this year's District of Columbia's Jazz Festival's Lifetime Achievement Award. Mr. Palmieri, renowned for his unique fusion of Jazz and Latin rhythms, has blazed many trails in his remarkable career. "El Rumbero del Piano," a title which reflects his magic on the piano, has earned his place among the great ones for his dedication to Jazz and the cultivation of its creative soul.

Having grown up in Spanish Harlem to Puerto Rican parents, Latin beats were a part of Eddie Palmieri's life from an early age. He began his lifelong passion for creating music at the tender age of eight. By age thirteen, Eddie had joined his uncle's orchestra playing the timbales. From his early exposure to the music instruments of the South Bronx, was borne the beautiful medley of Jazz and Latin music that is now firmly weaved into American life.

A musical trailblazer, Eddie Palmieri received the first of what would be numerous Grammys in 1975 for the recording "The Sun of Latin Music"—marking the very first time in the history of the Grammys that the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences recognized Latin music. In 1988, the Smithsonian Institution recorded two of Mr. Palmieri's energetic performances for the catalog of the National Museum of American History in Washington, DC. In a sign of changing times, in 1993, he was appointed to the Board of Governors of the New York chapter of National Association of Recording Arts and Sciences.

Twenty years after placing Latin music on the Grammys map, Eddie once again chartered new territory, opening the door for the new category of Latin Jazz. More recently, in 2009, his widely popular composition "Azucar Pa' Ti" was inducted into the National Recording Registry of the United States Library of Congress as a significant and compelling American sound recording. Mr. Palmieri shares this honor of induction into the National Recording Registry with other titans of American music like The Band, Willie Nelson, Loretta Lynn, The Staple Singers, Patti Smith, Cliff Edwards, Little Richard and R.E.M.

A nine-time Grammy Award winner with a musical career spanning more than 50 years and 36 recordings, Mr. Eddie Palmieri is an inspirational pianist, composer, arranger, and a celebrated leader of Salsa and Latin Jazz orchestras. For his numerous contributions to the American musical landscape, but more for his brilliant work in introducing the world to the rhythms of Latin Jazz, I ask that the House of Representatives honor and commend El Rumbero del Piano for a lifetime of achievement.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION REGION III EXPORTER OF THE YEAR, MS. EILEEN MELVIN

HON. MARK S. CRITZ

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. CRITZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Ms. Eileen Melvin, a crafty business woman in Johnstown, PA who was recently honored by the U.S. Small Business Administration.

In 2008, Ms. Melvin joined the board of directors of United Metal Fabricators, a producer of exam room equipment for the healthcare market. Her roots in the company lie much deeper, as her father had worked as a legal advisor to the company 20 years earlier.

In transitioning to UMF, Ms. Melvin saw an organization that held onto the ideals of good craftsmanship, but failed to keep pace with the technological and manufacturing advances of the day. She saw potential for a strong company in a global market that was craving quality American made healthcare goods.

With her ascension to board president and CEO in 2009, Ms. Melvin worked to introduce technological advances into processing and sales, while still maintaining the quality craftsmanship and workforce UMF is known for. She has also worked to introduce UMF products around the world.

Throughout her tenure on the board, UMF has seen a 62 percent increase in their exports. Ms. Melvin's immense exporting in Saudi Arabia has also led to her participating in a Trade Mission to the country. UMF products are now being utilized in hospitals around the world.

Ms. Melvin helped a struggling company become a major exporter in the Johnstown region. For her accomplishments, she has been recognized as the Small Business Administration's local and Region III Exporter of the Year. Mr. Speaker, once again I would like to honor Ms. Melvin and her contributions to America's share in the global economic market.

CAPTAIN JOSEPH W. SCHULTZ

HON. DORIS O. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Ms. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, earlier this week our nation learned that Capt. Joseph W. Schultz died May 29, 2011 while on a mounted patrol when the vehicle he and his Special Forces team were traveling in struck an IED in the Wardak Province, Afghanistan. He was born March 20, 1975 and grew up in Sacramento, California and graduated from El Camino High School in 1993. He graduated from the University of Oregon in 1997 and received his commission as an intelligence officer from Officer Candidate School in 2003.

His first assignment was to 1st Battalion, 504th Parachute Infantry Regiment, PIR, 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, NC. He then served as the assistant battalion intelligence officer and as a rifle platoon leader in Company A, 1-504 PIR. Upon completion of his tour with the 1-504 PIR, he then went on to serve as the counterintelligence/human intelligence operations manager for the 1st Brigade Combat Team, 82nd Airborne Division; and later as the G-2 advisor, 10th Iraqi Army Division.

After completing Special Forces Selection and Assessment, he graduated from Special Forces Qualification Course at Fort Bragg, NC. Upon graduation and receiving his green beret, Schultz was assigned to Co. C, 3rd Battalion, 3rd Special Forces Group (Airborne) where he served as the Detachment Commander of Special Forces Operational Detachment—Alpha 3333. Schultz deployed in support of various operations across the globe, including: Operation Iraqi Freedom, Iraq and this deployment to Afghanistan in support of Operation Enduring Freedom with Company C.

Capt. Schultz is survived by his mother Betsy Reed Schultz of Port Angeles, Washington. Condolences from our nation to his family, friends and fellow service members who mourn his loss.

HONORING TENNESSEE STATE
TROOPER ANDY WALL

HON. STEPHEN LEE FINCHER

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. FINCHER. Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to rise today to pay tribute to the life of Tennessee State Trooper Andy Wall. Trooper Wall was killed tragically in service to the state of Tennessee while escorting the United States Air Force Thunderbirds to the Great Tennessee Air Show.

At the age of 36, he had already served the community and our state for many years. He began his law enforcement career as a patrolman with the city of Dickson Police Department. After graduating from the Tennessee Highway Patrol Training Academy in 2004, he eagerly began his job as a Tennessee State Patrolman. His father, former sheriff for Dickson County Tom Wall, said "his son always aspired to be a trooper so that he could serve all the citizens of Tennessee." His friends frequently remember his laugh and smile as one that would brighten an entire room.

It is with great honor and respect that I salute Tennessee State Trooper Andy Wall. Emergency personnel are asked all the time to place their lives on the line. Trooper Wall made the ultimate sacrifice in service to the state he loved. The life of Andy Wall will always be remembered by the love of his family, friends, and colleagues. Our thoughts and prayers are with them.

Please join me in saluting the life and service of Tennessee State Trooper Andy Wall.

KIDNEY ACTION DAY

HON. ELEANOR HOLMES NORTON

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask the House of Representatives to join me on June 11, 2011, in recognizing Kidney Action Day in the District of Columbia to raise awareness of chronic kidney disease and of the importance of early detection and treatment.

Over 31 million Americans suffer from chronic kidney disease, but many people are unaware that they may be at risk. In the District, there are nearly 6,000 people on dialysis and 1,600 people on the kidney transplant waiting list. Not only does the District have the highest rate of kidney disease in the nation, kidney disease is the 13th leading cause of death here. In areas of the city that are heavily populated with minorities, the rate of kidney disease is double the national average.

Since chronic kidney disease can go undetected for years, people are urged to get screened for it, either through blood or urine tests. Early stage kidney disease can be treated with medications, healthy eating and exercise. I cannot stress enough the importance of early detection and treatment of kidney disease, which, if undetected, can lead to diabetes and hypertension, which, in turn, increase the risk of heart attacks, strokes, and heart-related deaths. As chronic kidney disease progresses, patients may require dialysis, which helps clean the bloodstream of toxic waste, or a kidney transplant.

On June 11, 2011, I will attend the American Kidney Fund's "Steps that Count" walk at Nationals Park here to raise awareness of kidney disease and to call on the residents of the District to get screened for it. I ask the House to join me on June 11, 2011, to recognize Kidney Action Day in the District of Columbia and to urge Americans to get screened for kidney disease.

TRIBUTE TO MICHAEL EDWARD PERKINS

HON. JO BONNER

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, June 3, 2011

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, it is with heartfelt sadness that I note the recent passing of Mr. Michael Edward Perkins, a well known athlete and martial arts expert from Saraland, Alabama.

Michael Perkins passed away May 14, 2011, after fighting a constant battle with cystic fibrosis since infancy. He was only 27.

He was known around the community as a devoted and inspiring husband to his wife, Kellee Jones Perkins, and a proud father to their infant daughter, Piper Catherine.

Michael will be remembered in so many ways. Not only did he love being outdoors and enjoying other recreational activities, he received a Black Belt in two different martial arts.

He also donated much time helping teach children at Cottage Hill Baptist Church, and will be remembered as an encouraging, buoyant young man. Everyone who knew Michael has an inspiring or humorous story they can retell.

Even when Michael was extremely ill, he never let his own problems affect his otherwise positive outlook on life and he was always bending over backwards for family and friends.

Mr. Speaker, all who knew Michael personally will surely miss him, and South Alabama has truly lost a beloved member of the community. Michael Perkins was inspiration to young and old alike.

On behalf of the people of South Alabama, I would like to extend my condolences to his wife, Kellee, and their daughter, Piper Catherine, for their loss. You are in our thoughts and prayers.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

The bill will be placed on the calendar subject to the provisions of rule XIV.

THE NEED TO GET SERIOUS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I welcome back my colleagues for what I hope will be a productive month. This month is not unlike last month though or the month before or the month before that. Once again, our constituents are concerned with one thing above all; that is, jobs, work. They are concerned because of what the economy means for their families and their lives. They are worried about paying the bills next month and sending the kids to school next year. Too many want to go to the bank and once again know the dignity of depositing a paycheck instead of an unemployment check.

Our constituents are also concerned because of what our economic future will mean for our Nation. They are afraid that ill-informed politicians might lead the country into a default crisis, and they fear all the terrible consequences that would have—consequences that would hurt us as a country, our families, and the world.

I heard these concerns last week in Nevada. We all heard them in our States when we went home last week. We hear them loudly and clearly. So we are going to focus our attention this week and month on jobs just as we have all year.

I am disappointed that our Republican colleagues seem determined to distract that focus. They want to spend the Senate's time debating an extreme social agenda that would hurt families, seniors, and our economy. They want to end Medicare in order to pay for more millionaires' tax breaks and oil company subsidies. That is not good policy or even good politics. The American people strongly oppose that policy, and so do the Democrats in Congress.

Every day Republicans prove they are not just tone deaf to Americans' opinions; they are also tone deaf to cold, hard economic facts.

Last week we got a discouraging jobs report. The economy added jobs, but not as many as we had hoped. Moody's sent a clear letter warning that a default crisis would send our economy into a tailspin. There is no time to waste. The longer Republicans insist on dismantling Medicare as a price for moving forward, the longer the unemployed will wait for good news, and the closer the Nation will come to a default crisis.

Republicans' ideology of obstruction isn't limited to economics or seniors' health. We also see it in their approach to performing the Senate's constitutional duty of confirming the President's nominees for important positions.

A few weeks ago, Republicans blocked a well-qualified, fair-minded, and widely respected legal scholar for a seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals. Now they are continuing these partisan antics by threatening to block two more noncontroversial nominees. The first is Peter Diamond. He is one of the Nation's top economists. He has won the Nobel Prize in economics. Not long ago, he had bipartisan support for his nomination to the Fed's Board of Governors. All of a sudden, for no good reason, Republicans have decided to stand in the way of his nomination.

The second, Don Verrilli, is the President's nominee for Solicitor General of the United States. The Judiciary Committee approved him by a 17-to-1 margin. So in addition to being supremely qualified, he is clearly not controversial. But now Republicans are threatening to block this nominee over requests for documents totally unrelated to him or his position. I hope they don't hold him up for reasons that have nothing to do with his nomination.

Blocking every nominee no matter the merits is no way to govern or lead. It is no way to move forward.

Mr. President, if we are going to keep our economy upright—for families and for our Nation as a whole—we have to recognize real problems and propose realistic solutions. We cannot hold one policy hostage to another or be bound by some strange ideology.

Every month we play these games guarantees that the following month will bring more of the same avoidable fights. For families worried about affording the basics, and for our Nation's fundamental economic strength, we need to get serious before it is too late.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will be in a period of morning business until 4:30 p.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak for 30 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

GOVERNMENT WATCHDOGS

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, when it comes to doing oversight, I think I have a reputation of doing just as vigorous oversight when we have Republican Presidents as when we have Democratic Presidents, and what I am speaking to the Senate about today has no partisanship in it because I could have said the same thing—and did say it—when there was a President Bush or a President Clinton or a President Reagan.

I speak today about watchdogging the watchdogs, as I have done many times in the past. I first started watchdogging the Pentagon back in the early 1980s when President Reagan was ramping up defense spending. Then a group of Defense reformers were examining the pricing of spare parts of the Defense Department, and we uncovered some real horror stories, such as $750 toilet seats and $695 ashtrays, all going into military aircraft. That is ridiculous, of course.

As news reports of these horror stories were hitting the streets, Offices of Inspectors General—OIGs—were sprouting up in every Federal agency as a result of a recently passed act of Congress in 1978. The Defense Department OIG officially opened for business

March 20, 1983. Today, thanks to the Inspector General Act of 1978, and the taxpayers, we now have a real army of watchdogs. The question is, To what extent are they doing their business?

This mushrooming IG bureaucracy is very expensive. It costs over $2 billion a year. But it now occupies a pivotal oversight position within our government, with a very important role to play.

As a Senator dedicated to watchdogging the taxpayers' precious money, I look to the IGs for help. That is because I just don't have the resources in my own office to investigate every allegation that might come my way. Like other Members of Congress, I regularly tap into this vast reservoir of talent called the inspector general. We count on them. We put our faith and trust in their independence and honesty. We rely on them to root out and deter fraud and waste in government wherever that waste and fraud rears its ugly head.

If—and that is a big “if”—the IGs are on the ball, then the taxpayers aren't supposed to worry about things such as $750 toilet seats. But I underscore the word “if” because fraud and waste are still alive and well in government.

One could legitimately ask: How can this be? We created a huge army of watchdogs. Yet fraud and waste still exist unchecked.

So I keep asking myself the same question that one might ask: Who is watchdogging the watchdogs?

True, there is an IG watchdog agency called the Council of Inspectors General on Integrity and Efficiency. But that is just another toothless wonder. So the Senator from Iowa has the duty today. I am here to present another oversight report on the Pentagon watchdog. I call it a report card on the fiscal year 2010 audits, issued by the Department of Defense inspector general.

It assesses progress toward improving audit quality in response to recommendations that I made on an oversight report that I gave to my fellow Senators last year. After receiving a series of anonymous letters from whistleblowers alleging gross mismanagement at the Office of Inspector General and the audit office within that office, my staff initiated an in-depth oversight review. My staff focused on audit reporting by that office, and our work began 2 years ago.

On September 7, 2010, I issued my first oversight review. It evaluated the 113 audit reports issued for fiscal year 2009. It determined that the Office of Inspector General audit capabilities, which cost the taxpayers about $100 million a year, were gravely impaired.

As a watchdog, degraded audit capabilities give me serious heartburn for one simple reason. It puts the taxpayers' money in harm's way, and it leaves huge sums of money vulnerable to threat and waste. Audits are the inspector general's primary tool for rooting out fraud and waste. Audits are the tip of an inspector general's spear. A good spear always needs a finely honed cutting edge. Right now, the point of that spear is dull, and so the inspector general's audit weapon is effectively disabled.

In speaking about my first report on the floor last September 15, I urged Inspector General Heddell to “hit the audit reset button” and get audits to refocus on the core inspector general mission of detecting and reporting fraud and waste. My report offered 12 specific recommendations for getting the audit process back on track and lined up with the Inspector General Act of 1978.

The response of the Office of Inspector General to my report has been very positive and very constructive. In a letter to me, dated December 17 last year, Inspector General Heddell promised to “transform the Audit organization,” consistent with recommendations in my report. The newly appointed deputy IG for auditing, Mr. Dan Blair, produced a roadmap pointing the way forward. Blair's report, dated December 15, laid out a plan for improving “timeliness, focus, and relevance of audit reports.” He promised to create a “world-class oversight organization providing benefit to the Department, the Congress, and the taxpayer.”

As part of their response to my report, the audit office also tasked two independent consulting firms—Qwest Government Services and Knowledge Consulting Group—to conduct an organizational assessment of the audit office and its reports. These independent professionals seemed to reach the very same conclusions I had. The Qwest report, issued October 2010, put it this way:

We do not believe Audit is selecting the best audits to detail fraud, waste, and abuse.

The auditors, the Qwest report states, have lost sight of that goal and “need to step back and refocus on the IG's core mission.”

That is exactly what I saw last year and what I continue to see today. However, I wish to be not totally pessimistic. All the signals coming since my report from the IG's office are encouraging. They tell me I am on the right track. The key question before us is this: When will the promised reforms begin to pop up on the radar screen?

The fiscal year 2010 reports examined in my report card were issued between October 2009 and September 2010. They were set in concrete, so to speak, long before Mr. Blair's transformation was approved. So the full impact of those reforms will not begin to surface in published reports until later this year or in the fiscal year 2011–2012 reports. However, that is not to say some improvement is not possible any time now, since discussions regarding the need for audit reform actually began in June 2009.

As we will soon see, there is no sign of sustained improvement—not yet today—but a faint glimmer of light can be seen in the distant horizon. In order to establish a solid baseline for assessing the IG's transformation efforts, my staff has taken another snapshot of recent audits. My latest overview report is best characterized as a report card because that is exactly what it is.

Each of the 113 unclassified audits issued in fiscal year 2010 was reviewed, evaluated, and graded in five categories as follows: category No. 1 was relevance; category No. 2, connecting the dots on the money trail; No. 3, strength and accuracy of recommendations; No. 4, fraud and waste meter; and No. 5, timeliness. Grades of A to F were awarded in each category. To average, it was necessary, obviously, to use numerical grades of 1 to 5 and then convert them to standard A to F grades.

Scoring was based on answers to key questions such as this: Was the audit aligned with the core inspector general mission? Did the audit connect all the dots in the cycle of transactions from contract to payment? Did the audit verify the scope of alleged fraud and waste using primary source accounting records? Were the recommendations tough and appropriate? Lastly, how quickly was the audit completed?

Each report was then given a score called the junkyard dog index. That is an overall average of the grades awarded in the five evaluation categories.

For grading timeliness, the following procedure was used: Audits completed in 6 months or less received a grade of A; those completed in 6 to 9 months, a B; those completed 9 to 12 months, a C; those taking 12 to 15 months, a D; and those that took over 15 months, an F.

After each report was graded individually, all the scores for each report in each rating category were added and averaged to create a composite score for all 113 audit reports.

The overall composite score awarded to the 113 reports was D minus. This is very low, indeed. Admittedly, the grading system used is subjective. However, as subjective as it may be, my oversight staff has determined it is a reasonable or rough measure of audit quality. Right now, overall audit quality is poor.

The low mark is driven by pervasive deficiencies that surfaced in every report examined—with 15 notable exceptions out of the 113. Those deficiencies are the same ones pinpointed by the Qwest report previously referred to. Instead of being hard core, fraud-busting contract and financial audits, most reports were policy and compliance reviews having no redeeming value whatsoever. Those are basically the findings I gave to the inspector general last September, when I criticized then what they were doing—spending too much time on policy audits and not enough time on chasing the money—on the waste of the taxpayers' money.

You have to follow the money if you are to find out where there is waste, fraud, and abuse—particularly the fraud. So what has been done in most of these has no redeeming value whatsoever because they did not pursue fraud-busting contract and financial audits but instead policy and compliance reviews. Quite simply, the auditors were not on the money trail 24/7, where they need to be to root out fraud and waste as mandated by the IG Act.

There is one bright spot, however. The auditors got it right—mostly right—in 5 reports and partially right in 10 other reports. Clearly, this is a drop in the bucket, but these 15 reports—which constituted just 13 percent of the total we reviewed for fiscal year 2010 output—prove that the audit office is capable of producing quality reports.

The 15 best reports earned grades of good to very good overall, with excellent grades in several categories. They involved very credible and commendable audit work. Each one deserves a gold star. While the top five reports earned overall scores of C-plus to B-minus, those scores would have been much higher were it not for long completion times. The average time to complete the top five reports was 21 months. Long completion times make for stale information and, of course, that makes the reports irrelevant.

Had they been completed in 6 months, for example, they could have earned a high B-plus score. Such long completion times clearly show that doing the nitty-gritty, down-in-the-trenches audit work requires large audit teams, if—and I want to emphasize “if”—they are to be completed in a reasonable length of time.

Right now, there are no specified goals for audit completion times. They are desperately needed. Then audit teams can be organized with the right skill sets to meet those goals.

My report includes seven individual report cards—six on the best reports and one on the worst report. I think the best way for my colleagues to understand my audit report card is to briefly walk through two of them—the best and the worst.

The highest grade was awarded to an audit that the Department of Defense entitled “Foreign Allowances and Differentials Paid to DOD Civilian Employees Supporting Overseas Contingency Operations.” This report examined the accuracy of $213 million in payments to 11,700 DOD civilians in fiscal years 2007–2008 for overseas “danger and hardship” allowances.

After reviewing the relevant payment records, the auditors determined that the Defense Finance and Accounting Service—and I am going to refer to that as their acronym, DFAS—had made improper payments—underpayments and overpayments—totaling $57.7 million. The audit recommended that the DFAS Director “take appropriate corrective action to reimburse or recover the improper payments” and that new policies and procedures be put in place to preclude erroneous payments in the future.

This report received an overall grade of B-minus. However, it received excellent grades—A minuses in three categories: relevance, connecting the dots on the money trail and fraud and waste meter. But it earned a B-minus for incomplete recommendations and an F for timeliness because it took too long—over 21 months—to complete, and so it was stale at that point.

The auditors went to the primary source records to verify the exact amount of erroneous payments. I wish to emphasize to the auditors at the IG this move is the one reason why this report earned high scores. Very few audits—just a handful—actually verified dollar amounts using primary source accounting records. That is why I emphasize so often on the need to follow the money trail if you are going to find the fraud and the waste.

In this report, the recommendations were good but did not go far enough. Recommending recovery or reimbursement of overpayments or underpayments was worth a B-minus, but responsible officials were not identified and held accountable for the sloppy accounting work that produced $57.7 million in erroneous payments.

It is kind of a rule of thumb around this place. If you don't identify who screwed up and make them feel personally responsible and send a message to other people, how are you going to bring about change? Did the audit office follow up to determine whether the DFAS Director had taken steps to reimburse underpayment or recover overpayments? The answer is probably no. In fact, nothing has been done. On February 23, 2011, in response to a question from my office, DFAS reported that the Department of Defense is still “developing a policy” to fix the problem. Isn't it funny that they have to develop a policy for what is so obviously wrong? Once that process is completed, though, DFAS will “take appropriate corrective action to reimburse and initiate collection action.”

When auditors make good recommendations, such as here in this audit, and nothing happens, it is as though they are kind of howling in the wilderness. That has to be very demoralizing.

At this late hour the probability of correcting these mistakes is fading fast. For starters, this audit work started over 2 years ago. Couple that with the fact that it is in connection with payments made in 2006. That is 5 years ago. With the passage of so much time, this has become essentially an academic exercise.

That is exactly why reports need to focus on current problems and why they must be completed promptly. That is exactly why this one, which took 16 months to complete, earned an F for timeliness, but otherwise was a pretty good audit.

The rest of the audits examined in my report card—98 in all, or 87 percent, of the total output for fiscal year 2010—were of poor quality and earned grades of D and F. These are primary examples of the kind of audits targeted in the Qwest Report previously referred to. That is an outside report. They had the Department of Defense bring them in to do so some investigating that is not questionable because they do not have an interest in what comes out. But these audits were not designed to detect fraud and waste. That is what the IG ought to be doing, following the money trail.

It happens they did not document and verify financial transactions. They were not on the money trail where they needed to be and where their audit manuals tell auditors to go to detect fraud and waste. They did not audit what truly needs to be audited. They had little or no monetary value or impact.

Some were mandated by Congress, including 27 memo-style audits of stimulus projects. That is from the stimulus act we passed here in 2009. Tiger Teams should have been formed to tackle these audits. Unfortunately the exact opposite happened. These were the worst of the worst. They contained no findings of any consequence. They offered few if any recommendations. Most did not even identify the costs of the project audited. The taxpayers were deeply concerned about the value of these so-called shovel-ready jobs that were supposed to be quickly consummated by the stimulus bill of 2009.

Taxpayers were looking for aggressive oversight. Taxpayers wanted assurances that huge sums of money were not wasted. Taxpayers got none of the objectives they sought. Instead of probing audits, the taxpayers got the equivalent of an inspector general stamp of approval, like a rubberstamp that reads, "OK, approved."

I will now review the worst report. It typifies the ineffectiveness and wastefulness of the bulk of the fiscal year 2010 audit production. I remind my colleagues, each one of these reports costs an estimated $800,000.

The report that received the lowest score is entitled by the auditor "Defense Contract Management Agency Acquisition Workforce for Southwest Asia." It received an F score in every category, across the board. The purpose of this report was to determine whether the Defense Contract Management Agency had adequate manpower to oversee contracts in southwest Asia. It concluded that the Defense Contract Management Agency was unable to determine those requirements and there was no plan for doing so. The report recommended that the Defense Contract Management Agency "define acquisition workforce requirements for southwest Asia."

This is one of many OIG policy reviews, but this one is unique in that it took 18 months to review a policy that did not even exist. This audit should have been terminated early on, but as the Qwest Report points out, the inspector general's office has no process "for stopping audits that are no longer relevant." So this is like a runaway train. What redeeming value did this report offer to the taxpayers? None that I can see. This is the stuff for a Department of Defense staff study, or some think tank analysis, not for an independent officer or inspector general audit.

This audit, like so many others like it, did not focus on fraud and waste and, not surprisingly, found no fraud or waste.

The Defense Contract Management Agency has a long history of exercising lax contract oversight. The Office of Inspector General resources would have been better spent auditing one of the Defense Contract Management Agency's $1.3 trillion in contracts. Go where the money is, if you want to find the fraud, follow the money.

The inclusion of individual report cards on the best and worst audits is meant to be a constructive educational exercise. So I am hoping the analysis accompanying these report cards will serve as a guide and a learning tool for auditors and managers alike.

I am hoping the auditors will read my report and use it to sharpen their skills. I hope it will help guide them on a path to reform and transformation. If the auditors adopt and follow the simple guidelines used to gauge the quality of the best or worst reports, they will begin producing top-quality audits that are fully aligned with the core IG's mission prescribed by that 1978 law.

Before wrapping up my comments I wish to call the attention of my colleagues to several very interesting charts presented in the final section of my report card. They appear in the chapter entitled "Comparative Performance with Other OIG Audit Offices." These two sets of charts highlight striking contrasts. They show the Department of Defense auditors are being significantly outperformed by their peers at three other agencies: the Department of Health and Human Services, Housing and Urban Development, and Homeland Security—and by very substantial margins indeed. Their peers may be five times more productive than they are at the Department of Defense, and able to produce audits at one-quarter of their costs.

I would offer one caveat of what I said about the other departments' IGs.

While I have reviewed comparisons of cost and productivity data from all four audit offices, I have not evaluated the quality of the other reports issued by the other three OIGs, meaning the Department of Health and Human Services, Department of Homeland Security, and Housing and Urban Development, as I did the report on quality of the Department of Defense report card. I believe it is a fair apples-to-apples comparison. It may not be. I want to say I do not know for sure.

Deputy IG of Auditing Mr. Blair needs to provide a satisfactory explanation for these apparent disparities. Otherwise he may need to hit the reset button once again on audit production and costs—as well as what he has said he is doing now. While Inspector General Heddell cannot be happy with an overall audit grade of D-minus, I think he understands the problem and I believe his heart is in the right place and he has taken the right steps to fix it. His apparent commitment to audit reform and Mr. Blair's promise to create "a modern, world-class" auditing oversight organization—those words happen to be music to my ears. They bode well for the future. In other words, they bode well for the future where, if these people do their job and do it right, fraud and waste will be rooted out and people would fear to commit it in the first place, considering the fact that people are going to be on their tail and find out about it.

For right now, though, I cannot report that I see sustained improvement in audit quality—not yet, not by a long shot. But the signals coming my way are good. I said that at the beginning of my comments. The ray of hope can be seen on the distant horizon. Maybe we will see it in the next batch of audits and I will be here to report to my colleagues what those audits show. I hope I can give every one of them Bs and As.

The 15 best reports show that the Department of Defense Office of Inspector General Audit Office is capable of producing quality reports. That number is obviously a drop in the bucket but these fine reports could be a solid foundation for building the future. Repeat them 10 times and Mr. Blair could well be on his way to creating that world-class auditing operation, one that would be capable of detecting—not only detecting but, because people are going to be so scared of them, that would be capable of detecting and deterring fraud and waste.

Before those lofty goals can be achieved, Mr. Heddell and Mr. Blair need to tear down some walls. I call them the top 10 audit roadblocks, and these roadblocks are these:

No. 1, top management lacks a clear and common vision of and commitment to the Inspector General's core mission, a problem that adversely affects every aspect of auditing;

No. 2, most audits are policy-compliant reviews that yield zero financial benefit to the taxpayers;

No. 3, auditors are not on the money trail 24-7, where they need to be to detect fraud and waste;

No. 4, auditors consistently fail to verify potential fraud and waste by connecting all the dots in the cycle of transactions. They need to match contract requirements with deliveries and payments using primary source documents. By making these matchups, auditors will be positioned to address key oversight questions such as: Did the government receive what it ordered at an agreed-upon price and schedule, or did the government get ripped off, and if so ripped off by how much money?

Roadblock No. 5, most audits take so long to complete that they are stale and irrelevant by the time they are published. Reasonable time-to-complete goals need to be set and the audit team then can be organized with the right skills, the skill sets to meet these goals.

Roadblock No. 6, until the Department of Defense accounting system is fixed, complex audits will require large audit teams if reports are to be completed within a reasonable length of time.

Roadblock No. 7, audit findings and recommendations are usually weak, responsible officials are rarely held accountable, and waste or stolen money is rarely recommended for recovery or returning to the Treasury.

Roadblock No. 8, while relentless followup is an important part of audit effectiveness, it is not practiced by the audit office.

The last roadblock, No. 9, since the Department of Defense broken accounting system is obstructing the audit process, contracts designed to fix that system need to be assigned a much higher audit priority.

These mighty barriers stand between all the promises and reality. IG Heddell and Deputy Blair must find a way to tear down these walls. Otherwise, audit reform and transformation will never happen. These unresolved issues will demand tenacious watchdogging by my oversight team and by all other oversight bodies as well, including the Committees on Armed Services and Appropriations. My oversight staff will keep reading and evaluating the Office of Inspector General audits until steady improvement is popping up on my oversight radar screen every day.

I yield the floor.

ECONOMIC RECOVERY

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, as Senators return to Washington this week, we do so amidst a crush of troubling news about the economy. In the past week alone, we have learned that home values across the country are still falling at a time when about one out of five homeowners already owes more on their home than that home is worth. Auto sales are down. Manufacturers are showing the weakest growth in nearly 2 years. And there is deep pessimism about the prospects of a recovery anytime soon. So while some in Washington have sought to kind of paper over the economic problems or offer weak assurances that a recovery is right around the corner, millions of Americans continue to suffer with no end in sight, and very few people are confident things will turn around anytime soon. It is no secret why.

For 2½ years, Democrats in Washington have paid lip service to the idea of job creation while pursuing an agenda that is radically opposed to it, and the results speak for themselves. They told us that if we borrowed $1 trillion and spent it, unemployment would rise above 8 percent. Mr. President, 2½ years later, unemployment is hovering above 9 percent—higher than when the stimulus was signed. They told us that if we spent trillions on a new health care entitlement, we would see health care costs go down. A year later, health care costs are expected to go up. They told us that if we spent money on things we didn't have, such as cash for clunkers, turtle tunnels, solar panels, and windmills—in other words, on more government—the recovery would take care of itself. And where has it gotten us? Well, last week a second rating agency threatened that if we do not get our fiscal house in order in a matter of weeks, America's stellar rating runs a serious risk of being downgraded. This is uncharted territory.

The warning signs are clear and urgent. Something must be done. The first step is to recognize how we got here. That is the easy part. The government-driven policies of the last 2½ years have clearly been a failure. The next step is getting Democrats in Washington to admit it, and that is the hard part. If the last few weeks have shown us anything, it is that Democrats in Washington are in a deep state of denial. We have seen their approach to all the warnings.

As signs of an economic catastrophe have gathered, Republicans have offered concrete proposals for creating jobs and growing the economy. We have offered multiple concrete budget proposals. We have offered specific plans for reining in the crushing cost of entitlements and for preserving them. Democrats have offered a 30-second campaign ad of someone pushing a grandmother off a cliff. As ratings agencies have sent up smoke signals about the catastrophic consequences of a potential default, Republicans have proposed plans that will rein in our deficit and debt and send a clear signal to taxpayers and the world that lawmakers in Washington have the will to live within our means. Democrats rushed to the White House and demanded that the President raise taxes. These past weeks should have been a wake-up call for Democrats. They sent it through to voicemail. More concerned about an election that is nearly 2½ years away, Democrats have ignored every single warning.

Americans look at all this, and they ask themselves a simple question: When will these guys get serious? Every light on the control panel is flashing red. Yet, amidst all the bad news this past Friday, the President heads out to Toledo to pat himself on the back for an auto bailout that is expected to cost taxpayers tens of billions of dollars. Nearly 14 million Americans are looking for jobs and can not find them. Yet the President, who acknowledges that free-trade agreements will create hundreds of thousands of new jobs, is now suddenly holding them hostage in exchange for even more government spending. American businesses want to expand and hire. Yet the White House has weighed them down with mountains of new regulations and costs, health care mandates, taxes, and conflicting signals about the future. American energy producers want to tap into our own resources. Yet the administration is blocking them at every turn. One of our Nation's biggest and proudest manufacturers wants to build a new factory that would employ thousands and solidify its reputation as an industry leader in the world. Yet the administration is standing in the way in order to help their union allies. Since when do businesses have to ask the President's permission to create jobs?

Most people know that when it comes to politicians, you should pay more attention to what they do than what they say. Never was this truer when it comes to Democrats in Washington today.

Just consider this. Three years ago, my good friend the majority leader issued a press release blasting the Bush administration on its approach to unemployment and debt. He called these figures a casualty of the administration's failed economic policies and a shameful legacy of the policies of the previous 8 years. At the time my friend the majority leader made that statement, unemployment was 5 percent and the national debt stood at $9.2 trillion.

Today, with unemployment above 9 percent and the debt at more than $14 trillion, Democrats are silent. They have no plan, no proposals, no sense of urgency. They run the White House and they run the Senate, and yet their entire approach is to sit back and wait—no budget, no plans, just wait for the next election; let Republicans offer solutions, and then we will attack them and pretend we care about jobs.

That is the game plan. Here is the problem. Unless one is a political consultant or just standing around waiting for a bailout, their plan won't do anything to create a single new job—not one—and it won't do anything to address the crisis we know is coming.

There is no excuse for inaction. That is why Republicans refuse to sit back and wait. Until these crises are met, until we see more jobs being created, until the American people begin to regain their confidence in this economy, then we will have to be out there proposing solutions, coming up with answers, and making our case. And we will keep at it until our Democratic friends finally start to focus on the battle for America's future instead of the battle over next year's election.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I would like to talk about two subjects briefly this afternoon. The first is the relatively bad news about unemployment in the country; the fact that the latest numbers are out and the country has not produced as many jobs as had been hoped for.

In fact, it added only 54,000 payroll jobs in May and thereby fell short of the 130,000 to 150,000 which are needed each month just to keep pace with population growth. So we lost ground. As a result, the unemployment rate has now gone back up to 9.1 percent.

It is not just the lack of jobs but also other economic news. Factory orders were down 1.2 percent in April, so we are not growing there. Interestingly, the Home Price Index, which is something very important in my State, the S&P Case-Schiller Home Price Index edged down .2 percent in March and is now 3.5 percent from this time a year ago.

All of these and other pieces of the news present a very bleak picture for economic recovery. One of the interesting commentators on this is Michael Barone, who is well known to most of us involved in political work. He had an interesting op-ed today in the Washington Examiner with the unfortunate title, "Obama Tunes Out, and Business Goes on Hiring Strike." The problem is, there is some information to back up the title of his piece. He is reflecting on government policies the last couple of years such as growing government spending as a percent of GDP, which has gone up from 21 percent to 25 percent.

So we have been expanding government borrowing and spending at the same time as the economy is depressed. That included the time in which the failed stimulus plan was supposed to have provided economic growth and job creation. It also included the time of the health care entitlement, the Dodd-Frank financial regulation bill, and so on. So let me quote from the piece. He said:

It is hard to avoid the conclusion that the threat of tax increases and increased regulatory burdens have produced something in the nature of a hiring strike.

In relation to the President's speech at George Washington University, where the President had sort of repackaged his Federal budget, Barone says:

The message to job creators was clear. Hire at your own risk. Higher taxes, more burdensome regulation, and crony capitalism may be here for some time to come.

I ask unanimous consent to have the article by Michael Barone dated June 6, 2011, printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NEW START TREATY

Mr. KYL. The other subject I would like to address today is news on a totally different front, but it is a subject that will be familiar to us from last December when the Senate argued the New START treaty and ultimately passed it. I am going to speak primarily about questions of missile defense cooperation with Russia, which was a big part of that discussion.

I wanted to first call attention to the fact that the Department of State released a fact sheet last Wednesday. It was entitled "New START Treaty Aggregate Numbers of Strategic Offense Arms"—a long title. But the statement from the State Department confirmed what we had argued during the time of this START debate and what I thought was pretty widely understood at the time, despite administration protestations to the contrary; namely that the New START treaty is perhaps the first bilateral treaty that resulted in U.S. unilateral reductions in nuclear forces.

As this fact sheet makes clear, Russia was already below the deployed strategic forces and deployed delivery vehicle limits of the treaty when we ratified the treaty. This is something we tried to point out. We said this is not a two-way street. Russia has already reduced its weapons below the levels called for in the treaty. The only country that will have to reduce levels from what currently exists is the United States. Now this information is confirmed by the State Department. Even the Arms Control Association recognized this when it posted on its blog recently, on June 1:

Why has Russia already met its obligations? Because Moscow was in the process of retiring older strategic missiles while the treaty was under negotiation.

Exactly correct. This fact should not be overlooked, especially not as the administration undertakes a review of the nuclear deployment guidance and targeting and deterrence doctrines, which are designed, or so the administration claims, to be "preparations for the next round of nuclear reductions." That is according to the President's National Security Adviser.

I worry that the next round may also be a unilateral round where the United States makes all of the concessions, as occurred under the New START treaty.

According to Gary Samore of the national security staff, at an Arms Control Association Conference, he said these may be "unilateral steps that the U.S. could take."

Obviously, that is something we would be concerned about if we are making unilateral concessions while the Russians make none. He made one other point at the Arms Control Association. He said:

We've reached the level in our forces where further reductions will raise questions about whether we retain the triad or whether we go to a system that is only a dyad. Those are important considerations. Reductions below the level that we have now are going to require some more fundamental questions about force structure.

When we speak of the triad or the dyad, remember the triad is the system we have had all throughout the Cold War that relies on a combination of ICBMs on land, submarine-based missiles at sea, and a bomber force that can deliver weapons from the air.

As Mr. Samore points out, if we reduce our weapons levels even further, we will probably reach a point where instead of all three systems, we will only have two. So I think it is clear we have reached a breaking point where further reductions will require significant changes to the U.S. nuclear deterrent and could presumably alter the commitments that the administration made to the Senate as to the modernization of deterrent.

During our debate on the START treaty, there were a lot of promises made about how we were going to retain the triad, and we were not going to eliminate further strategic weapons. Now those matters seem to be in doubt, and this is why, one of the reasons why, 41 Senators wrote to the President on March 22 and asked that the Senate be consulted about any further changes that the administration may choose to embark upon. And I want to be clear, it is a choice. There is no compelling justification to change the current U.S. nuclear posture. So this would be something the administration would be doing on its own.

But I am concerned that in the National Security Adviser's letter—responding to ours—on May 31 there was no reference to how the administration intended to keep the Senate involved as this process goes forward. I think it makes all the more clear the need to pass S. 1097, the New START Implementation Act, which provides, as one of its provisions, for the Congress to be consulted before any changes are made to the nuclear guidance.

I also look forward to an opportunity to discuss these matters with the President's nominee for Secretary of Defense, Mr. Leon Panetta. I will be curious to learn if he agrees with the 10-year commitments made to the Senate last year regarding the modernization of the nuclear deterrent, if he agrees with General Chilton who told the Senate that current levels of nuclear forces are exactly what is needed for deterrence, and also whether he agrees with Secretary Gates' recent comments at the American Enterprise Institute that nuclear modernization programs are absolutely critical.

So it was on the basis of the administration's commitments to our nuclear modernization program that some Senators agreed to support or to ratify the New START treaty.

Let me turn now to the question of missile defense. During the consideration of the New START treaty, many of us made the fundamental point that with respect to missile defense, there was no meeting of the minds between Russia and the United States.

While the administration insisted that there were no restrictions on missile defense, either legal or otherwise, the Russian side believed that "the linkage to missile defense is clearly spelled out in the accord and is legally binding." That was noted by Russian Foreign Minister Lavrov on April 6 of last year.

Of course, the administration was never willing to share with the Senate the negotiating record that the Russian negotiators obviously were aware of. Sharing the record with us might have cleared up just what understandings the Russians think they received during the negotiation of the treaty.

In order to secure Russian support for the New START treaty and assuage their misplaced concern about U.S. missile defense activities, the administration initiated talks with Russia to find common ground on missile defense cooperation, and it cancelled a third site deployment in Poland and the Czech Republic.

Or, as Under Secretary of State Ellen Tauscher characterized the purpose of missile defense cooperation in a speech of May 19, 2010: "to turn what has been an irritant to U.S.-Russian relations into a shared interest."

Although administration officials might deny this, I believe Russian officials were under the impression that in return for Russian support for New START, the United States would provide Russia not only the opportunity for missile defense technical cooperation, but that Russia would also play a role in defining future U.S. and NATO missile defense plans. Thus, President Medvedev told the Russian General Assembly in December 2010:

I'd like to speak plainly about the choice we face in the next ten years: either we reach an agreement on missile defense and create a meaningful joint mechanism for cooperation, or if we fail to do so, a new round of the arms race will begin and we will have to make decisions on the deployment of new strike weapons.

As it turns out, we didn't have long to wait until the Russians threatened this "choice." In response to the recently concluded U.S. and Romanian agreement to base SM-3 block TB missiles in Romania in 2015, President Medvedev has again threatened the U.S. and NATO with an arms race if these planned deployments go forward.

On May 18, 2011, President Medvedev told a gathering of journalists in Moscow that "if we don't [forge a missile defense cooperation model], we will have to take retaliatory measures, which we do not want to have to do. This will mean forcing the development of our strike nuclear potential."

Medvedev went on to reiterate a warning issued by the Foreign Ministry that Moscow may pull out of the new START disarmament agreement in response to the United States' position on missile defense.

This is precisely what many of us predicted would happen if we ratified the New START treaty in December. I didn't think it would happen quite so quickly.

This point was reiterated by President Medvedev following the recent G-8 summit in Deauville, France when he said, "We're wasting time . . . if we do not reach agreement by 2020, a new arms race will begin . . . I would like my partners to bear this in mind constantly."

The Russians are of one point of mind at the top of their leadership. They are threatening a new arms race. What they mean by that is, the United States reduces our capability to defend against missiles that could theoretically come from Russia.

Is this the reset in relationships the administration promised? Did they manage to reset our relationship right back to the dark days of the Cold War?

It appears from the comments of the President of the Russian Federation that this is precisely what happened.

The Russian Foreign Minister has further said Russia needed "legal assurances," that the proposed U.S. missile defense deployments were not aimed at Russian territory.

Presumably, even the administration would agree no such "legal assurance" can be made.

But, then again, could the administration include such an assurance in the Missile Defense Cooperation Agreement, MDCA, or the Defense Technology Cooperation Agreement, DTCA, the administration is discussing with the Russian Federation?

Again, no Senator nor Senate staffer has been able to see the document that the administration has shared with Russian counterparts. So, we are left to wonder.

Here we are, and the Senate, being part of the American Government, isn't even privy to what our administration is talking to the Russians about—matters on which eventually the administration is likely to seek our consent to. Remember, the Constitution provides for Senate advice and consent. What I have said before is if the Senate is to give its consent, we need an opportunity to provide some advice before the administration negotiates its agreements with Russia.

Why not share these documents with the Senate—and the House—and remove any cause for concern, if, in fact, there is none?

I also note Russian President Medvedev has sent a letter to the NATO-Russia Counsel outlining Moscow's position on a common missile defense system—which differs significantly from NATO's conception of two independently operated missile defense systems sharing some form of early warning data. These are two very different things.

And, it is not as if Members of Congress have been ambiguous about our concerns.

Following a 14 April letter to the President signed by 39 Senators, 4 Senators met with Senior Defense and State Department officials on May 15 to again express our concerns about sharing sensitive missile defense technical and sensor data with the Russians, and to better understand the content and legal authority of the draft Defense Technology Cooperation Agreement and Missile Defense Cooperation Agreement being discussed with the Russians.

Moreover, the House Armed Services Committee just incorporated the New START Implementation Act into its version of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2012, as well as the amendment offered by Representative BROOKS that will prohibit the sharing of sensitive missile defense technology and data.

How will the United States and NATO respond to this latest Russian intimidation?

Will NATO alter its plans to accommodate the Russian objective of a "sectoral" defense system?

Will the United States and NATO curtail deployment of phases III and IV of the European Phased Adaptive Approach? Phase IV is, of course, still just a paper missile, not something we developed, but it is part of our ultimate plan.

Will the United States agree to share sensitive information or technology with Russia for the sake of a missile defense agreement?

The administration informs us that these Russian threats are mere rhetoric, associated more with the upcoming presidential elections in Russia than with any true threats. And that Russia will not pull out of New START or begin a new arms race in response to U.S. missile defense plans. The administration assures us the United States will not alter its missile defense plans to accommodate Russian concerns.

Nevertheless, the Congress needs better insight into administration plans for missile defense cooperation and missile defense talks with Russia than has thus far been the case.

At the very outset, the administration created a separate venue from New START to discuss missile defense cooperation with Russia—this was the so-called Tauscher-Ryabkov track; despite repeated inquiries from Congress, the administration still refuses to provide meaningful details about the nature of these discussions.

Likewise, we are interested to know where the administration will recommend basing a new missile defense early-warning radar, called a TYPY-2 radar. Will it put the radar in the Caucasus, as the Bush administration planned to do, or will it seek instead to base the radar in a location less advantageous to the missile defense of the United States homeland, but more acceptable to the Russians—even if that means that an ally like Israel will be denied access to the data generated, by the radar, as Turkey has said it requires?

To this end, and as I referenced earlier, 39 Senators sent a letter to the President on April 14 to inquire whether, contrary to the President's December 18, 2010 letter, we will make our missile defense decisions "regardless of Russia's actions."

The letter expresses serious concerns about reports the administration may provide Russia with access to sensitive satellite data and U.S. hit-to-kill missile defense technology, and urges the administration to share with Congress the materials on U.S. missile defense cooperation that have been provided, or will shortly be provided, to the Russian government. We still await these materials.

Lastly, the administration owes Senators information about what national security staff member Michael McFaul, whom I understand has been recently nominated by the President to be the U.S. Ambassador to Russia, meant when he briefed the press on May 26 that "we got a new signal on missile defense cooperation that as soon as I'm done here I'll be engaging on that with the rest of the U.S. government."

I am concerned that my staff asked the National Security staff about this almost a week ago and have heard nothing back.

I hope to hear back from the administration soon, especially if the administration expects the Senate to act promptly on Mr. McFaul's nomination.

Mr. President I am deeply skeptical about the course the United States and Russia are on concerning missile defense.

I think it should be abundantly clear that Senators and House Members will be paying very close attention to the development and deployment of the European phased adaptive approach to make sure it is done in a manner consistent with the security of the United States, without consideration to Russian "understanding" of what they think has been agreed to between the United States and Russia.

I will be working with my House colleagues to ensure that it is very clear that the United States will accept no limitations on its missile defenses. But I note, as I said at the outset, it is interesting that things that were told to us at the time the Senate was debating the New START agreement have turned out not to be true, just as many of us predicted, starting with the proposition that the United States would be drawing our weapons down while Russia would not. It turns out that is what happened because the Russians were already at the level they negotiated us down to.

So the question is, What did we get for our unilateral concessions? It appears to me that the only thing we got is an understanding by Russia that they are also going to be able to talk us down from our missile defense plans that could protect both the United States and allies in Europe or that as an alternative Russians would be part of a cooperative missile defense program which would, of necessity, require the sharing of economic data that would be inimical to the U.S. national interests.

I express these concerns in the hope that we can receive information from the administration that might allay our concerns, persuade us that it is not involved right now in negotiations, in effect, behind the Senate's back, and the best way to assure us is to share the information with us that we requested in letters we sent previously. I hope the administration will, next time it asks for our consent, be able to say it had already asked for our advice because I am afraid, if it does not, the Senate is much less likely to provide its consent to any agreements that might be submitted.

OBAMA TUNES OUT, AND BUSINESS GOES ON HIRING STRIKE

(By Michael Barone)

Last week, I noted that various forms of the word "unexpected" almost inevitably appeared in news stories about unfavorable economic developments.

You can find them again in stories about Friday's shocking news, that only 54,000 net new jobs were created in the month of May and that unemployment rose to 9.1 percent.

But with news that bad, maybe bad economic numbers will no longer be "unexpected." You can only expect a robust economic recovery for so long before you figure out, as Herbert Hoover eventually did, that it is not around the corner.

Exogenous factors explain some part of the current economic stagnation. The earthquake and tsunami in Japan caused a slowdown in manufacturing. Horrendous tornadoes did not help. Nor did bad weather, though only a few still bitterly cling to the theory that it's caused by manmade global warming.

But poor public policy is surely one reason why the American economy has not rebounded from recession as it has in the past. And political posturing has also played a major role.

Barack Obama and the Democratic congressional supermajorities of 2009-10 raised federal spending from 21 percent to 25 percent of gross domestic product. Their stimulus package stopped layoffs of public employees for a while, even as private sector payrolls plummeted.

And the Obama Democrats piled further burdens on would-be employers in the private sector. Obamacare and the Dodd-Frank financial regulation bill are scheduled to be followed by thousands of regulations that will impose impossible-to-estimate costs on the economy.

That seems to have led to a hiring freeze. The Obama Democrats can reasonably claim not to be responsible for the huge number of layoffs that occurred in the months following the financial crisis of fall 2008. And Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner and Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke did manage to help stabilize financial markets.

But while the number of layoffs is now vastly less than in the first half of 2009, the number of new hires has not increased appreciably. Many more people have been unemployed for longer periods than in previous recessions, and many more have stopped looking for work altogether.

It's hard to avoid the conclusion that the threat of tax increases and increased regulatory burdens have produced something in the nature of a hiring strike.

And then there is the political posturing. On April 13, Barack Obama delivered a ballyhooed speech at George Washington University. The man who conservatives as well as liberal pundits told us was a combination of Edmund Burke and Reinhold Niebuhr was widely expected to present a serious plan to address the budget deficits and entitlement spending.

Instead, the man who can call on talented career professionals at the Office of Management and Budget to produce detailed blueprints gave us something in the nature of a few numbers scrawled on a paper napkin.

The man depicted as pragmatic and free of ideological cant indulged in cheap political rhetoric, accusing Republicans, including House Budget Committee Chairman Paul Ryan, who was in the audience, of pushing old ladies in wheelchairs down the hill and starving autistic children.

The signal was clear. Obama had already ignored his own deficit reduction commission in preparing his annual budget, which was later rejected 97-0 in the Senate. Now he was signaling that the time for governing was over and that he was entering campaign mode 19 months before the November 2012 election.

People took notice, especially those people who decide whether to hire or not. Goldman Sachs' Current Activity Indicator stood at 4.2 percent in March. In April—in the middle of which came Obama's GW speech—it was 1.6 percent. For May, it is 1.0 percent.

"That is a major drop in no time at all," wrote Business Insider's Joe Weisenthal.

After April 13, Obama Democrats went into campaign mode. They staged a poll-driven Senate vote to increase taxes on oil companies.

They launched a Mediscare campaign against Ryan's budget resolution that all but four House Republicans had voted for. That seemed to pay off with a special election victory in the New York 26th congressional district.

The message to job creators was clear. Hire at your own risk. Higher taxes, more burdensome regulation and crony capitalism may be here for some time to come.

One possible upside is that economic bad news may no longer be "unexpected." Another is that voters may figure out what is going on.

Mr. KYL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLUMENTHAL). The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the cloture motion with respect to the Verrilli nomination be withdrawn, and at 5:30 p.m. the Senate proceed to vote, without intervening action or debate, on Calendar No. 118, the motion to reconsider be considered made and laid on the table, with no intervening action or debate; that no further motions be in order with respect to the nomination; that any statements related to the nomination be printed in the RECORD; that the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action and the Senate then resume legislative session, with the other provisions of the May 26 unanimous consent agreement remaining in effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

NOMINATION OF DONALD B. VERRILLI, JR., TO BE SOLICITOR GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will proceed to executive session to consider the following nomination, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Donald B. Verrilli, Jr., of the District of Columbia, to be Solicitor General of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time until 5:30 will be equally divided.

The Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I don't believe there is going to be a huge number of people lined up to speak on this nomination, but I will first use part of my reserve time on the Verrilli nomination to speak of another matter within the purview of the Judiciary. So I ask unanimous consent, with the time being charged to my half hour, that I be recognized to speak as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

JUDGE RICHARD LINN

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, on the first day of this millennium, January 1, 2000, the newest Federal judge, and the first of the millennium, was sworn in. Richard Linn became a member of the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals at the stroke of midnight, standing in the Federal Circuit's courthouse, with a view of the Washington Monument lit behind him, and the oath being administered by Chief Judge H.R. Mayer.

President Clinton had been told of the hundreds of nominations he would make during his Presidency, one he would never regret would be that of Judge Linn. How true that prediction. Judge Linn has brought dignity, expertise, and judicial excellence that could set the model for all our Federal courts. His calm but brilliant analyses of our most complex intellectual property cases reflect the extensive experience he had before going on the bench. This experience now benefits all Americans.

My wife Marcelle and I and our children have been privileged to have known Dick and Patti Linn for over a generation, as well as their wonderful daughters, Debbie and Sandy, and all their family. This weekend, their children, son-in-law Erik, and grandchildren, Jaret and Dakota, as well as other members of their family, will gather to unveil a portrait of Judge Linn. I hope that as people visit the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals building or are there on business, that they will pause and look. It will give them a chance to see the face of justice and a man I admire greatly.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we go back on the matter before us, with the time still being reserved to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. I thank the majority leader and the Republican leader for reaching an agreement for the Senate to debate and vote on the nomination of Don Verrilli to be Solicitor General of the United States. By doing so, we were able to vitiate the cloture motion and avoid another unnecessary filibuster. Had agreement not been reached, this would have been the first filibuster in history of a Solicitor General nomination.

Mr. Verrilli is by all accounts one of the finest lawyers in the country, whose extensive experience as an advocate for a wide variety of clients will serve him well as Solicitor General, the top advocate for the United States. In a long and distinguished career, Mr. Verrilli has argued numerous cases before the Supreme Court, Federal appeals courts and State appellate courts. He clerked for Judge J. Skelly Wright on the DC Circuit and for Justice William Brennan on the U.S. Supreme Court. Mr. Verrilli's impressive breadth of experience both in Government and in private practice led the Judiciary Committee to report his nomination by a vote of 17-1 nearly a month ago. Seven of the eight Republican members of the committee joined in supporting Mr. Verrilli's nomination.

The Judiciary Committee heard from many respected lawyers from across the political spectrum in support for Mr. Verrilli's nomination. Eight former Solicitors General from both Republican and Democratic administrations, among them Republicans Charles Fried, Kenneth Starr, Ted Olson, Paul Clement and Gregory Garre, concluded: "Mr. Verrilli is ideally suited to carry out the crucial tasks assigned to the Solicitor General and to maintain the traditions of the Office of the Solicitor General."

More than 50 prominent Supreme Court practitioners urged the Senate to confirm Mr. Verrilli's nomination, including conservatives like Maureen Mahoney, Peter Keisler, and Miguel Estrada. They wrote:

Don's approach to practicing law throughout his career—his meticulousness in understanding and presenting facts accurately and his insistence on coherently laying out reasons for the positions he is urging—proves beyond question that Don will protect and promote the rule of law.

I will ask that copies of the letters in support be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Don Verrilli is exactly the kind of superbly qualified, serious professional we should be encouraging to serve the American people in their government. I expect that he will be confirmed by a strong bipartisan majority of the Senate.

Like all of the nominations reported by the Judiciary Committee and pending on the Senate's Executive Calendar, Mr. Verrilli's nomination has been through the Judiciary Committee's fair and thorough process. We reviewed extensive background material on his nomination. All Senators on the committee, Democratic and Republican, had the opportunity to ask him questions at a live hearing. All Senators had the opportunity to meet with Mr. Verrilli individually, as well. Many also took advantage of the opportunity to ask him questions in writing following the hearing.

We then debated and voted on his nomination. I thank the members of the committee for their work, consideration and judgment. Many cited their meetings with Mr. Verrilli and his serious and thoughtful answers to hundreds of written questions for the record as a basis for their support of his nomination. The result of the process was that Senators, having raised whatever concerns they had and whatever differences they have with the policies of the Obama administration, voted nearly unanimously in favor of confirming Mr. Verrilli based on his qualifications, experience and appreciation for the responsibilities of the Solicitor General.

I appreciate the effort made by the Republican members of the Judiciary Committee in considering the Verrilli nomination on its merits and voting to support him, with one exception. I appreciated the thoughtful statement by the ranking Republican at our markup, nearly 1 month ago, in which he set forth his concerns and the painstaking process he followed to evaluate the nomination and his judgment to support him. Senator GRASSLEY attended the hearing, met personally with the nominee, and engaged in extensive written questioning, as well. In his statement he commended Mr. Verrilli "for his serious approach to the task of providing responses" and for his "thoughtful answers." After that rigorous process, Senator GRASSLEY became more comfortable that Mr. Verrilli "understands the duty of the Solicitor General." He emphasized that Mr. Verrilli had made clear to him that "he would not lend his name or that of the office to carrying out any order which he believed to be based upon partisan political considerations or other illegitimate reasons" and that rather than do so, he would resign from office. Senator GRASSLEY concluded that he has "every expectation that Mr. Verrilli, if confirmed, will honorably live up to his duties, obligations, and assurances."

The committee process left no doubt that Mr. Verrilli has an extensive knowledge of the law and an understanding of the independence required to represent the interests of the government and the American people as the Solicitor General of the United States. He is well qualified and well suited to serve in the role of what is often called "the tenth Justice."

The Senate has a longstanding practice of giving deference to the President to make nominations for positions in the executive branch. However, as we have seen with more and more of President Obama's nominations, Senate Republicans have dramatically departed from our Senate standards. This does great harm to the interests of the American people, the ability of good people to serve, the capacity of the government to fulfill its responsibilities and the proper functioning of the Senate. Subjecting consensus nominees to unnecessary and damaging delays and unjustified and harmful filibusters is wrong. I am glad the Senate leaders have been able to come to agreement to avoid the threatened filibuster of this qualified nominee to serve as Solicitor General of the United States.

Before the Memorial Day recess, the Senate should have confirmed the nomination of Lisa Monaco to be the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the National Security Division at the Justice Department. That is a key national security position. The Judiciary Committee held a hearing on Ms. Monaco's nomination in April and reported her nomination unanimously in early May. Her nomination has since been considered by the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence at an additional hearing and was reported unanimously by that committee, as well, nearly 2 weeks ago. After such a thorough process, there is no doubt that President Obama has made a first-rate choice to fill this very critical national security position. The value of Ms. Monaco's wealth of experience and institutional knowledge has been supported by the many former Justice Department officials who have written in support of her nomination, including former Attorney General Mukasey, who served during the President George W. Bush administration. Without cause or explanation, the Republican leadership still has not consented to a vote on this important national security nomination.

Even more egregious is the unprecedented filibuster of the nomination of Jim Cole to be Deputy Attorney General, the No. 2 position at the Justice Department also with key national security responsibilities. There is no excuse or justification for the continued failure to act on Mr. Cole's nomination to fill this critical position. It was blocked last year when it was pending for 5 months in the Senate. The nomination was reported favorably by the Judiciary Committee again in March, and incredibly, has been filibustered for another 10 weeks while the country faces concerns about terrorism in the aftermath of the President's successful operation against al-Qaida and Osama bin Laden. It is hard for me to understand how, at a time when experts are concerned that al-Qaida will seek reprisals, the Senate has not acted to ensure that President Obama has his full national security team in place. Instead, Senate Republicans have chosen to delay action on those nominations and to seek to use them as leverage against the administration.

I have urged Senate Republicans to reject this partisan approach and to come together to work with our President to keep America safe. In the aftermath of 9/11, we expedited law enforcement nominations, confirming an additional 58 officials to posts at the Justice Department before the end of 2001. We should have done the same with the nominations of Lisa Monaco and Jim Cole. We should treat Mr. Cole's nomination with the same urgency and seriousness with which we treated all four of the Deputy Attorneys General who served under President Bush. All four were confirmed by the Senate by voice vote an average of 21 days after they were reported by the Judiciary Committee. No Deputy Attorney General nomination has ever been subjected to a filibuster before. It is wrong and should end.

I am confident that Mr. Verrilli's qualifications, experience, ability, temperament and judgment will lead to an overwhelming bipartisan vote in support of his confirmation to serve as the next Solicitor General of the United States.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD copies of the letters to which I referred.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 8, 2011.

Re Nomination of Donald Verrilli as Solicitor General.

Hon. PATRICK J. LEAHY,
Chairman, U.S. Senate Committee on the Judiciary, Washington, DC.

Hon. CHARLES E. GRASSLEY,
Ranking Member, U.S. Senate Committee on the Judiciary, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN LEAHY AND RANKING MEMBER GRASSLEY: We write in enthusiastic support of the nomination of Don Verrilli to become the next Solicitor General of the United States. We write as lawyers who are deeply familiar both with the work of the Solicitor General and with Don's own work and character. Some of us have worked jointly with Don, some of us have appeared opposite him in cases, all of us have seen his work. We believe that Don is ideally suited to carry out the crucial tasks assigned to the Solicitor General, chiefly the representation of the United States in the Supreme Court, and to maintain the traditions of the office that the Solicitor General leads. We urge the Senate to confirm him as Solicitor General.

With experience representing a wide variety of clients, and several years serving the United States from within the government at its highest levels, Don is unusually experienced in the vast range of legal issues over which the Solicitor General is responsible on behalf of the United States. He is a quick study, careful listener, and acute judge of legal arguments. He is a masterful writer and oral advocate who knows the importance of clarity, candor, vigor, and responsiveness. The array of departments and agencies the Solicitor General represents, the Congress that enacts the laws being executed, and ultimately the Supreme Court in the performance of its functions all rely on these qualities in a Solicitor General, and all would be well served by Don Verrilli in that position.

As important, the successful functioning of the Solicitor General's office requires an ability to see the effects of particular arguments on the overall interests of the United States, both across agencies and over the long term. Shaping arguments to respect those interests, and to protect the special credibility the office has acquired over the decades of its existence, while maintaining clarity and force in presentations, demands the whole range of knowledge, intelligence, judgment, and other capacities that Don has in abundance. More generally, the rule of law depends on a consistent commitment to reason in the unfolding of legal principles. Don's approach to practicing law throughout his career—his meticulousness in understanding and presenting facts accurately and his insistence on coherently laying out reasons for the positions he is urging—proves beyond question that Don will protect and promote the rule of law.

Finally, Don has a deeply ingrained habit of civility. Not only in court, but in private interactions, with co-counsel, colleagues, and lawyers who are adverse to his clients, Don maintains his equanimity and politeness and engages in calm, reason-based discussion. His character will serve the highest traditions of the Solicitor General's office.

We expect that the Senate, after full inquiry, will see all the virtues we know from firsthand experience that Don possesses. He is the consummate professional, and we hope that the Senate will confirm Don promptly to serve as the Solicitor General.

Sincerely,

RICHARD G. TARANTO,

Re Nomination of Donald B. Verrilli Jr. for the Position of Solicitor General.

HON. PATRICK J. LEAHY,
Chairman,

HON. CHARLES GRASSLEY, Ranking Member,
U.S. Senate Committee on the Judiciary,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN LEAHY AND RANKING MEMBER GRASSLEY: We have served as Solicitors General in the administrations of Presidents Ronald Reagan, George H.W. Bush, William Clinton, and George W. Bush. We write in strong support of the nomination of Donald Verrilli to become Solicitor General of the United States.

Some of us have worked alongside Mr. Verrilli as co-counsel; some of us have appeared opposite him in cases; all of us are familiar with his work, his demeanor, and his well-deserved reputation as a leading member of the Supreme Court bar. We believe Mr. Verrilli is ideally suited to carry out the crucial tasks assigned to the Solicitor General and to maintain the traditions of the Office the Solicitor General.

Mr. Verrilli's long experience representing a wide array of clients, in combination with his recent experience serving in senior positions in government, render him particularly well qualified to address the range of legal issues over which the Solicitor General is responsible on behalf of the United States. His well-deserved, stellar reputation as both a writer and oral advocate, and his deeply ingrained civility and dedication to the rule of law will well serve all three branches of government. We wholeheartedly endorse his confirmation.

Respectfully,

SETH P. WAXMAN

For:

Charles Fried (1985-1989).
Kenneth W. Starr (1989-1993).
Drew S. Days III (1993-1996).
Walter E. Dellinger III (1996-1997).
Seth P. Waxman (1997-2001).
Theodore B. Olson (2001-2004).
Paul D. Clement (2004-2008).
Gregory G. Garre (2008-2009).

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I will vote to confirm Donald B. Verrilli, Jr., to be Solicitor General of the United States, but I do so with little enthusiasm. Mr. Verrilli has impressive credentials and noteworthy accomplishments. In addition to his government service in the White House Counsel's Office and at the Department of Justice, he has been a litigator in private practice for more than 20 years. He has argued 12 cases, and participated in more than 100 cases, before the Supreme Court of the United States. Mr. Verrilli served for over 15 years as an adjunct professor of constitutional law at the Georgetown University Law Center. He clerked for Associate Justice William J. Brennan, Jr., of the U.S. Supreme Court, and Judge J. Skelly Wright of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

My concern with this nomination is whether or not the nominee will demonstrate appropriate independence in the office. His testimony at his hearing raised doubts about his ability and commitment to uphold that principle. Mr. Verrilli seemed to buy into the notion that he was still the President's lawyer. He gave lip service to the two traditional exceptions to the Solicitor General defending a statute—first, if the statute violates separation of powers by infringing on the President's constitutional authority; and second, if there is no reasonable argument that can be advanced in defense of the statute. Mr. Verrilli then appeared to create a third exception one that is not supported by practice or tradition. He stated he would defend a statute's constitutionality “unless instructed by my superior not to do so.”

This position advocated by the nominee—that interference in the rule of law, by the President or by the Attorney General, is an appropriate reason not to defend statutes—was extremely troubling to me and other members of the committee. That position is not the standard of the office. It is not what the Nation expects from its Solicitor General. His response gave me great pause about supporting his nomination.

Following his hearing, I gave Mr. Verrilli ample opportunity to address my concerns. In extensive written questions I asked the nominee to review and comment on testimony given by previous Solicitor General nominees. In particular, I asked many questions regarding statements by prior Solicitors General regarding the independence of the office. I asked him to review cases where the Department of Justice had made a determination not to defend a statute. I asked him to analyze those cases as to the rationale for not defending the statute. In addition, I asked him to review and comment on a number of Supreme Court cases that address serious constitutional issues.

I reviewed his answers to my written questions for the record. I commend Mr. Verrilli for his serious approach to the task of providing responses. In most cases he gave thoughtful answers. In many instances he declined to provide his views on the topic but gave general assertions that he would follow the law. In other instances he claimed confidentiality. I do not agree with his assertion of confidentiality in most of the instances where he raised that as a basis for not responding. In other circumstances, such a response would be unacceptable. In the past, such responses, or allegations of similar responses, have resulted in a failed confirmation or withdrawal of the nomination.

Based upon my review of his responses, I am more comfortable with the notion that Mr. Verrilli understands the duty of the Solicitor General. I believe, because of my questions and the time he spent contemplating the issues, he will be a better Solicitor General than he otherwise would have been. Mr. Verrilli has been exposed to decades of thought and experience by this review. On the whole, I concluded that Mr. Verrilli now has a greater sensitivity to the necessity of independence in the office. In numerous answers he provided a much better response than he did at his hearing. He indicated he would not lend his name or that of the office to carry out any order which he believed to be based on partisan political consideration or other illegitimate reasons. Rather than do so, he said he would resign from office. I will hold him to that pledge.

I want to be clear about my tepid support for Mr. Verrilli. He is nominated to an executive branch position, not a lifetime appointment. My lukewarm support is based largely on the nature of the office to which he will be appointed, if confirmed.

I will put the administration on notice, as well as Mr. Verrilli, the Senate, the media, and any other interested party. My less than enthusiastic vote for Mr. Verrilli to be Solicitor General of the United States is limited to that office alone. No entity or individual should presume my support for Mr. Verrilli for any other future office to which he may aspire or to which he may be nominated—be it in the executive, judicial, or legislative branch of government.

Furthermore, as ranking member of the Judiciary Committee, I will vigorously carry out my oversight responsibilities to ensure the Solicitor General and his subordinates are performing as they should. I will be watching to make certain Mr. Verrilli complies with his oath of office, with his obligation to the Constitution and statutes of the United States, with his duties of the office, and with the assurances he has given the Senate in his oral and written testimony. I expect nothing less from all officials of government. I have every expectation that Mr. Verrilli, if confirmed, will honorably live up to those duties, obligations, and assurances.

TENNESSEE TORNADOES

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. President, on Wednesday I traveled to Greene and Washington Counties in Upper East Tennessee—up near Virginia and North Carolina—to visit with the victims of tornadoes that swept across our State on April 27 and to see firsthand how the recovery is going.

What I found was what I expected to find. In Washington County and Greene County, the citizens are not complaining. They are cleaning up, and they are helping each other. I also found out there are some things that still need to be ironed out, but so far the recovery from a devastating disaster is going well in East Tennessee. The real work is being done by people affected by those storms and by volunteers, and I think it says that Tennesseans are doing what Tennesseans usually do.

I first met with Alan Broyles, who is the mayor of Greene County, and Bill Brown, who is director of Greene County's Emergency Management and Homeland Security Agency. Seven people lost their lives in Greene County. We visited the Camp Creek and the Horse Creek communities. We saw many of the homes that have been completely leveled, and debris was still being removed. We saw one home where a couple—the Harrisons had been helping neighbors into their basement when the tornadoes swept through and killed both Mr. and Mrs. Harrison, but spared the lives of the neighbors in the basement. There were two crosses there next to what was left of the basement structure of the home.

At the Camp Creek Elementary School where FEMA has set up a disaster recovery center, I met Pamela Ward and her mother-in-law, Betty Ward. Mrs. Ward's home had been completely destroyed by the tornado, and her husband Kevin and their three daughters were staying in a hotel after discovering that the insurance on their home only paid off their mortgage. Mr. Brown and Q. Winfield, who is FEMA's Federal Coordinating Officer for Tennessee, immediately began working to help the Wards. By the next day, Mr. Winfield had called to let me know that FEMA had approved the maximum award to help Pamela Ward and her family get back on their feet.

I also visited Washington County, where I met with Dan Eldridge, who is the mayor of the county, as well as local emergency management officials and families affected by the disaster. One resident was killed in a tornado that touched down in Washington County. Hundreds of homes were damaged. However, it was clear that families and volunteers had been hard at work putting their community back together. Rebuilding had begun, and the debris had already been removed in many areas.

FEMA is doing an excellent job working with State and local officials, but the generosity of the volunteers and the entire community working in a collective way with the churches to help families get back on their feet is an amazing sight. It is still very important for victims to register with FEMA by calling 1-800-321-FEMA (3362). Families are also eligible for other forms of disaster assistance, including loans from the Small Business Administration and unemployment and food stamp benefits. While we cannot make these families whole, there are people who still need help, and we have to make sure they know help is available. I want to make sure that whatever the Federal Government is able to do, it is doing.

Over the past year, Tennessee has experienced disasters of historic proportions. We know very well we are not the only State or the only community where this has happened. Beginning with the 1,000-year flood that struck middle and west Tennessee last May, to the devastating tornado outbreak and river flooding this year in both the eastern and western parts of our State, 74 of Tennessee's 95 counties are currently Presidentially declared disaster areas. Thousands of people are still recovering, and many are only just beginning to put their lives back together. In spite of everything this past year has thrown at us, Tennesseans are going about their business helping themselves and helping others in remarkable and inspiring ways.

Mr. President, I yield the floor, and I note the absence of a quorum.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

MR. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE ECONOMY

MR. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I wish to share a few thoughts about the state of the American economy and the lack of effectiveness of this Congress in confronting it—in particular, the lack of the leadership of the U.S. Senate to deal with the crisis we are facing both economically and financially as part of our economic condition. We can't separate those two.

The leading economic indicators are not good. Last week, we were pummeled with a series of reports that were bad news. The numbers continue to be disturbing, actually. The share of our population that is employed today declined to 58.4 percent—the lowest level since 1983. So the percentage of people working today is the lowest we have had since 1983.

The May jobs report that just came in fell well short of projections. The consensus view of economists was for a gain of 165,000 jobs, but, in fact, we gained 111,000 fewer than that. We had a very low job creation month, and it marks the worst jobs report in 8 months. Everybody is saying things are getting better and jobs are getting better, but this is a wake-up call. The numbers have not been strong. They have actually been very fragile. The jobs have to increase about 180,000 a month to actually stay level, and to begin to increase, we have to be above that. To reduce our unemployment rate, it has to be above 180,000. So we were far below that this month.

The percentage of people who are long-term unemployed—who have been unemployed for 27 weeks or more—jumped nearly 2 percentage points to 45.1. The unemployment rate increased to 9.1 percent from 9 percent. However, the unemployment rate does not take into account those who are underemployed or who may have become discouraged. That is why we have such a low percentage of people working. Many are discouraged and have given up looking for work.

Since its peak of 12,800, the Dow Jones Industrial Average is down now 698 points or more than 5 percent over the last month. I believe this is the sixth consecutive week the Dow has declined.

Consumer confidence is also deteriorating. The Consumer Confidence Survey is down 12 points from its peak in February. It has been steadily going downward. Consumer expectations about the future are even worse, falling more than 20 points in the last 3 months, from 97.5 to 75.2. The last time we experienced a 3-month drop in consumer confidence of more than 20 points was March 2008, during the heart of the great recession.

The Misery Index, which combines the unemployment rate with the 1-year change in inflation growth, hit 12.2 percent, the highest level in a year.

Those are grim statistics. Indeed, I am looking at Barron's and a lead editorial by Mr. Abelson in today's issue. This is something he expressed unease about, very serious concern, in his lead column for the Barron's publication. He quotes a report from the Liscio Report, Philippa Dunne and Doug Henwood, and he quoted from their analysis:

More than a little shocking to Philippa and Doug, and to us as well—

Referring to himself—

is that private employment today is 2 percent below where it stood 10 years ago and, as they've noted before, job loss over a 10-year period is unprecedented.

In other words, over 10 years we have 2 percent fewer people working in the private sector—the first time we have ever identified a 10-year period in our history—and he goes back to 1890—that we have actually seen a decline in employment over 10 years.

It continues:

So far, they point out somewhat grimly, "We've regained just 1.8 million jobs lost in the Great Recession and its aftermath, or about one out of every five that have been lost.

So we only recovered about one in five of the jobs. We have been reading that job growth is out there, but it hasn't been much. It has been anemic, and so has been GDP growth.

He goes on to note that "the number of folks out of work increased by 167,000 and a goodly number of those—44.6 percent, to be precise—have been unemployed for 27 weeks or longer, within crying distance of an all-time high. The average stay in the ranks of the jobless has reached the longest in the postwar period." That is World War II. So that is the longest time we have gone with almost half the people being unemployed for at least 27 weeks. So it is not a good situation.

We have tried. The Federal Reserve has tried. The Congress rammed through a stimulus bill that didn't work. I felt it wouldn't work, and I explained why at that time, but it passed anyway, adding almost $800 billion, $900 billion to the total debt of our country, and every penny of that was borrowed. It has not worked. But we will pay interest on it.

Last year, our highway spending was about $40 billion. The interest on that stimulus bill will be almost that much unless we find some way to start paying down our debt. And there is no plan on the table to reduce our debt in the immediate future. That is for sure.

So what would I say about where we are today? I believe this Congress cannot justify having created a financial situation in which 40 cents of every $1 we spend is borrowed. We take in $2.2 trillion, and we are spending $3.7 trillion. Every economist has told us in the Budget Committee—I am the ranking Republican there—this is unsustainable.

President Bush's highest deficit was too high: $450 billion. Under the first 2 years of President Obama, we have had $1.2 trillion and $1.3 trillion added to the debt, and this year, on September 30, we expect $1.5 trillion to be added to our debt. We will have doubled the entire debt of the United States under 4 years of his leadership.

His budget he submitted to us earlier this year makes the situation worse. If you take the basic trajectory of the Congressional Budget Office, the President's budget, even though it raises taxes, raises spending more and actually puts us on a more unsustainable path than otherwise would be the case. Over the 10-year budget he proposes, the lowest single deficit is $748 billion, and it is going up to around $1 trillion in the 10th year. These are systemic, unsustainable deficits, and they have to be confronted.

We have to reduce spending. Everybody knows that. But we are not willing to do so. The Democratic leader, when we had the continuing resolution and we had the debate over how much to spend the rest of this fiscal year, proposed a $4 billion reduction in spending. And our deficit will be $1,500 billion this year. He proposed to cut $4 billion in this year's continuing resolution. After much fight—and the House had passed $60 billion or $70 billion in spending reductions through the rest of the year—the Senate finally, under the Democratic leaders here, got it down to $38 billion, I believe.

We are not facing up to reality. So what do you do? The Fed has cut interest rates to zero. We are spending unlimited amounts of money. We have tried all kinds of gimmicks and efforts—reducing the Social Security tax, other things—to try to create growth in the economy, and it has not worked. I suggest part of the problem is the deficit itself.

Professors Rogoff and Reinhart have written a book: "This Time Is Different." In their analysis, when your debt equals 90 percent or more of your economy, you will show at least a 1-percent reduction in economic growth for that year. This year our debt, which is already about 95 percent of GDP, will be 100 percent of GDP by September 30. So the first-quarter growth numbers were 1.8 percent below what had originally been projected. That was a reanalysis of it—1.8 percent. According to their theory, it would be 2.8 percent growth if we did not have debt in excess of 90 percent of the gross domestic product.

I asked Secretary of the Treasury Geithner at the budget hearing whether he agreed with the Rogoff-Reinhart study, which has received quite a bit of attention and a great deal of respectful attention. He said he did. He said that in some ways the situation is worse than that suggests because we could have an economic crisis. When your debt-to-GDP is 90 or 100 percent, that is how you can have a circumstance somewhat like we had with the financial meltdown or like they are having in Greece.

So we have been warned by the fiscal commission Chairman and Cochairman, appointed by President Obama,

Mr. Erskine Bowles and Alan Simpson. They testified that we are facing the most predictable economic crisis in our Nation's history—the most predictable. When asked when it might happen, Mr. Bowles said 2 years, give or take. So we do not know what is going to happen.

I think we have to just grow up, realize that we have placed our Nation in financial jeopardy, that this country has spent money it did not have to a degree greater than this Nation has ever spent before, except maybe in the height of World War II when the entire Nation was in a life-and-death struggle. We have never spent this kind of money. We have never had these kinds of deficits.

Many remember the big fight over spending in the mid-1990s that resulted in the balancing of the budget in the late 1990s. That was a much simpler problem than we have today. I have looked at the numbers. I have studied the numbers. To get this country to a balanced budget is going to take some very serious, sustained work. It is going to be much more significant than it was in the mid-1990s. We simply cannot grow this economy—which is the key to getting ourselves out of the mess we are in—we cannot grow it by just passing more taxes. We cannot do that.

Congress has to step up to the plate. I remain extremely disappointed that the majority in the Senate did not even bring a budget to the floor last year. We are now at 750-, 760-some-odd days without having a budget. That is one reason we are spending so much money we do not have. We do not even have a budget. It was not even brought to the floor last year. Not a single appropriations bill was brought to the floor and passed last year. Since I have been here—and I guess in 20 or more years—our Democratic majority had the largest majority any Senate has ever had. They had 60 votes last year in the Senate. It only takes 50 to pass a budget. You can pass a budget without a supermajority, without a filibuster. It is designed to make sure we pass a budget because it is needed that we pass a budget. But it was not even brought up last year.

So what about this year? We have not even marked one up. We have not had a hearing in the Budget Committee to mark up a budget. Under the Budget Act, the budget is supposed to be passed by April 15. The House has passed a budget, a historic budget, a sound budget. It changes the unsustainable trajectory we are on. It is responsible. It has gotten widespread bipartisan applause for being a serious attempt to confront the financial crisis we are facing.

The Senate has not produced anything. Indeed, my good friend—and he has a tough job—our majority leader, HARRY REID, said it would be foolish to pass a budget. And his staff said something similar to the press. Foolish to pass a budget? What did he mean by that? Would it be against the American interest to pass a budget? Would it make our country less strong financially if we passed a budget? Would it be less responsible to pass a budget than to not pass one? I do not think so.

Actually, I do not think that is what he meant. What he meant was it would be foolish politically to pass a budget. So he did not bring one on the floor last year when he had 60 Senators. He has 53 now. He is not going to bring one up again this year. He would be foolish to. Why? Because when you produce a budget, you have to set forth, for the entire world—the financial world, the American people, the political world, the individual citizens of this Republic—what your plans are for the future. What are we going to do? How much are we going to spend? How much are we going to tax? How much deficit will be created, or surplus, if one is to be found? And it is not going to be found soon—a surplus—trust me. I have looked at the numbers. But we have to get on the right path. So he thinks that is foolish. I guess because, well, if he produced a budget, he might have to cut spending and somebody might complain. If he produced a budget and it is consistent with what some of my tax-and-spend friends believe and he has a bunch of tax increases in there, that might not be popular. So since it is not popular, we are just not going to do it, while we have the lowest number of people working in this economy since 1983 and we are 2 percent below the number of people who were actually working 10 years ago.

This Keynesian spend-tax-spend idea of how to make an economy grow is not sound. We have tried it. It was done over my objection, but it was done. We threw money at this economy the likes of which we have never seen before.

Now, the Brits, they are reducing their spending. They are making some tough choices in the UK. And some have been pushing back: Oh, you are cutting too much. They are having riots in Greece, where people are saying: You are cutting back spending too much. We have to have this money. But what did the International Monetary Fund say today? I believe it was today. They said: The UK, the Brits, stay the course. Stay with your fiscal responsibility that was initiated by the new conservative government. Do not go back to spending. Do not adopt the idea that you can create something out of nothing by borrowing money, money you do not have.

Of course, Julie Andrews laid that out really well in her song. I have thought and always try to remember: Nothing comes from nothing. Nothing ever could.

You cannot borrow your way out of debt, as one person in Evergreen told me his granddaddy said. We have to face the music. We do not have the money to operate at the level we are.

I was at a town meeting in Marion, AL, and an elderly gentleman said he lived through the Depression, he lived through World War II, he lived through the great inflation surge in the 1970s, and he sees this other challenge we face today. He said the problem is not the high cost of living; the problem is the cost of living too high. That just sort of closed the meeting. He was the last one to speak. I thought there was a real silence there—the cost of living too high.

We have just been living on the idea that these brilliant people—the Fed and the Treasury and all—that they can just borrow money and spend it today, and that will make the economy flower, and we will all be successful, and we do not have to worry about paying it off.

What is a little debt? Well, we went down that road, and it has gotten completely out of control, and we cannot sustain it.

We are at a point where our debt threatens our economic growth. According to Rogoff and Reinhart, it is already reducing our growth by 1 percent. And if we have 2 percent growth for the year—if we have 2 percent growth this year instead of 1.8 percent, as we did the first quarter—that means 1 million more people employed. A 1-percent growth, economists tell us, is equal to 1 million people employed. If you get 3 percent, 4 percent, 5 percent growth, like we ought to have coming out of a recession, then you can have millions of jobs created and change this direction of our country.

We have used every weapon we have except common sense and sound policy. So what do we do? How do we get out of the mess we are in? It is not going to be an easy road, but we need to reduce spending. We have increased spending in the last 2 years—the first 2 years under President Obama—24 percent in discretionary nondefense spending.

We cannot cut that back to where we were in a previous day? Is the United States of America going to cease to exist if we reduce spending? We are going to have to. We do not have the money. So we do that. We send a message to the world as the people in England have that we understand the problem. We know we have gone too far. We are going to get on the right road. We are going to put our shoulders to the wheel, and we are going to lift this country forward and put it on a sound path.

We can do that. We will do that. That is what the American people said they wanted—I am convinced—in this last election. They want some responsibility here, and we owe it to them. I hope and pray that we can come together and make some significant changes in the way we spend money and the amount of debt that we have.

Yes, it might be tough for a while, but we will get on the right path. We will get this country going in the right direction. So when we are confused about the future, nobody knows exactly what to do, I think it is time to take a deep breath and go back to the old verities, the old truths that nothing comes from nothing. Hard work pays off. Borrowing, borrowing, borrowing is a road to disaster. We need to start paying down our debt. The kinds of things we tell our children every day, this Nation needs to do.

If the world and if the business community in our country saw us in that direction, nothing could be better for our economic growth. They would say: The United States of America has finally got it. They have their heads on right. They are making the decisions that will lay a foundation for sound, positive growth in the future, and they are not trying to get their way out of the problem they are in by something for nothing, some gimmick.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I would like to share some brief thoughts about the nomination of Donald Verrilli to be Solicitor General of the United States. Solicitor General has been called the greatest lawyer job in the world. It is the position in the Department of Justice that represents the United States in appellate courts and the Supreme Court. As they said, again, there is no higher honor than to appear in the highest Court in the land and be able to announce that you represent the United States of America. That is what the Solicitor General gets to do and supervises that. It is a very important position.

It requires integrity, independence, and a commitment to the rule of law. Mr. Verrilli, by the account of quite a number of people, is a smart lawyer with significant experience in appellate matters and is respected as to his integrity and his legal ability. I say that because I am not going to be able to vote for him today, but what I am saying about him is not to be personal in any way. I can disagree with someone about their approach to law and still sometimes be able to vote for them.

I voted for most of the President's nominees. I supported Attorney General Holder's nomination. But what I want to say is, we are in a struggle internationally with a most virulent form of terrorism that has been declared by virtually all objective people as a war. We are involved in a war on terrorism. That is just what it is. Bin Laden and the people who attacked us on 9/11 had declared war against the United States. They had officially said they were at war with us. Our President, on occasion, has acknowledged that we are at war. Congress has authorized the use of military force in Iraq, Afghanistan, and against al-Qaida. We have authorized it. We have not in Libya, but we have in those other instances.

So the Department of Justice, of which I was honored to be a member for 15 years as a Federal prosecutor, and U.S. attorney in Alabama for 12—and I loved that great Department and believe in it deeply. I am troubled by the extent to which it is being led by people who have an unwise understanding of the nature of the struggle we are in. One of the ways this plays itself out is to conclude that an individual affiliated with al-Qaida was presumptively to be tried in civilian courts like a normal criminal. But under the rules of war, under our Constitution and laws, and consistent with the history of the United States, it is perfectly permissible to capture an enemy combatant who is threatening us and to put them in jail and detain them, just like all prisoners of war have been detained, until the conflict is over.

No, we do not give them a trial. They are not entitled to lawyers. They are not entitled to go before a judge. They are prisoners of war. They are held in prisoner of war camps. They have to be humanely treated. They cannot be tortured. We have a specific statute about that, and I know we have had some instances where people said we are torturing. Some say it is not. But that is not the situation today. We are not close to the line of what is torture of anybody that is being held in custody today.

So the question is, What does the Department of Justice say? Well, they have made the statement that there is a presumption that these individuals should be tried in civilian courts. Congress, after several years of debate, finally passed a law that prohibited the funding of a civilian trial of any of the 9/11 terrorists who have been captured. Some have been held at the Guantanamo Bay detention facility. They have to be tried, if they are tried, before military commissions.

Military commissions have historical precedent. For example, in World War II, Nazi saboteurs entered the United States and attempted to attack us. They were captured. Trial was held within a few weeks by the military, and most of them were executed promptly. The Supreme Court, in ex parte Quirin, held that was perfectly appropriate.

Now, we cannot try a normal prisoner of war and execute them. We cannot do that. If a prisoner of war, however, violates the rules of war and commits crimes above and beyond the rules of war, then they can be tried and punished appropriately.

The 9/11 conspirators and other terrorists are wholly and totally committed to violating the rules of war. They attack innocent men, women and children. They attack noncombatants. That is all prohibited by the rules of war. They do not wear a uniform. If they want to have the protections of the rules of war, they have to wear a uniform when they go into combat. If they are captured, they have to be treated as prisoners of war. But if they have been sneaking into the United States surreptitiously, with a plot to bomb a target and murder innocent men, women, and children, then they have committed a war crime, and so they can be detained as prisoners of war and can be tried by the military as the war criminals they are.

So this has been a big battle, and we went through it for years. On the Judiciary Committee, of which I am a member, we had quite a bit of discussion about it in hearing after hearing. We somehow have tragically convinced the world that the American military is torturing people at Guantanamo, and it is not so. The people who were found to have been waterboarded and that kind of thing, it was not done at Guantanamo, and it was not done by the U.S. military. Zero.

At any rate, we had all of those debates, and we had fusses. We had lawsuits filed, and people were complaining about President Bush and all his policies. And we remember that. So now we are here with a series of people being appointed to the leadership of the Department of Justice, the law enforcement agency, the top prosecutors in the country, and those positions are being filled by the people—not who are prosecuting terrorists, not who know something about it, not skilled professional prosecutors who know how to do this job. The top positions are being filled with the people who protested.

Attorney General Holder himself has said that these cases ought to be tried in a civilian court. The Acting Deputy Attorney General, Mr. Cole, wrote an op-ed in the Legal Times saying the war on terror was a criminal matter, not a military matter.

Assistant Attorney General for the Civil Division, Tony West, defended John Walker Lindh, the American Taliban; the Acting Solicitor General, Neil Katyal, argued on behalf of Salim Ahmed Hamdan, bodyguard and chauffeur for Osama bin Laden, in Hamdan v. Rumsfeld, arguing that military commissions were illegal. These are some of the top positions in the entire Department of Justice: the Attorney General, a Deputy Attorney General of the Civil Division, and the Acting Solicitor General, and the person who is nominated to fulfill that spot.

So Mr. Verrilli, I believe, is a good man. In normal circumstances I would be willing to accept his nomination and vote for him. I am not going to try to slow it down. I am glad to have the vote and cast my vote. I am sure he will be confirmed. But it has been reported in the media that President Obama has now appointed 13 to 16 lawyers to high-ranking positions in the Department who themselves previously represented alleged terrorists or their supporters or were senior partners at their law firms when their firms decided to accept alleged terrorists as clients. Many of these lawyers, including Mr. Verrilli, support the view that terrorists are criminals and not unlawful combatants. It is all right to defend unpopular people, criminals who are unpopular. It is perfectly all right.

But I just want to say, as someone who loves the Department, I am concerned about the positions they are taking on the questions of the civilian trials of unlawful combatants.

I think it is wrong, and I have voted for the last one I am going to vote for to a top position at the Department of Justice who advocate that view. I think it places our Nation at greater risk. We do not need to be treating these individuals in that fashion.

As a practical matter, it works out this way. If you apprehend the Christmas Day bomber, he is treated as a civilian and he has to be given his Miranda rights within minutes of being arrested, which say that you can have a lawyer, you can remain silent, and you will be appointed a lawyer promptly. He has to be taken before a magistrate promptly—letting all his terrorist associates know he has been captured. He is entitled to discovery in the government's case in short order, and he is entitled to a speedy trial.

All of those things are part and parcel of the civil process. But if a suspected terrorist is captured as an unlawful combatant and detained by the military, he can be held as a prisoner of war, and he can be interrogated—not tortured—over a period of weeks, or months; and the military does not have to appoint a lawyer for them. Unlawful combatants can be tried at Guantanamo Bay by a military commission—and potentially found in violation of the rules of war—which is what ought to happen in these cases.

But that is not the position of the Department of Justice. The Department has been populated with people who have a different view—I think a wrong view—of it. Although I have great respect for Mr. Verrilli and his record, which seems to be a good one, the fact that he is another voice in the Department for a wrong philosophy is something I will vote against by voting no.

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

The question is, shall the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Donald B. Verrilli, to be Solicitor General of the United States.

MORNING BUSINESS

30TH ANNIVERSARY OF HIV/AIDS IN THE U.S.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, yesterday marked the 30th anniversary of HIV/AIDS in the United States. Thirty years ago, on June 5, 1981, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, CDC, published the first scientific report about five previously healthy men with what is now known as human immunodeficiency syndrome, HIV, and acquired immune deficiency syndrome, AIDS. Since that report, the face of HIV/AIDS has changed into a global epidemic with over 33.3 million people living with HIV. In the United States, over 1.1 million people are living with HIV and almost 600,000 people have died from the disease.

For three decades this preventable disease has devastated families and communities. But there has also been a global response from the research community, government, health workers, and patient advocates to fight this disease and save lives. This battle has yielded notable victories. In the U.S., prevention has saved over 350,000 lives and new infections have decreased by more than two-thirds since the height of the epidemic. Advancements have been made in HIV testing, which is at an all time high with 11.4 million more people being tested in 2009 compared to 2006. Biomedical innovations have created powerful drugs that can transform AIDS from a death sentence into a chronic disease.

The advancement in HIV/AIDS treatment is embodied by the experience of Keith Green. In 1994, when Keith was 17 years old and still a senior in high school on Chicago's South side, he was diagnosed with HIV and given 10 years to live. Keith's prognosis dimmed his hope of a future and he lived day to day ignoring the disease and forgoing medication and treatment. When Keith was hospitalized at the age of 25, seriously ill, and 50 pounds underweight, he assumed his 10 years had come a little early. Fortunately, during his hospitalization, Keith learned about HIV treatment options and started to envision a future for himself. Today, with the help of medication and community support, Keith is a leader in the fight against HIV/AIDS.

Keith's story illustrates that progress has certainly been made, but the U.S. must continue to be a leader in the fight against HIV/AIDS. In the United States over 1.1 million people have HIV, but one in five of these people do not know they are infected. Each year 56,300 Americans become infected with HIV. Most of these new infections are among people under the age of 30—young people who have never known a time without effective HIV treatment and who may not fully understand the health threat of HIV.

The burden of HIV/AIDS continues to be disproportionately borne by gay and bisexual men and African Americans and Latinos. While Black Americans represent 12 percent of the U.S. population, they account for almost half of people living with HIV and half of new infections each year. We can win the fight against HIV/AIDS, but our national strategy must focus on eliminating these disparities.

The U.S. has been at the frontline combating the AIDS pandemic. We have established aggressive and effective programs, notably the Ryan White HIV/AIDS Program and the Tom Lan-tos and Henry J. Hyde U.S. Global Leadership against HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria Act, known more commonly as PEPFAR. This year, as part of the National HIV/AIDS Strategy the CDC started implementing a 12 city demonstration project to enhance HIV prevention and reduce disparities. In my home State, Chicago is among the 12 cities included in the demonstration project. With over 14,000 AIDS cases, Chicago has one of the Nation's largest AIDS populations and is an appropriate battleground to enhance HIV/AIDS prevention, treatment, and access to care.

As we enter a fourth decade of the AIDS epidemic, we remember the 25 million people who have been lost to this disease and renew our commitment to fighting the AIDS epidemic, to eliminating stigma against those with this disease, and to stopping the spread of HIV.

I look forward to working with my colleagues to make these goals a reality.

TRIBUTE TO DR. SUSAN STONE

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to the astounding achievements of a dedicated Kentuckian. Worthy of recognition for her contributions to the advancement of rural health care, Dr. Susan Stone has devoted much of her life to the practice of nursing and bettering the lives of women, children, and families around the country.

Dr. Stone received her first degree in nursing in 1974 and her bachelor's of science from the State University of New York. She obtained her doctor of nursing from the University of Tennessee Health Science Center, as well as her postmasters in nurse midwifery at the very school she is currently president and dean of, the Frontier School of Midwifery and Family Nursing in Hyden, KY.

Educated in many facets of medicine, Dr. Stone has worked as a nurse and a childbirth educator as well as a certified nurse midwife. Then in 2001 she found a way to make an even greater contribution to Kentuckians' health, as she was named president and dean of the Frontier School. Following in the footsteps of the Frontier School's founder, Mary Breckinridge, Dr. Susan Stone continues to seek to improve health care in Kentucky's rural and underserved areas. Expanding the school over the past 5 years to over 1,000 students from across the world, Dr. Stone has made a major impact on its growth. Expected to become the No. 1 education provider of advanced practice nurses in the future, the Frontier School now provides master's as well as doctoral degrees.

About 75 percent of students enrolled in the Frontier School are from rural counties, furthering Dr. Stone's vision of improving health education and the availability of health assistance around the State. And since her involvement with the school, it has recently received three prestigious rankings in U.S. News and World Report.

For her incredible hard work and devotion to medicine, Dr. Susan Stone was named the National Rural Health Association's Distinguished Educator of the Year 2011. Kentucky is fortunate to have driven, focused women like Dr. Susan Stone, as she continues to educate and aid more students who will take their practice of medicine around the world.

Mr. President, the Leslie County News recently published an article highlighting the life and achievements of Dr. Susan Stone. I ask unanimous consent that the full article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Leslie County News, May 12, 2011]
FRONTIER SCHOOL'S PRESIDENT AND DEAN, DR. SUSAN STONE, NAMED NRHA'S DISTINGUISHED EDUCATOR OF THE YEAR

With great pride, the Frontier School of Midwifery and Family Nursing announces that Dr. Susan Stone, the school's president and dean, has been named the National Rural Health Association's Distinguished Educator of the Year for 2011. Dr. Stone was honored on May 5 during the 34th Annual Rural Health Conference in Austin, Texas. Dr. Stone's devotion to a career of advancing the education of rural health care providers throughout the United States made her a deserving recipient of this prestigious national award. Dr. Stone, who has led Frontier as its president and dean since 2001, has been instrumental in the growth and success of the Frontier School, a distance-learning graduate school of nursing with a historic campus in Hyden, Kentucky. Today, the school offers nationally rated master's and doctoral degree programs and educates nurses to become nurse-midwives, family nurse practitioners and women's health care nurse practitioners. Enrollment at Frontier has grown from just 200 students in 2006 to a current enrollment of over 1,000 students representing all fifty states and many countries. Stone has maintained a focus on educating nurses who will serve rural and underserved populations which is evidenced by the fact that 75% of students enrolled in 2010 resided in rural counties and/or health professional shortage areas. Thanks to Dr. Stone's commitment and leadership, Frontier graduates are most certainly increasing access to quality healthcare for those that need it most. The school was founded in 1939 by the visionary Mary Breckinridge, who years earlier founded the Frontier Nursing Service in the mountains of southeastern Kentucky to provide healthcare to women, children and families. Frontier is considered the birthplace of nurse-midwifery and family nursing in America. Dr. Stone's passion for the vision of Mary Breckinridge, who with her nurses traveled on horseback to deliver care and attend births in Appalachia, is evidenced by the school's continued commitment to educate advanced practice nurses to serve in rural and underserved areas. Mary Breckinridge wanted to see her work replicated throughout the nation and world, and Dr. Stone has embraced that vision by educating students from all 50 states and several countries, taking Frontier's philosophy of care across the globe. Like Frontier's founder, Dr. Stone has devoted her career to improving healthcare for women and families. Dr. Stone received her first nursing degree in 1974, later followed by a bachelor's of science in nursing from the State University of New York. Dr. Stone worked as nurse, a certified childbirth educator and later as a certified nurse-midwife in New York, after receiving her post-master's certificate in nurse-midwifery from the Frontier School in 1991. During the '90s, while still practicing, she served on the distance-learning faculty of the Frontier School. Dr. Stone, who earned her Doctor of Nursing Practice degree from the University of Tennessee Health Science Center, has been instrumental in expanding the Frontier School's outreach worldwide, through a unique melding of online learning and real-world clinical experiences. The school recently received three high-profile rankings from US News and World Report: Frontier School of Midwifery and Family Nursing is ranked #13 in Nurse-Midwifery programs, #14 in Nurse Practitioner education programs and #50 in Nursing—among all accredited schools in the country. The work and commitment of Frontier graduates toward meeting rural health care needs could fill an entire book. With Dr. Stone's expert guidance, determination, passion and Frontier school is poised to become the No. 1 education provider of advanced practice nurses to serve rural areas, both domestically and internationally.

TRIBUTE TO ERNEST RAY RUDDER

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to a distinguished Kentuckian, a self-described "jack of all trades" who has come through for his family, friends and neighbors time and again. Whether it is as a teacher, a law-enforcement officer, a fireman, a father, a grandfather or a great-grandfather, people know they can always rely on Mr. Ernest Ray Rudder.

Mr. Rudder—or, to those who know him, E.R.—has worn many hats throughout his life. Born in Laurel County, KY, in 1947, E.R. attended Bush School and Berea College, then transferred to Cumberland College where he earned his bachelor of science degree in biology and chemistry. During his college years he also married his childhood sweetheart Judy Hacker, and they have been married now for 44 years.

E.R. began work as a teacher, teaching all subjects, including chemistry and biology, in Clay, Jackson and Laurel Counties. He also worked for many years as a school assistant principal and principal. In 2000, E.R. retired from teaching after more than three decades of service.

But an easy retirement spent in a rocking chair was not for E.R. He was one of the charter members of the Bush Volunteer Fire Department, organized in 1975. While still serving as a school principal, he had worked occasionally as a sworn-in deputy for the Laurel County Sheriff's Office, transporting inmates. Now in retirement, he renewed his commitment to law enforcement. Recently promoted to administrative sergeant, he has worked for the Laurel County Sheriff's Office for the last 2½ years under two sheriffs.

"No matter how small the complaint, it is a legitimate concern for them," E.R. says of the people he works to serve and protect. And luckily for E.R., he has not gotten into any, as he likes to call them, "bugtussles" of the dangerous variety.

E.R. has also worked as a school bus driver, an assistant manager at a restaurant and as a chemist for the London Utility Commission. He is a member of Providence Baptist Church and a deacon there since 1985. When his wife Judy is asked what E.R. does in his spare time, she answers, "He has no spare time."

Kentucky is lucky to have men like Ernest Ray Rudder, who works hard to protect and provide for his family and his community. I am sure his wife Judy, his children, his grandchildren and his great-grandson are very proud.

Mr. President, the Sentinel Echo recently published an article illuminating Mr. Ernest Ray Rudder's life and his career. I ask unanimous consent that the full article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RUDDER HAS LIVED EVERY LIL' BOY'S DREAM (By Sue Minton)

Have you passed someone on the street or in the mall, looked at them in church or school, or just seen them out your car window and wonder where have they been or where are they going, and what is their story?

It's easy to forget that everyone has a story to tell and when we take the time to ask questions and listen, we find that every person has a fascinating story to tell and a unique perspective from which to tell it.

Ernest Ray Rudder's—E.R. to those who know him best—story began May 14, 1947 when he was born, at home, to Birchell and Maxine Rudder, the oldest of three children. "I was born in a little white house on East 80, grew-up on Tom Cat Trail, and moved back to East 80," he said.

Rudder attended Bush School graduating in 1965 and attended Berea College for 1½ years.

He, along with his new bride transferred to Cumberland College graduating in 1969 with a bachelor of science degree in biology and chemistry.

Rudder and his childhood sweetheart, Judy Hacker, will be married 44 years in May.

"She was only girl I ever dated," he said. "We met in Sunday School class."

Judy said they met when she was in the eighth grade. E.R. said they met before that.

"But I didn't notice you before then," Judy said laughing.

"I noticed you," he said. "With your pig-tails and big brown eyes."

"Her mom, Granny Hacker, was my Sunday School teacher, and Judy was in the class."

After receiving his degree, Rudder began his career as an educator in Clay County, teaching all subjects to seventh and eighth graders at Paces Creek. "This was an experience," he recalled. "I had some famous people in the class, like Gary Gregory, the current Clay County Commonwealth Attorney, for one. And another was the late Cecil Darrell Hooker."

Rudder remembers there being seven seventh graders and 17 eighth graders in the class. "I was 21-years-old and one of the eighth-grade students was 18."

Rudder taught at Paces Creek for half-a-year and the following two years were spent teaching in Jackson County. After which he returned to Laurel County, teaching chemistry and biology for 13 years at Laurel County High School.

"I absolutely loved teaching. I loved the part where you could teach and actually see the students experience the learning part," he said. "And when you could really have fun teaching."

"When you saw them light-up, you knew they 'got-it,'" he added. "And the students learned because they wanted to, not because they had to know it on some test."

Rudder said some of his former students are now doctors, attorneys, teachers and Pentagon officers, and unfortunately some who wear orange jumpsuits.

After 15½ years, Rudder left the classroom for a principal's position at the former Felts Elementary. For 16 years he held principalships at Felts Elementary (four years), assistant principal at Laurel County High School (three years), and Sublimity Elementary (nine years).

Rudder retired in 2000 after 31½ years of teaching and caring for the students of Laurel County.

Rudder recalls the "editorial" he included in the last newsletter he prepared for his staff and students at Sublimity Elementary. "I told them 'Every little boy wants to be a policeman, fireman or teacher and I have been all three. I have been a volunteer fireman for over 30 years and a part-time policeman. So I have succeeded at what all little boys dream of a I threw 30 some years of teaching in there for fun.'"

Rudder was one of the charter members of Bush Volunteer Fire Department that was organized in 1975. Except for a couple of years he has been secretary/treasurer.

And during his principalship at Sublimity Elementary he worked occasionally with the Laurel County Sheriff's Office transporting inmates.

"I was sworn-in as a deputy in 1994," he said.

"And, I once ran for sheriff," he added.

Retirement for Rudder was short lived, lasting less than two weeks.

"I knew when I retired from the school system that I wanted to work with the sheriff's department," he said. "But, I planned on taking some time off. I left school on June 21 and started at the S.O. July 5."

Ruder has worked for the past two sheriffs and the last 2½ years he has worked the roads. He was recently promoted to administrative sergeant, and some of his duties include walk-in reports, accident reports, sending reports to Frankfort and logging, cataloging and transporting evidence.

"I enjoy answering calls, reacting with and helping the people when you can," he said. "I try to help the S.O. have a good image and know that it is serving the people."

When Rudder was asked about taking the administrative position he said he was not dumb enough to think that a 63-year-old man should be out there chasing young punks. "You are inviting trouble," he added. "And I have been lucky, I have not got into any bugtussles, but I have talked several down."

Rudder said there is something new every day. "A lot of times you will hear the same story but from different people. You never know what or who is going to walk in. No matter how small the complaint, it is a legitimate concern for them."

"People think that everything they see on NCIS or CSI we can do," he added. "I tell them 'if Gil Grissom was here, it is untelling what we could do, but in the real world, we're not able to do all that.'"

"Like teaching, I absolutely love working for the S.O.," he added.

Educating and protecting the citizens of Laurel County was only two of Rudder's jobs.

During his teaching career he also drove a school bus, was assistant manager at Burger Queen and was a chemist for the London Utility Commission.

Rudder drove a school for 13 years, mostly the Marydell route.

"But, my first route was in the Sinking Creek area," he added. "Judy took over my route when I quit and drove for seven years and today Kay Bowling (Rudder's sister) drives the route."

Rudder remembers his Uncle George driving basically the same bus route 50 years ago.

With the jobs Rudder has had and his work schedule today when asked what he does in his spare time, Judy was quick to answer, he has no more spare time."

But Rudder said he doesn't feel like he is pushed. "I would go crazy if I didn't have something to do."

"I like to read history and historical books," he said. "Over Christmas I read George W. Bush's new book 'Decision Points.' Loved it. I'm now reading '15 Stars.' I watch the History Channel and classic westerns, 'Pawn Stars' and 'The Pickers' with a cop show or two thrown in."

"He is also clerk, treasurer and Sunday school director at church," Judy added.

Rudder has been a member of Providence Baptist Church since 1964 and a deacon since 1985.

When asked how he keeps finances from the church, fire department and home straight, he replied laughing "Judy takes care of all personal finances, and I take care of the rest."

Rudder said his biggest regret was not being around much when his daughter, Dawn, was growing up. And his biggest rewards are his grandchildren and Easton, his great-grandson.

"Dawn and Marc have grown up so fast," he said. "And what can you say about your grandchildren and great-grandchild. And the hardest thing I've ever faced was when we lost Susan, our 18-year-old granddaughter."

Rudder describes himself as a "Jack of all trades and a master of none."

INTENT TO OBJECT

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I, Senator Grassley, intend to object to the consideration of S. 520, S. 530, S. 871, and S. 1057. These bills would eliminate or modify current incentives for the production and use of domestic, renewable biofuels. I object to their consideration because they would lead to greater dependence on foreign oil, increased prices at the gas pump for consumers, increased greenhouse gas emissions, and the loss of U.S. jobs. They also represent poor tax policy.

HONORING OUR ARMED FORCES

STAFF SERGEANT JOSEPH J. HAMSKI

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, with sadness, I rise to pay tribute to the life of Air Force SSG Joseph J. Hamski who died in the Shorabak district of Kandahar Province, Afghanistan on May 26, 2011, of wounds suffered when enemy forces attacked his unit. My thoughts and prayers go out to his wife, SSG Maria Christina Hamski, his mother Mary Ellen, and all his other family and friends who are grieving his loss.

Staff Sergeant Hamski had served two tours in Iraq and was serving his second tour in Afghanistan. He was an explosives disposal specialist and was reportedly very good at his job. According to his mother, "He loved life, but when he was working, he was intense." She also observed that, "He was modest: He'd say, 'I just do my job so everyone can do their job.'" He also told a friend that if he didn't come back, he didn't want people to make it a big deal.

While I don't mean to go contrary to his wishes, I cannot fail to pay tribute to his selfless service and tremendous sacrifice. Where would our country be without humble, hardworking, self-sacrificing patriots like Joseph Hamski? We owe him and his comrades in arms nothing short of our freedom and our way of life, a debt we can never repay but must never forget.

TRIBUTE TO COLONEL LAURA RICHARDSON

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. President, today I wish to recognize the dedication and selfless service of Colonel Laura J. Richardson, who has served as the chief of the Army's Senate Liaison Division since October, 2009. As a member of the Secretary of the Army's Office of Legislative Liaison, Colonel Richardson was responsible for advising Army senior leadership on legislative and congressional issues and for educating Senators and staff on Army matters. Colonel Richardson's outstanding leadership and hard work was made clear by the tremendous support that she and her office provided to the U.S. Senate for both sessions of the 111th Congress and the first session of the 112th Congress.

It is a personal honor and a privilege to recognize Colonel Richardson today on the floor of the U.S. Senate. She is a native of the great State of Colorado and was a tremendous athlete at Northglenn High School. She attended Metropolitan State College in Denver, and upon graduation; she was commissioned as a second lieutenant in the U.S. Army. She then attended flight school and earned her wings as an Army aviator.

Colonel Richardson's career highlights include a variety of command and staff positions including three years of service in the 17th Aviation Brigade in Korea. She went on to serve on the III Corps Staff, with the 6th Cavalry Brigade, and with the 101st Airborne Division, Air Assault. She was also selected to serve as the military aide to Vice President Gore from 1999 to 2001, and following her tour at the White House, she returned to the 101st to take command of the 5th Battalion, 101st Aviation Regiment. Colonel Richardson's skill and leadership were clearly displayed when she led 5th Battalion into Iraq in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom in March 2003. Following her highly successful battalion command, she served in a variety of positions on the Army staff in the Pentagon and as the installation commander at Fort Myer, VA.

Throughout her service to our Nation Laura has been a shining example for the people of Colorado and the United States. Her selfless service, professionalism, and outstanding performance in each of her assignments led to her recent selection for the rank of brigadier general. This well-deserved promotion will take her to Fort Hood, TX, where she will serve the next commanding general of the Operational Test Command. That move will also reunite Laura with her husband, BG Jim Richardson, who is currently serving at Fort Hood. I want to say a special thank you to their daughter Lauren. She is a wonderful young woman, and she is a great role model for other military children.

I am proud to call Colonel Richardson a friend and a fellow Coloradan. Her tireless work helped to further strengthen the relationship between the Senate and the Department of the Army, and through her leadership, new doors were opened between our proud institutions. We will miss her here in the Senate, but I know that she will continue to excel in her next assignment and any endeavor that follows. On behalf of my colleagues and all Coloradans, thank you for your service, Laura, and all the best to you and your family.

NORTH CAROLINA VETERANS PARK

Mrs. HAGAN. Mr. President, it is with great pride that I recognize the dedication of the North Carolina Veterans Park. This park will give visitors the opportunity to reflect on the sacrifices made by the courageous women and men of our armed services. The park and its beautiful visitor center, walking paths, and public art honor the lives and service of North Carolina veterans. As a Senator from North Carolina and a member of the Armed Services Committee, I am committed to ensuring our veterans receive the respect they deserve.

Whereas, the North Carolina Veterans Park will consist of seven water features and public art representing participation of individuals from across the State; and

Whereas, the hands of 100 veterans were cast to honor and represent every county in North Carolina and are displayed in this park's Wall of Oath; and

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. WYDEN (for himself, Mr. ENZI, Mr. BARRASSO, and Mr. MERKLEY):

S. 1144. A bill to amend the Soda Ash Royalty Reduction Act of 2006 to extend the reduced royalty rate for soda ash; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. President, today my colleagues Sen. BARRASSO, Sen. ENZI, Sen. MERKLEY, and I are introducing the Soda Ash Competition Act. Soda ash, or "disodium carbonate", is an industrial mineral used in the production of glass and other products. In 2006, in response to efforts by foreign competitors to subsidize non-U.S. production and gain competitive advantages in the world market, including the partial suspension of value added taxes, VAT, by China, Congress enacted legislation to provide a partial suspension of Federal royalties on the ore mined to produce soda ash on Federal lands for 5 years. This royalty relief reduced the Federal royalty rate from 6 percent to 2 percent and helped U.S. soda ash producers to remain competitive in the international market. Over the past 5 years, the U.S. industry has been able to invest hundreds of millions of dollars in production capacity and maintain its market here and abroad. As a result, American companies and workers have provided important economic activity here at home, provided a U.S. export valued at nearly $1 billion a year, all while continuing to generate tens of millions of dollars to the Treasury in mineral royalties.

Foreign competition continues to be an issue for the U.S. soda ash industry, including unfair manipulation of value added taxes that would otherwise be levied on competing foreign supplies. In 2007, China resumed its practice of suspending part of the 17 percent VAT on synthetic soda ash to aid its domestic producers. On May 31, 2011, members of both the House and Senate wrote to Commerce Secretary Gary Locke and U.S. Trade Representative Ron Kirk requesting this unfair trade practice be raised with China through the Joint Commission on Commerce and Trade.

The current statutory royalty relief authority for soda ash expires on October 12, 2011, and this bill would extend that authority for five more years. The Department of Interior is currently preparing an analysis, which will provide further information on the impact of the current soda ash royalty relief and foreign competition on U.S. producers. This study is required by the same 2006 law that authorized the current royalty reduction in order to give Congress additional information to consider a future extension. We had hoped that this analysis would have been completed by now and first wrote to the Secretary of Interior over a year ago seeking to expedite completion of the Department's work. Unfortunately, the analysis has not been completed and the statutory clock is ticking. My colleagues and I are introducing the bill at this time because, given the looming deadline, the Senate needs to begin examination of this matter sooner rather than later.

We look forward to working with our colleagues on the Energy and Natural Resources Committee and the Senate to address this issue before time runs out on the current authority and U.S. soda ash production of this important mineral loses this tool to offset foreign production subsidies.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter of support be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,

Washington, DC, May 31, 2011.

Hon. GARY LOCKE,

U.S. Secretary of Commerce, Constitution Ave., NW., Washington, DC.

Hon. RON KIRK,

U.S. Trade Representative, 600 17th Street, NW., Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY LOCKE AND AMBASSADOR KIRK: We are writing to express our continued concerns about China's use of a Value-Added Tax (VAT) rebate to promote its soda ash industry at the expense of U.S. exports. For over two years, China has provided its domestic manufacturers with an artificial incentive to export through a 9% rebate of the 17% VAT. For a number of reasons, we ask that the issue of the soda ash VAT rebate be specifically included on the JCCT agenda this fall.

After suspending its VAT rebate for soda ash in July 2007, China reinstated the soda ash rebate in April 2009 to encourage its own exports during the global economic crisis. China's state-supported soda ash industry is the largest in the world and this policy is harmful to its international competitors, particularly U.S. soda ash manufacturers. As you may know, U.S. soda ash has a natural advantage over Chinese soda ash, based on a manufacturing process that is much more sustainable in terms of environmental protection and energy use than the synthetic processes used in China. China's manipulation of the VAT rebate to support its domestic soda ash industry also has wider implications—not only is it economically unjustified, it contravenes China's own interests in shifting energy resources from more productive and efficient industries.

We must focus on Chinese policies that are a direct threat to U.S. exports and U.S. jobs. The soda ash VAT rebate is one such policy. Chinese exports compete directly with U.S. soda ash exports in the Asia-Pacific market and beyond. Although the VAT is just one part of China's overall industrial policy, the soda ash VAT rebate is a distinct threat to U.S. manufacturing in a sector where the United States enjoys a natural competitive advantage. If we don't stand up for the pillars of our export-based manufacturers like the soda ash industry—and the U.S. workers employed throughout the soda ash supply chain—we cannot seriously contend we are doing everything we can to support U.S. exports.

We ask that the Department of Commerce and the U.S. Trade Representative's Office ensure that the soda ash VAT rebate is raised at the highest levels with Chinese officials at the JCCT meetings this year. The message should be as clear as it is convincing; namely, China should live up to its repeated pledge to discourage the expansion of highly-polluting and energy-intensive sectors such as its own soda ash industry. Policies aimed at promoting soda ash exports, such as the VAT rebate, are inconsistent with China's own stated goals and a direct threat to U.S. interests.

We greatly appreciate your consideration of this request and look forward to your response.

Senator Michael B. Enzi; Senator John Barrasso, M.D.; Representative David Wu; Senator Joseph I. Lieberman; Senator Robert Menendez; Representative Cynthia Lummis; Senator Ron Wyden; Senator Jeff Merkley; Representative James A. Himes; Senator Frank Lautenberg.

By Mr. LEAHY (for himself, Mr. BLUMENTHAL, and Mr. FRANKEN):

S. 1145. A bill to amend title 18, United States Code, to clarify and expand Federal criminal jurisdiction over Federal contractors and employees outside the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, today, I reintroduce the Civilian Extraterritorial Jurisdiction Act, CEJA. The United States has dramatically more Government employees and contractors working overseas than ever before, but the legal framework governing them is unclear and outdated. To promote accountability, Congress must make sure that our criminal laws reach serious misconduct by American Government employees and contractors wherever they act. The Civilian Extraterritorial Jurisdiction Act accomplishes this important and common sense goal by allowing United States contractors and employees working overseas who commit specific crimes to be tried and sentenced under U.S. law.

Tragic events in Iraq and Afghanistan highlight the need to strengthen the laws providing for jurisdiction over American Government employees and contractors working abroad. In September 2007, Blackwater security contractors working for the State Department shot more than 20 unarmed civilians on the streets of Baghdad, killing at least 14 of them, and causing a rift in our relations with the Iraqi government. Efforts to prosecute those responsible for these shootings have been fraught with difficulties, and our ability to hold the wrongdoers in this case accountable remains in doubt.

I worked with Senator SESSIONS and others in 2000 to pass the Military

Extraterritorial Jurisdiction Act, MEJA, and then, again, to amend it in 2004, so that U.S. criminal laws would extend to all members of the U.S. military, to those who accompany them, and to contractors who work with the military. That law provides criminal jurisdiction over Defense Department employees and contractors, but it does not explicitly cover people working for other Federal agencies, like the Blackwater security contractors. Had jurisdiction in the tragic Blackwater incident been clear, FBI agents likely would have been on the scene immediately, which could well have prevented some of the problems that have plagued the case.

Other incidents have made all too clear that the Blackwater case was not an isolated incident. Private security contractors have been involved in violent incidents and serious misconduct in Iraq and Afghanistan, including other shooting incidents in which civilians have been seriously injured or killed. As the military missions in Iraq and Afghanistan wind down, MEJA will no longer cover the thousands of contractors and employees who stay on. The legislation I introduce today fills this gap.

Last month, the Senate Judiciary Committee heard testimony from the Justice Department and from experts in the area of contractor accountability about the many diplomatic and national security benefits of expanding criminal jurisdiction over American employees and contractors overseas. The hearing also explored how best to ensure that our Nation's intelligence activities would not be impaired by CEJA. The legislation I propose today has been carefully crafted to ensure that the intelligence community can continue its activities unimpeded.

This bill would also provide greater protection to Americans, as it would lead to more accountability for crimes committed by U.S. government contractors and employees against Americans working abroad. In the last Congress, the Committee heard testimony from Jamie Leigh Jones, a young woman from Texas who took a job with Halliburton in Iraq in 2005 when she was 20 years old. In her first week on the job, she was drugged and gang-raped by coworkers. When she reported this assault, her employers moved her to a locked trailer, where she was kept by armed guards and freed only when the State Department intervened.

Ms. Jones testified about the arbitration clause in her contract that prevented her from suing Halliburton for this outrageous conduct, and Congress has moved to change the civil law to prevent that kind of injustice. Criminal jurisdiction over these kinds of atrocious crimes abroad, however, remains complicated and depends too greatly on the specific location of the crime, which makes prosecutions inconsistent and sometimes impossible. We must fix the law to help avoid arbitrary injustice and ensure that victims will not see their attackers escape accountability.

Ensuring criminal accountability will also improve our national security and protect Americans overseas. Importantly, in those instances where the local justice system may be less than fair, this explicit jurisdiction will also protect Americans by providing the option of prosecuting them in the United States, rather than leaving them subject to hostile and unpredictable local courts. Our allies, including those countries most essential to our counter-terrorism and national security efforts, work best with us when we hold our own accountable.

In the past, legislation in this area has been bipartisan. I hope Senators of both parties will work together to pass this important reform.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mrs. MURRAY:

S. 1148. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to improve the provision of assistance to homeless veterans, to improve the regulation of fiduciaries who represent individuals for purposes of receiving benefits under laws administered by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, and for other purposes.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, today, as Chairman of the Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I am pleased to introduce the Veterans Programs Improvement Act of 2011.

The bill I am introducing today would allow the Department of Veterans Affairs to continue the important work of ending veteran homelessness, improve the quality of the fiduciary program administered by VA, improve claims processing and make a number of other improvements to VA programs. This statement is not a full summary of all the provisions within this legislation. However, I would like to provide an overview of the major benefits this legislation would provide.

The administration recently reported that as many as 76,000 veterans experienced homelessness on a given night in 2009. Many of these veterans face significant challenges such as mental illness, physical disability, and substance abuse. In order to heal and remain in stable housing, these veterans will need a great deal of support. I want to commend the VA for working tirelessly to reduce the number of veterans sleeping in the streets. We are certainly off to a good start, but I recognize that there is still much more work to be done.

This bill will extend the life and improve upon several critical programs in the ongoing effort to get homeless veterans off the streets and into secure housing. Current law requires that VA diagnose "serious mental illness" or a "substance abuse issue" before it can use its authority to contract for emergency shelter services. In the tough economic times this country is experiencing, homeless veterans in need of these services do not always suffer from serious mental illness or substance abuse issues, and would not be eligible. This legislation will ensure that these services are available to all homeless veterans who need them.

One of the keys to ending veteran homelessness is VA's Grant and Per Diem program, which was established to assist public and nonprofit private entities in furnishing services to homeless veterans. This bill will enhance this essential program by allowing grant funds to be used for new construction, in addition to currently approved uses such as expansion, remodeling, and acquisition. It will also allow grant funds to be used as a match for funding from other sources, and will require VA to take a hard look at how per diem payments are made in order to recommend improvements. This bill also seeks to include male homeless veterans with minor dependents as an additional population with special needs, for eligibility under VA's special needs grant program.

The unemployment rate for returning veterans has reached as high as high as one in five this year. Sadly, we are seeing some of these new veterans appearing in homeless shelters. This is not just a VA problem, nor is it just a HUD problem—we all have an obligation to collaborate and address these unmet needs. To better assist in the effort to end homelessness among veterans, Congress needs more details surrounding the plan to end veteran homelessness. This legislation would require the Administration to expand upon their existing plan and submit a plan that includes details, such as a timeline, benchmarks, and recommendations. We will only be successful if we can work together to provide the appropriate tools to ensure access to medical care, affordable housing, and education and jobs.

Committee oversight has identified claims where frustrated families of veterans and survivors with severe dementia, such as those who seek VA pension benefits for home or institutional care see months go by because VA refuses to accept signatures from representatives or family caregivers. The situation is sometimes resolved by having the claimant mark an "X" or sign a claims form even when the claimant lacks the ability to understand what is written on the form. In other cases, it appeared that the caregiver gave up and no benefits were paid to otherwise eligible beneficiaries. This is unacceptable treatment for some of our most vulnerable veterans, and my legislation would improve the quality of VA's fiduciary program.

This legislation would make a number of additional improvements to VA programs. It would grow certain servicemembers to be eligible for a VA guaranteed home loan. Right now, to satisfy the occupancy requirement for a VA home loan, a veteran or servicemember or their spouse must be living in the home. Under this standard, a servicemember who is a single parent and is away on active duty is not eligible for a guaranteed home loan, even if that veteran's child is living in the home. This is unfair and wrong. Under this bill, a servicemember or veteran's dependent child will now satisfy the occupancy requirement. This change will help our servicemen and women better use their VA home loan benefits.

It is important that our disabled veterans face as few barriers as possible when attempting to obtain VA home loans. My legislation would allow an individual to receive a fee waiver if, during a pre-discharge program, he or she receives a disability rating for purposes of VA compensation based on existing medical evidence, such as service medical and treatment records. This change would allow an eligible individual to purchase a home without having to pay a VA funding fee, even if he or she has not undergone a pre-discharge examination or a VA disability evaluation. Specially Adapted Housing assistance provides critical support for our veterans in need. This bill extends VA's authority to provide Specially Adapted Housing assistance to eligible veterans who are residing temporarily with family members. In addition, the assistance provided to such veterans would be annually adjusted based on a cost-of-construction index already in effect for other Specially Adapted Housing grants.

By honoring servicemembers who have died while on active duty, we ensure that their sacrifice and service will never be forgotten. Providing a presidential memorial certificate to the survivors of fallen servicemembers is one such way for our country to honor their service. Under current law, survivors of active duty servicemembers who have died are not eligible to receive a presidential memorial certificate. This is because eligibility is limited to survivors of veterans who were discharged under honorable conditions. Because a servicemember who died in active service is not defined by law as a "veteran," his or her survivors are not eligible to receive a memorial certificate. This bill would authorize VA to provide a presidential memorial certificate to the next of kin, relatives, or friends of servicemembers who have fallen while on active duty. In so doing, we express our country's deepest thanks for that servicemember's ultimate sacrifice.

Addressing the claims backlog and ensuring veterans receive the benefits they have earned is one of my top priorities. One of the reasons for the unreasonably long delays that occur in VA decision-making is the time it takes, often in excess of one and a half years, for the VA to forward an appeal to the Board of Veterans' Appeals. This bill would waive agency of original jurisdiction review over new evidence submitted after a veteran has filed a substantive appeal, unless the veteran requests it. Presuming a waiver of AOJ review would improve the timeliness of processing appeals, while at the same time preserve the veteran's right to request initial review by the AOJ, should he or she so desire.

This is not a full summary of all the provisions within this legislation. However, I hope that I have provided an appropriate overview of the major benefits this legislation would provide.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1148

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT

Mr. REID. Mr. President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent it adjourn under the previous order, following the remarks of Senator BROWN of Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MEDICARE

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. President, for the last couple weeks, I traveled to senior centers from Toledo to Youngstown to Columbus to talk with seniors and health professionals about the threats facing their Medicare benefits. We owe it to our children, we owe it to our grandchildren, we owe it to succeeding generations to reduce our Nation's deficit. We know almost exactly one decade ago we had the largest budget surplus in the history of our country. We know during the next 8 years—as Congress and President Bush cut taxes mostly on the wealthy in 2001 and 2003, began two wars with Iraq and Afghanistan and didn't pay for them, did a prescription drug benefit, a supposed benefit that was, in many ways, a bailout for the drug and insurance companies and didn't pay for it, and deregulated Wall Street—during those 8 years, we had the largest budget deficit in American history. We went from the largest budget surplus in American history to the largest budget deficit in American history.

What we see in the Republican budget now, as we talk about Medicare and as they talk about Medicare—ending Medicare as we know it, turning Medicare over to the insurance companies—what we are seeing is sort of the same old game, the same old song from people who do not much like Medicare; that is, cut taxes on the wealthy again and pay for those tax cuts—you have to find a way to pay for them—I guess, pay for those tax cuts by cutting the Medicare benefits seniors have earned. That is what is troubling to me about this Republican budget.

Too many Americans are facing a middle-class squeeze, working hard, playing by the rules, finding it still hard to get ahead in this economy. Many parents, many Americans in their forties and fifties and sixties are part of a sandwich generation. They are helping their parents as their medical costs go up and their parents are not earning very much. They are maybe getting Social Security, maybe something else, and they are trying to pay for their children's college, so this is the wrong time, as if there would ever be a right time, to turn Medicare over to the insurance industry, Medicare as we know it.

That is why Senators CARDIN from Maryland, MCCASKILL of Missouri, and TESTER of Montana wrote a letter to the Vice President calling for the Republican plan to end Medicare as we know it to be taken off the table during the deficit reduction negotiations.

I want to see our deficit reduced. I want to see us have a long-term plan to get our budget deficit under control the way we did in the 1990s and turned budget problems inherited by President Clinton—bequeathed by Presidents Reagan and Bush, inherited by President Clinton—how we got from a budget deficit to a budget surplus.

The statistics behind Medicare are clear. The number of seniors lifted out of poverty in these 45 years, the number of families who have the help to care for a parent or grandparent—we can't reverse those gains for the ultimate form of rationing health care for seniors. Make no mistake, this is rationing health care. When you shift the cost, you give a senior citizen a voucher—you give them an $8,000 check, and that check goes to insurance companies to pay for health insurance. If it runs short, what happens—and it likely will—they pay out-of-pocket. That really is rationing. If you are not a fairly wealthy senior and you run out of this privatized Medicare voucher, you will reach into your pockets and pay for it. That is rationing because many seniors won't be able to pay for it.

When I hear the terms "death panels" and "rationing" and all these things that conservative politicians usually enthralled in the insurance industry are telling this Chamber and down the hall in the House of Representatives—real rationing is when seniors can not afford to pay out-of-pocket for their health insurance costs because of what this Republican budget plan does. Their plan calls for vouchers for private health coverage, doubling their out-of-pocket costs in the first year alone. The average senior would receive an $8,000 voucher; however, in the first year of the voucher program, out-of-pocket expenses would, according to the Congressional Budget Office—not a Democratic group, not a Republican group, a down-the-middle group—the Congressional Budget Office said seniors' out-of-pocket expenses would double to more than $12,500 annually. As I said, at the same time, Republicans are going to take these savings to the budget, these cuts to senior care, to Medicare, and finance tax cuts for those people who earn 10 times or more than the average retirement income of a Medicare recipient.

Seniors would see their prescription drug costs explode. In the health care bill, we cut the costs of prescription drugs to those seniors who are in the coverage gap, the so-called doughnut hole, cut them in half. That would go away. In other words, the Republican budget plan in my State across the river from the Presiding Officer's State would hand an $89 million prescription drug bill tab to split among 139,000 Ohio seniors. Tens of thousands of Ohio seniors, thousands of West Virginia seniors, tens of thousands of seniors in the assistant majority leader's State of Illinois would be paying tens of millions of dollars in higher drug costs as a result of the Republican budget bill. The Senate voted that bill down, largely along party lines.

Republicans continue to want to privatize Medicare, to turn Medicare over to the insurance industry. It simply would put insurance companies in charge of Medicare. It would put insurance companies in charge of the health of our seniors.

Is that what we want? That is why we had Medicare in 1965, because insurance companies were in charge of health care for seniors, meaning half of the seniors had no health insurance—people over 65 in the year 1965. Now roughly 99 percent of seniors have health insurance, and that is because of this program that most of us dearly love and the huge majority of our constituents in West Virginia, Illinois, and Ohio love, and that is called Medicare.

Now, Mr. President, put aside all I have said for a moment. Forget about vouchers, forget about privatization, forget about insurance companies even, and think in a personal way about what Medicare has done in this country.

Medicare was created in 1965, passed mostly by Democrats in the House and Senate, signed by President Lyndon Johnson in July of 1965. We have had Medicare for 45 years. Think about what it has done. Forget all the academic and policy questions. What Medicare has done is helped people in this country live longer, healthier lives. What that means is people have been able to get to know their grandchildren. Somebody who is 65 or 70 or 75 or 80, and enjoys generally good health, has had years—maybe decades—of helping to raise a grandchild, getting to know their granddaughter, getting to play with their grandson, all the things grandparents want to do. Senior citizens have had a greater quality of life because of what we call Medicare, and they have gotten to know their grandchildren better.

Think what that means to children. They have gotten to know their grandparents better and have gotten the kind of guidance only grandparents can give. Margaret Mead, the great anthropologist, a few decades ago said "wisdom and knowledge are passed from grandparent to grandchild." Wisdom and knowledge are passed from grandparent to grandchild, because we all know if we have children, our kids don't always listen to us but our grandchildren do.

I have a 3-year-old grandson named Clayton who lives in Columbus, OH. When I am in Washington, my wife picks him up a lot of days after school. We don't live in Columbus, but she goes down there and picks him up after school. Every day Clayton gets to spend with his grandmother and, when I am home, every weekend with his grandfather. I get to see Clayton not as often as I want but fairly often.

What Margaret Mead said is right. Grandparents impart a special wisdom and knowledge to grandchildren. Think of the benefit grandchildren have because of their grandparents. I wouldn't have looked at it quite the same way until I had my first grandson 3 years ago, but I understand that now.

That, to me, is the real beauty of Medicare. It has helped this country's seniors live longer healthier lives and has helped this country's children be raised in a moral way, in a practical way, in an educational way, better than they would have if their grandparents hadn't been around.

When I hear Republicans say they want to get rid of Medicare as we know it, they want to turn Medicare and senior health care over to the insurance industry, we know what will happen. Seniors won't live longer healthier lives because they will have lost Medicare as we know it.

That is why we sent a letter to Vice President BIDEN—Senator TESTER, Senator MCCASKILL, Senator CARDIN, and I did—to say, take Medicare off the table. We need to deal with this budget deficit, but don't mess with Medicare while we are doing it. It is that simple. I yield the floor.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

MR. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 10 minutes in morning business.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INTERCHANGE FEES

MR. DURBIN. Mr. President, later this week we are going to consider an issue which is complicated, but it is an issue that affects every single American who ever takes a piece of plastic and pays for anything at a hotel, a restaurant, a convenience store, tuition at a school, or a charitable deduction to the Red Cross in the midst of a disaster. If you use plastic, every time that debit card—we are talking just about debit cards for this conversation—every time that debit card is swiped, there is a fee that goes to the bank that issued the card. One may think to oneself, I wonder how they negotiate those fees. The answer is, they don't. What happens is the credit card companies—the two giants, Visa and MasterCard, working through the issuing banks—determine what is going to be charged every time someone swipes the card.

What does a local grocery store have to say about it? Nothing. Their alternative is to not accept plastic at all. Visa and MasterCard say, you want to use our card, you play by our rules and our rules will tell you how much we take every time you swipe a card. I have seen it happen, and my colleagues have too, where you go into a store and shake your head because that young person in front of you just bought a candy bar and is using a piece of plastic to pay for it and you think to yourself, Why didn't they reach in their pocket and pull out a dollar bill to pay for it. Instead, they swipe the card, and we know what happens. That person selling the candy bar just lost money, because the banks and the credit card companies are going to get that swipe fee which happens to be more than the profit this little grocery store is going to make on a candy bar.

Naturally, retailers across America have said, this isn't fair to us. We have no negotiating power when it comes to how much is taken out each time there is a plastic transaction for debit cards, and the consumers don't know. We know as retailers, but the consumers don't even know. There is no transparency. There is no competition. What is wrong with this picture?

If we believe in a free market, we believe in those two things. We ought to believe there would be some competition so maybe there would be one debit card company that charges a lower fee. Maybe there would be special consideration given if somebody paid in cash.

I guess this dates me, but there was a time when people paid in cash for almost everything, except when they used a check, and that was rare. And when they processed the check, it was pennies. Right now, the Federal Reserve tells us that for each and every debit card transaction, the average fee charged is 44 cents.

When we passed an amendment here last year, we said to the Federal Reserve, What is the actual cost to the company, the issuing bank and the credit card, debit card company, for processing this transaction? They said, 10 cents or 12 cents, and they are charging over 40 cents on each transaction. Who pays it? We all pay it. Even if you walk into a store to pay cash, that merchant has put a price on a good that considers the fact that most people are using plastic so they have to raise the price to cover that fee. So we said to the Federal Reserve, Sit down and figure out what is reasonable and proportional in terms of the cost that should be collected every time someone swipes a card.

Well, this is a big political issue, one of the biggest. One might say it is a multibillion-dollar issue, and it is. Because each month in America, over $1.3 billion is collected from customers all across America when they swipe their debit cards. Where does the money go? Most of it goes to the biggest banks on Wall Street—the same banks that were just moaning and groaning a few years ago about how they needed a bailout because they made some big mistakes. They are back again. They want a bailout when it comes to these debit cards. They want to be able to continue to collect 40 cents and more on every transaction.

We passed a law that said the party is over. Starting July 21, there will be a new rule that will establish a reasonable fee, and they have been fighting this with all of their might, all of their lobbyists, all of their workers, all the letters they can send, against this reform. Why? Because it involves huge amounts of money for these major Wall Street banks and credit card companies.

We have to bring an end to this. Consumer groups across America, labor groups, and small business groups—retail federations, merchants, saloon keepers, hotel owners, restaurant owners, convenience store owners—all across America have said we have to quit this. This isn't fair to us and to our customers. Let us have a reasonable amount charged for what is actually taking place with the debit card and we can live with it, but not four times as much as they are charging today. Incidentally, go up to Canada—not a lot different than the United States. They have debit cards and credit cards there, issued by banks. Do my colleagues know what the interchange fee is charged in Canada today? Zero. No charge. No charge at all to the merchant who takes a debit card to Canada. The same companies, Visa and MasterCard, charge zero in Canada and 40 cents in the United States. Aren't we blessed to have two great credit card companies who dreamed up how to stick it to American consumers at the benefit of American banks on Wall Street particularly? That is what this is about.

Most of my colleagues have gone home over the last week or two and they have heard about this issue because it means a lot to a lot of people. What we did was exempt in this law credit unions and community banks. Some people say, Why did you exempt them? Why shouldn't they have reduced fees too? Well, we want to make sure that financially they are not disadvantaged by this, and we put in a specific exemption, sent it to the Federal Reserve to write up their rules to protect them. I have said on the floor and I will say it again, if at the end of the day the rule from the Federal Reserve does not provide adequate protection for credit unions and community banks, I am ready to sign up today to put in even more protection in the law. I will be there. I want to make sure they understand. They were exempted because I believe they should be, and I want to make sure that exemption works.

But I don't care what happens to the Wall Street banks. I don't care what happens to these credit card companies. They seem to end up on their feet when it is all over anyway. After giving them billions of dollars in taxpayers' money to bail them out of their mess that they made of things in this recession, what did they do? They sent us a big wet kiss in the form of multimillion-dollar bonuses for all of their officers, smiling all the way to the bank with taxpayers' money. We don't owe them a thing.

The Members who will come to the floor this week and vote with those big banks and those credit card companies really have to ask themselves: When are you ever going to stand up for consumers and retailers and merchants and small businesses across America? Is somebody going to speak up for them in this Chamber?

That is what this debate is about, and I hope at the end of the day my colleagues will stand tall and say no to Wall Street, no to the credit card companies; that they will stand by the retailers and merchants, to give them a chance for transparency and competition, to give them a chance for a reasonable—reasonable—fee for what is actually transpiring in this transaction.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

PRAYER

Reverend Carter Griffin, St. Peter's Catholic Church, Washington, D.C., offered the following prayer:

Dear Heavenly Father, as we approach the remembrance of Pentecost, when the Holy Spirit descended upon the apostles gathered in prayer, we pray for a new outpouring of Your Spirit upon us today.

May the fire of Your love enflame our hearts, and may the sure hand of Your counsel guide our actions as we strive to follow You more closely.

Send Your Spirit of wisdom upon all Members of this Congress and those who assist them that they may always aim to serve the common good in accordance with Your holy law.

May this day's deliberations be pleasing in Your sight, and may each one of us live today and each day as if it were our last: so that we may always be ready to enter those heavenly dwellings where we hope to live with the angels and saints forever and ever.

Amen.

SENATE—Tuesday, June 7, 2011

The Senate met at 10:30 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable JEANNE SHAHEEN, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Barry C. Black, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Almighty God, source of all life, give our lawmakers this day Your grace and wisdom. Because of Your grace, may they find such inner peace that it will prompt them to reach out to one another and accomplish great things for Your glory. Because of Your wisdom, may they face today's challenges with confidence, knowing that You order the steps of good people.

Lord, give all who labor on Capitol Hill a special discernment to know and to do Your will. Remove their strain and stress and let their ordered lives confess the beauty of Your peace. We pray in Your sacred Name.

Amen.

The Honorable JEANNE SHAHEEN led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. INOUE).

The legislative clerk read as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, June 7, 2011.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable JEANNE SHAHEEN, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, to perform the duties of the Chair.

DANIEL K. INOUE,

Mrs. SHAHEEN thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Madam President, yesterday, I came to the floor to call on Democrats in Washington to wake up, to open their eyes to the signs we see all around us that the policies of the past 2 years are making our economy worse.

Home values are still falling. Manufacturers are showing the weakest growth in nearly 2 years. Nearly 14 million Americans are looking for jobs and can't find them. For many, there is a nagging feeling that things will actually get worse before they get better. And who can blame them?

Over the past 2 months, two ratings agencies have come out with dire warnings over the status of America's stellar credit ratings out of fear that we don't get our fiscal house in order.

One has already put our rating under review and the other has threatened to do so if we don't do something in a matter of weeks—weeks. Yet Democrats here in Washington are doing nothing.

The President is patting himself on the back for an auto bailout that is expected to cost the taxpayers billions. And Democrats in Congress would rather talk about an election that is a year and a half away.

For 2½ years, Democrats in Washington have paid lip service to the idea of job creation—even as they have relentlessly pursued an agenda that is radically opposed to it. And the results speak for themselves: an annual deficit three times bigger than the biggest deficit we ever ran during the last administration, a national debt that we now know will this year be greater than our Nation's entire economy, and chronic unemployment.

But here is the other problem: Democrats don't want to admit that the government-driven policies of the past 2½ years are part of the problem. And until they do, nothing will change. Unless Democrats change their priorities and their policies, the threats of a downgrade will not go away. The debt will not get any smaller. Businesses will not create the kinds of jobs we need to build prosperity.

We need to change course. And a good place to start is with trade.

The President himself has explicitly acknowledged in front of the cameras that free trade agreements will create tens of thousands of jobs for American families who need them. Yet now, the President's advisers say that the White House plans to hold off on this bipartisan job-creating initiative unless it can spend more money on a government benefits program first.

At a time when 14 million Americans are looking for work, they actually want to hold off on these known job-creating agreements in exchange for a green light to spend more money.

It is astonishing. I mean, how do you explain to an American manufacturer or farmer that they have to lose business to France because some Members of Congress want a better benefits package for their allies in organized labor?

You cannot. The White House is free to advocate on behalf of unions. That is its prerogative. But this time it has gone too far. When the White House is actively depriving others of jobs because some union boss isn't getting his way, it has lost touch.

So this morning I am calling on the administration once again to send us the three pending trade agreements that the President himself has said would create tens of thousands of American jobs—and to leave trade adjustment assistance out of it.

There are 47 duplicative Federal retraining programs out there for unemployed workers. No one is denying or minimizing the hardships they face. But we will not allow the White House to deny one group of people the chance to get a job in order to have a bargaining chip in negotiating benefits for others.

It is not fair, and it is not right. We need to separate these issues, deal with them independently, and move ahead with these trade deals. And we should also be doing even more to create jobs by moving forward with something that has been a cornerstone of good trade policy in this country since 1974. I am talking about trade promotion authority.

If the President is really serious about doubling U.S. exports and creating the jobs that would go along with it, he should call on Congress to approve trade promotion authority and Congress should do it.

I would also suggest that any discussion of trade adjustment assistance be done only as part of the debate over extending trade promotion authority, the way it's been done for decades.

Trade promotion authority would give the President the ability to negotiate job-creating trade deals—and allow them an expedited procedure to get an up-or-down vote in Congress so that opponents couldn't block the deals or amend them on behalf of parochial interests or as a shortsighted favor to their union allies.

Without the protections afforded by trade promotion authority, Congress may never consider another trade deal again, and there will be no more trade agenda.

American businesses want to expand and hire. Here is one way to help them do it that's right in front of us. There is no excuse for inaction.

Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Madam President, following leader remarks, the Senate will be in morning business for an hour, with Republicans controlling the first half and the majority controlling the final half.

Following that morning business, the Senate will resume consideration of the motion to proceed to S. 782, the Economic Development Act. The Senate will recess from 12:30 until 2:15 to allow for the weekly caucus meetings.

We will begin consideration of the EDA bill as soon as we can, which appears to be tomorrow morning when cloture is invoked.

JOB CREATION

Mr. REID. Madam President, as I was doing my exercise this morning, I heard on the news the announcement that 10 years ago today, when President Bush—I could hear his voice celebrating the tax cuts for the wealthy—said: I know we have these huge surpluses, but these moneys are the people's money and, therefore, he was going to do something about it. He did that big time.

He certainly did away with those huge surpluses we had, which amounted to trillions of dollars. He did it in a number of different ways. We had a program developed during the Clinton years called pay-go. That meant if someone had a new program they wanted to initiate, they had to pay for it either with new revenue or take money from an existing program. It worked extremely well. That is one reason, and one of the main reasons, we were able to develop the huge surpluses we did during the Clinton years. We were paying down the debt in the Clinton years. Some said it was too quickly.

Well, another way that the President got rid of that huge surplus was the war in Iraq and the war in Afghanistan. The war in Iraq alone now is estimated to be about a $1½ trillion—all borrowed money.

We also know how important it is to create jobs. Now, as a result of the President finding himself in a huge hole as a result of the policies of the Bush administration, he decided that something had to be done. We passed the Economic Recovery Act. It created millions of jobs and saved millions of jobs. Was it enough? No, but it was the best we could do. We could only get three Republicans to help us on that. I appreciated their support, and I always will. They were Senators SNOWE, COLLINS, and SPECTER. They determined what we could spend and not spend within certain parameters, and we believed there should be more infrastructure spending. I wish we could have done more. So we have done some things to help significantly the hole that President Bush created for us.

Now this Congress has also done some things. We focused on jobs. We know how important jobs are. Regarding the FAA bill—Federal Aviation Administration reauthorization—we extended that short term 19 times. I talked to Randy Walker, head of McCarran Airport, the sixth busiest airport in America. They can't let contracts for runway repairs because they only have 1 month to do it a lot of times. They cannot do that.

All kinds of projects that would create thousands of jobs around American airports would happen if we could have an FAA bill. We passed it here. It has been held up in the big dark hole of the House of Representatives. Nothing has been done. We haven't been able to complete the conference on that, and the 280,000 jobs either created or saved haven't been completed. That has been months and months.

We have an antiquated air traffic control system in America. We want to improve it. That is what it is about—saving and creating jobs.

We believed it was important to do something about patents. Senator LEAHY has been faithful in reporting bills out of his committee, and we finally said bring it to the floor. After a lot of work, we got it done. More than six decades have lapsed, and we haven't done anything with one of the most important things we can do, which is protect our patent system and make it better. We passed it here and sent it to the House. Nothing has happened. They have not voted on that bill.

That is very unfortunate, that we have not been able to get those two bills. The patent bill is 300,000 jobs and the FAA bill 280,000 jobs. The math is pretty simple. That is a lot of jobs, and that has been held up.

We believed it was extremely important that we do something about jobs, and we did that with something that has worked so successfully in the past. So that is the bill we brought to the floor to help small businesses innovate, invent, and invest in new jobs. What a wonderful program it has been. We tried to get that reauthorized. It was killed here in the Senate by many amendments—amendments that had nothing to do with the underlying bill. So we had to take that bill off the floor after spending I think 6 weeks on the bill and not being able to get that accomplished.

We brought this bill to the floor that would help small businesses innovate, as I say, invent, and invest in new jobs, but the Republicans simply said: No, we are not going to do that. That jobs bill was so important. The electric toothbrush was invented with a small innovation grant, and there are many other examples. That is just one of hundreds. So it is really too bad we haven't been able to do something about that.

The only thing we hear from the House of Representatives, rather than creating jobs, is destroying Medicare as we know it. The American people don't like that, Republicans don't like it, Independents don't like it, Democrats don't like it, young people don't like it, and old people don't like it. It is not a good piece of legislation. Overwhelmingly, it has been just a big zero. But that is what we have from the House of Representatives. That is their main accomplishment this year.

My friend talked about free-trade agreements. I am not a big fan of free-trade agreements. My voting record is in accordance with that. I think if you asked people in Nevada: Boy, hasn't NAFTA helped us a lot, they would just sneer and walk away. We keep talking about free-trade agreements, but where is the fair part of those trade agreements? Shouldn't we be more worried about our American workers than workers in other places? I think that certainly is the case.

In keeping with the theme of jobs, I thought it was important we do something about creating jobs. I have talked about patents, I have talked about, of course, what we did with the FAA bill, and I talked about what we tried to do with the small jobs innovation bill. What we have decided to bring up now is the EDA, the Economic Development Administration. This has been something that has been in effect since 1965. It has been a wonderful program. In the last 5 years, we have invested $1.2 billion, creating more than 300,000 jobs. For every dollar invested, we get $7 of private capital. That is a pretty good deal. We want to bring that to the floor and have a debate on it, pass it, and put more money in the stream of creating jobs. As I said, for every dollar we invest, we get $7 that comes from the private sector. We plan to work this week on debating and reauthorizing this Economic Development Administration bill, which for more than 45 years has created jobs for the most needy and economically distressed communities—as I have said, in just the last 5 years, more than 300,000 jobs.

This is our first bill of this new work period because creating jobs is our first priority. But Republicans are stopping us from moving to it because creating jobs, it appears, is the last thing they care to do. They are more concerned about what jobs are being created in Colombia or Panama or Korea than what jobs are being created here in America.

The merits of reauthorizing this job-creating administration bill are very clear: EDA works with businesses, universities, and leaders at local levels, so it creates jobs from the bottom up, and it helps manufacturing producers compete in the global marketplace. I repeat, it is a great investment. Seven-to-one is an incredible return rate.

Last night, I had to file cloture on this bill. I hope we don't have to invoke cloture. We have it set up now so we will have the vote in the morning, an hour after we come in. Maybe during the recess we have for our caucus meetings the Republicans will be able to bring in these people who are stopping us from doing this and we will be able to move to it and do something meaningful here on the Senate floor for the rest of this day and tomorrow rather than invoking cloture, waiting 30 hours, and doing nothing. We need to start creating jobs.

Let me repeat. The FAA bill, the House has killed it. On patents, we have done it, and the House has killed it. We tried to do small jobs innovation, but it was killed here in the Senate. We are now trying to do EDA. At this stage, we are not able to move forward.

We are ready to create jobs—we Democrats. We have done it before with programs such as the Economic Development Administration, and we are ready to do it again. The American people are desperate for stable and secure jobs. All they ask of us is that we do our job, and we haven't been doing that because we have been prevented from doing it. Why haven't we passed the FAA bill? Why haven't we completed work on the patent bill? Why were we stopped from moving forward on the small jobs innovation bill? Why are we unable to move on the EDA bill?

Would the Chair announce morning business?

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will be in a period of morning business for 1 hour, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each, with the time equally divided and controlled between the two leaders or their designees, with the Republicans controlling the first half and the majority controlling the final half.

The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to speak until I finish my remarks.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FREE-TRADE AGREEMENTS AND TRADE ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I rise today to speak in support of our pending trade agreements with Colombia, Panama, and South Korea.

Right before Memorial Day, the Finance Committee held two trade hearings, the first on the U.S.-Panama Trade Promotion Agreement, the second on the U.S.-Korea Free Trade Agreement. Earlier, the Finance Committee held a hearing on the U.S.-Colombia Trade Promotion Agreement. These agreements have been thoroughly reviewed by our Finance Committee. In fact, given that the Colombia agreement was signed in 2006 and the Panama and South Korea agreements in 2007, these agreements have been more than thoroughly reviewed by U.S. elected officials and U.S. agencies over the past several years. For the sake of the U.S. economy and for the sake of our country's standing in the world, it is clearly time to take the next step. It is time for President Obama to submit implementing legislation for these agreements to the Congress.

The U.S. trade agreements with Colombia, Panama, and South Korea are good agreements that will benefit the United States and American workers. According to the nonpartisan U.S. International Trade Commission, these trade agreements, once fully implemented, will likely increase U.S. exports by over $12 billion and grow the U.S. gross domestic product by over $14 billion. Put simply, our trade agreements with Colombia, Panama, and South Korea will boost U.S. exports, expand the U.S. economy, and thus promote job growth in the United States.

The President and members of his administration understand this. They have spoken on numerous occasions on the benefits of the U.S. trade agreements with Colombia, Panama, and South Korea for our country. Please bear with me as I review some of their statements.

Four months ago, President Obama, in his State of the Union Address—4 months ago—expressed his support for the U.S.-Korea Free Trade Agreement, which he stated will support at least 70,000 American jobs. He then asked Congress to pass the Korea agreement as soon as possible.

Last December, President Obama noted that the South Korea agreement is expected to increase annual exports of American goods by up to $11 billion. In that same speech, he said:

I look forward to working with Congress and leaders in both parties to approve this pact because if there is one thing Democrats and Republicans should be able to agree on, it should be creating jobs and opportunities for our people.

I couldn't agree more.

Just 2 months ago, the President stated that he believes a recently announced labor action plan of Colombia serves as a basis for moving forward on a U.S.-Colombia free-trade agreement and that this represents a potential $1 billion of exports—our exports—and could mean thousands of jobs for workers here in the United States.

After meeting with President Martinelli of Panama, President Obama said he is confident now that a free-trade agreement would be good for our country, would create jobs here in the United States and open up new markets with potential for billions of dollars of cross-border trade.

The President's principal trade adviser, U.S. Trade Representative Ron Kirk, just last month recognized that the U.S.-Korea trade agreement will support more than 70,000 American jobs, and he noted as well that it will result in over $10 billion in increased annual exports from the United States.

In April, Ambassador Kirk said Colombia represents $1.1 billion in new export opportunities for the United States. Regarding Panama, he stated that the Panama agreement will provide access to one of the fastest growing markets in Latin America.

In speaking of all three pending agreements only last month, Ambassador Kirk said that “the pending agreements with South Korea, Panama, and Colombia are at the forefront of our efforts to open new markets.”

In April, Secretary of Commerce Gary Locke emphasized the need to pass the U.S.-Korea Trade Promotion Agreement through Congress as soon as possible. He also said that the administration feels similar urgency to get the pending Panama and Colombia trade deals done. He noted that all three pending trade agreements will move us even closer to President Obama's National Export Initiative goal of doubling American exports by 2015.

Secretary of Agriculture Tom Vilsack has spoken on behalf of the administration in favor of our pending trade agreements with Colombia, Panama, and South Korea. On May 12, he stated that the paramount reason to implement these three pending trade agreements is jobs. He went on to note that these trade agreements will result in over $2 billion in additional sales of U.S. agricultural products. Secretary Vilsack has also stated that until we complete these three trade agreements, U.S. agriculture will not have a level playing field in Colombia, Panama, or South Korea.

Secretary of State Hillary Clinton has spoken on the benefits of these three trade agreements for our country. When discussing the U.S.-Korea Free Trade Agreement in April, she stated not only that this agreement will increase U.S. exports by billions of dollars and thus support tens of thousands of American jobs but also that implementing the South Korea agreement is profoundly in our strategic interest. When speaking on the subject of trade and economic growth last month, Secretary Clinton said that "one of our top goals is to complete free trade agreements with Colombia and Panama."

As someone might say, there is a lot of upside to these agreements—billions in new exports, billions in economic growth, and thousands of new jobs. What is not to like?

So I have a question. What is the holdup? What on Earth is the administration waiting on? This country needs all the jobs and economic growth we can get. So why does the administration refuse to submit these agreements to Congress for consideration? Despite declaring the benefits of these agreements for the United States at every turn, the Obama administration is sitting on them, hurting our economy, and undermining our job growth.

With respect to international trade, the administration has adopted a policy of delay and dither. I see few signs that the administration is working hard to move these agreements through Congress. I don't see administration officials walking the Halls of Congress in attempts to build support for the Colombia, Panama, and South Korea agreements. While the administration has said great things about these agreements, as I have mentioned, its efforts to build any type of momentum to advance them on Capitol Hill are tepid at best.

On trade policy, the administration is all talk and no action, or, as my friends from Texas might put it, on these agreements, the President and his team are all hat and no cattle. This is definitely a strange economic strategy. While our economy remains shaky, unemployment remains high—the unemployment rate is at 9.1 percent—and while the rest of the world watches in bewilderment as the United States lets other countries take over our export markets, the administration just sits there. It just sits there.

Actually, let me correct myself. The administration doesn't just sit there; instead, the administration is actually going out of its way, finding new excuses for not moving forward with the implementation of these trade agreements.

Despite countless speeches from the President and his administration about the importance of the three trade agreements to American exports, creating American jobs, and strengthening our alliances with key friends, his administration busies itself con-cocting more roadblocks, more delays, and more excuses. It is time to be blunt about this. This schizophrenic trade policy is doing nothing but hurting American workers, hurting jobs, and undermining our recovery.

I believe each free-trade agreement, standing on its own merits and with the full backing of the White House and congressional leadership, will pass with significant bipartisan margins. But we are now told we will never have a chance to vote on any of these agreements unless the White House and Democratic Senators get what they want on trade adjustment assistance.

Let's put this in perspective. Our economy teeters on the brink with a weak economic recovery. One in seven Americans happens to be on food stamps. Durable goods orders dropped 3.6 percent in April. Last month, the economy added only 54,000 private sector jobs, and unemployment went up to 9.1 percent. The real estate market remains in tatters with the average single family home price falling by 33 percent since 2007. We face an historic spending crisis that has generated warnings from Standard & Poors and Moody's that the Federal Government faces a downgrade in its debt rating—an action that would be devastating for this Nation and to America's families.

To forestall this coming crisis, leaders in Congress and the administration are meeting on an almost daily basis to determine how best to get our Nation's deficits and debt under control. Every spending program and expenditure is being reviewed to find cuts to get our fiscal house in order.

Everyone recognizes these three trade agreements will promote jobs and economic growth at a time when both are in short supply. Submitting and passing free trade agreements would be a quick and cost-free way of generating economic growth. Yet, in an environment where Congress is desperately attempting to encourage economic growth and rein in spending to avert a fiscal crisis, the White House and many Democrats are delaying the pro-growth trade agreements until we get more government spending through TAA, the trade adjustment assistance program. And for what? If an expanded TAA is so critical, where is the record of success to prove it? What evidence is there that giving some workers who have lost their jobs more benefits than others improves U.S. competitiveness or is a responsible way to spend taxpayer dollars? The mere fact that more people are in a program, and that more taxpayer money is being spent, is not evidence of success.

Congress does not pick winners and losers in the movie rental business. When Blockbuster employees lost their jobs because of the rise of Netflix, nobody stood up and said we should create a new, big, spending government program to help displaced Blockbuster employees.

President Reagan recognized the problems inherent in this program when he said:

[t]he purpose [of TAA] is to help these workers find jobs in growing sectors of our economy. There's nothing wrong with that, but because these benefits are paid out on top of normal unemployment benefits, we wind up paying greater benefits to those who lose their jobs because of foreign competition than we do to their friends and neighbors who are laid off due to domestic competition. Anyone must agree that this is unfair.

That is what President Reagan said.

By tacking the expansion of TAA onto the stimulus bill, and refusing to allow Congress to vote on the extended TAA program on its own merits, it is unclear whether there is, in fact, bipartisan support for this expanded program. It is billions of dollars more. If the expanded TAA program can stand on its own merits, as each of the FTAs can, then it should be introduced and voted on separately from the free trade agreements. Demanding an expanded TAA as another excuse to delay voting on these important agreements is irresponsible and self-defeating.

At the same time, by not submitting these agreements for approval by Congress, the administration is doing a disservice to the American economy and, at the same time, is letting down some of our strongest allies. Nothing good can come from this continued inaction.

Make no mistake about it. Failure to submit these agreements is a failure in Presidential leadership. I am convinced the window for the administration to submit these agreements will soon pass. Given the upcoming election season, I am afraid if these agreements aren't submitted this summer, they never will be.

The President needs to act. I appreciate the President's goal of doubling exports. Having goals is great. But we all know that if one doesn't do the work and take action, goals become little more than false hope. They never become reality.

The President and his Cabinet admit these agreements are essential to their goal of doubling exports and creating jobs here at home. Yet, the action necessary to achieve that goal and create those jobs—submission of the agreements—remains in the distant future. Instead of benefiting from these agreements, we watch the days slip by, the explanations and excuses pile up, our export markets decline, and our economy suffers.

I strongly urge the President to submit implementing bills for the Colombia, Panama, and South Korea trade agreements to Congress this summer. There is no time like the present when it comes to encouraging economic growth and business creation.

I understand they want to help their union employees throughout the country who are less than 7 percent of the private sector economy. What about the millions and millions of others who are losing their jobs not because of this but because we don't export and we don't have these free trade agreements with these three very important countries to us, both from a neighbor standpoint and from a strategic standpoint?

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. CORKER. Madam President, it is my understanding I have 10 minutes; is that correct?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. CORKER. If I happen to go 8 minutes or so, would the Chair let me know when I have 2 minutes remaining?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. CORKER. Thank you very much, Madam President.

DURBIN AMENDMENT

Mr. CORKER. Madam President, I rise today to speak about something that is affectionately known as the Durbin amendment. During the Dodd-Frank debate that occurred about a year ago and upon its passage, there was an amendment brought to the floor called the Durbin amendment which dealt with debit cards and regulating debit cards. This was an amendment that never had been debated. There had never been a hearing on this amendment. In the height of people being very concerned about the large financial institutions in our country, this was an amendment that passed. I voted against it. I thought it was bad for us as a country to allow the Federal Reserve to begin setting prices for specific industries as the Durbin amendment called for. In any event, the Durbin amendment became law. I know numbers of people in this body have been contacted since that time about the effects of the Durbin amendment.

What the Durbin amendment did was tell the Federal Reserve to set prices on debit cards based on incremental cost. Let me say that one more time: based on incremental cost. In other words, when a business does business, there are fixed costs and there are incremental costs. It would be like saying to a pizza company that sells pizzas across the counter that the only thing they can charge for is the dough. They couldn't charge for anything else that went into the cost of the product that was being sold.

I am obviously opposed to price setting. I realize we don't have 60 votes in this body to do away with price fixing in general as it relates to debit cards. I also realize a lot of people in this body believe there is a problem, if you will, with an almost monopolistic-type atmosphere as it relates to debit cards in general. So what I have tried to do is seek a better solution than the one that has come forth. Senator TESTER and I have worked together. We have made actually three revisions to an amendment that I hope we will be voting on over the course of the next 48 hours, maybe 72 hours. It has been crafted in a way to bring people together. What it does, the essence of it, is that it directs the Fed to—instead of setting prices on debit cards based solely on the incremental cost of the transaction—consider all costs, both fixed and incremental, which is something that anybody in this body who happened to be in business certainly would want to be the case.

I know there has been a lot of populism in this body and a lot of people have tried to rail, if you will, against financial institutions. I know a lot of people have empathy with retailers who find themselves in a situation where it is difficult for them to negotiate prices as it relates to debit cards. What this would do, though, is still leave debit cards as a regulated entity. It is not the solution I would ultimately like to see, but I think it is a solution we may be able to agree to in this body. It would leave that regulated, but it would direct the Fed to consider all costs, fixed and incremental. Again, it is a very commonsense measure.

I know there have been lots of discussions about a solution to this Durbin amendment. I know it is an issue most people in this body wish to see go away. A lot of people feel as though they are being pitted, if you will, between the financial industry and retailers.

I think the solution Senator TESTER and I, working with Senator CRAPO and others, have come up with is one that meets the commonsense test. It brings people together around a policy of solving a problem that was created, again, without a lot of discussion on the Senate floor, and certainly no hearings. So I ask Members of the body to please talk with their staffs about the most recent changes that have been put forth in this amendment.

This is not something that is trying to stave off or keep the effects of the Durbin amendment from taking place, but what it does is put a more fair structure in place where the Fed can actually look at all costs relating to a transaction. Again, think about it. If someone is selling pizzas in a pizza restaurant or a retail establishment and they were told the only thing they could do is charge for the dough that went into the pizza and nothing else—none of the rent, none of the other costs that go with operating the facility—obviously they wouldn't be in business very long.

I think all of us want to see the financial industry continue to be innovative. I think all of us see a day when we are going to be able to basically pay bills with our electronic devices, and continued innovation is going to take place, which causes our economy to expand.

I believe this amendment, which has been shaped by a number of people in this body, meets the commonsense test. I think it provides a good solution for those people who actually voted for the Durbin amendment on the floor and realized afterwards what was happening, which was putting in place a price structure that is not sustainable for debit cards and over time, no question—over a very short amount of time—quickly—is going to be very adversely affecting consumers all across this country.

I thank the Chair for the time. The Tester-Corker amendment is designed to create a more productive solution than was offered under the Dodd-Frank debate and the Durbin amendment. I hope all Members of this body will look at this seriously. I know everybody has been contacted. I understand this is a very contentious issue. This solution is being put forth to solve a problem, not to take one side or another. It leaves the debit card industry as a regulated industry, but allows the Fed, as it should, to take into account both fixed and incremental costs as they look at what the pricing structure ought to be.

In addition, I know a lot of people have been concerned about what is going to happen with small financial institutions. Obviously, their costs for debit transactions are much higher than the larger institutions in this country. People have been concerned about the impact on them. What this would also do is give the Fed the ability every 2 years to see if the policy they put in place is adversely affecting the smaller and rural banks or the community banks or smaller credit unions, to make sure that if they are being affected adversely, then they can recommend—not prescribe but recommend—some legislative fixes for that.

Again, I hope Members of this body will see this as a reasonable solution. I urge all of my colleagues to contact me personally or Senator TESTER personally to talk this through if they have any questions, and hopefully we can bring to an end this contentious debate over an amendment that was passed on the Senate floor without any hearings, and which I think all of us know is going to create a lot of unintended consequences for people all across this country.

With that, I yield the floor, and I note the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MEDICARE

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Madam President, we are discussing the Federal budget in Washington on a nonstop basis. One point that seems very noteworthy is that instead of working to create jobs to help grow the economy out of recession, Republicans are still trying to end Medicare as we know it, as it has been relied on for generations of Americans, in order to pay for tax cuts for millionaires. This is the Wall Street Journal describing the Republicans' plan to essentially end Medicare.

The Republican plan to end Medicare would put insurance company officials between seniors and their doctors. You no longer have a claim to the individual benefit under their plan. You get a voucher that goes to the insurance company, and you are at the mercy of the insurance company. First of all, they raise drug costs for seniors from day No. 1 by repealing the repair we did to the doughnut hole. Then, of course, 10 years out, you are left at the mercy of private insurance companies.

The effect of that is that, on average, seniors will pay nearly $6,400 more out of pocket every year as a result of this Republican plan. Rhode Island has a lot of seniors. I do not know a lot who have an additional $6,359 every year to spend on health care costs that would no longer be covered.

It is worth noting that one of the first things that happens when you take the $1 that goes to Medicare and give it to private insurance companies instead is, the 2-percent or 3-percent administrative costs that Medicare takes out—which leaves you, let's say, 97 cents of the $1 to pay for health care—that jumps to between 15 percent and 25 percent, leaving you only 85 cents to 75 cents out of your $1 to pay for health care because the private system is so inefficient and eats up so much in administrative costs for salaries and for quarreling with doctors and hospitals about payment and all that.

They do not even use this to reduce the deficit in a significant way. The savings achieved by ending Medicare and raising seniors' health care costs by nearly $6,400 every year out of pocket are being used to pay for, guess what. More tax cuts for America's millionaires and billionaires. Every 33 seniors who have to pay that extra $6,400 will add up to one millionaire's $200,000 bonus tax break.

The Republican budget makes average cuts of $165 billion per year in Medicare between 2022 and 2030. That gives $131 billion in tax cuts for millionaires, billionaires, big corporations, and Big Oil—$165 billion out of seniors' pockets, $131 billion to millionaires, billionaires, big corporations, and Big Oil. We think it is time for our colleagues to get serious about creating jobs to grow our economy out of this recession and abandon their attempts to ram through a clearly ideological agenda against Medicare—indeed, that ends Medicare and helps the Nation's very wealthiest at the expense of seniors and the middle class.

Let me talk for just a minute about where we are in the Tax Code with our wealthiest versus seniors and the middle class. Clearly, we agree we have to bring our finances into balance. Clearly, we have to avoid a debt-limit failure that causes a default by our country for the first time in its history. Eliminating unnecessary spending should be part of the Federal balancing equation. Indeed, through multiple appropriations bills this year, we have pared back billions of dollars in Federal spending, and we will do more, but bipartisan consensus seems to end here when we move to the revenue side of the Federal budget. Just last month, Republicans filibustered a measure that would have ended $21 billion of unnecessary tax breaks for the largest oil and gas companies in the world, companies that have been enjoying record multibillion-dollar profits and do not need continued support from the American taxpayer.

That made the Republican message clear: In balancing the budget, closing tax loopholes and repealing corporate subsidies is not on the table. The debt and the deficit, they tell us, are the most important problems facing the country. But evidently they are less important than protecting tax subsidies for Big Oil. That is what their vote proves. They will cut education, police protection, health care, job training, and environmental protection but will not touch tax subsidies for large corporations or for millionaires and billionaires.

There is a basic question underlying all this; that is, are the superrich paying a fair share? Each year, the Internal Revenue Service publishes a report that details the taxes paid by the highest earning 400 Americans. I gave a speech a few weeks ago showing from what was then the most recent data, that in 2007, these super high income earners, earning nearly one-third of a billion dollars each in just 1 year, paid a lower tax rate than an average hospital orderly pushing a cart down the halls of a hospital in Rhode Island. I showed the Helmsley Building in New York, big enough to have its own ZIP Code, because we know from IRS information gathered by ZIP Code that the wealthy, successful occupants of this building actually paid a 14.7-percent total Federal tax rate. There is the building. There is the Helmsley Building in New York. The people who live there do very well. They are very successful, which is wonderful. That is the American way. They are very well compensated. That too is the American way.

But what is different is that they actually paid a 14.7-percent total Federal tax rate, which is lower than the average New York janitor or doorman or security guard pays. If averages hold, the very successful and well-off inhabitants of this building are paying a significantly lower tax rate to the Federal Government than the doorman who works for them and the security guard who keeps an eye out for their security and the janitors who clean up the halls.

The most recent IRS report is out about the top 400, from 2008. Let's take a look at that information. The top 400 incomes in America in 2008 had an average income each in that 1 year of $270 million. That is a pretty good year when you can make more than one-quarter of a billion dollars. That is the American dream, big time. But what they actually paid in taxes, those 400, on average, was a rate of 18.2 percent. That is their total Federal tax rate, all the taxes put in. What did they actually pay—not what the nominal rate is but what did they actually pay? The IRS calculated this. This is not an estimate, this is the IRS's calculation. Although we spend a lot of time debating around here whether the top income tax rate for the wealthy should be 35 percent or 39.6 percent, that is not what they pay. The Tax Code is filled with special provisions that tend to either exclusively or disproportionately benefit the wealthy so the top 400 income earners in the country pay an average tax rate of 18.2 percent.

Who else pays an 18.2 percent tax rate in this country? If you are a single filer, you hit 18.2 percent when your salary gets to $39,350. When you are making $39,350 your Federal taxes—income and withholding, payroll taxes—combine to 18.2 percent, just like the 400 millionaires and billionaires who made actually over one-quarter of a billion dollars in the same year that this taxpayer would have made less than $40,000.

What does that equate to in terms of jobs? The Bureau of Labor Statistics for the Providence, RI, labor market says, on average, a truckdriver will earn about $40,200. At that income point, $40,200, that truckdriver is paying the same tax rate as the 400 biggest interest earners in the country. They each earned over one-quarter of a billion dollars. They paid 18.2 percent. The truckdriver earns $40,000. He would be paying 18.2 percent, maybe a little over. If that truckdriver gets a raise or if he or she decides they are going to work a second job at night and increase their income a little bit, guess what. They would then be paying a higher tax rate than those 400 super high income earners. In fact, the highest income earners pay a rate far below what people who think their average income earners actually pay.

Of course, tax inequality extends beyond just individuals. At a time when household budgets are strained, profitable corporations are paying just about their lowest share of Federal revenues in 75 years. If you go back to 1935, you see that regular Americans and corporate America evenly split the responsibility to fund our country's obligations, to pay for America's expenses. Then, in each of these following years, the ratio between what corporations pay in revenues to the government versus what individuals pay broke through these ratio levels. By 1948, the individuals were paying twice as much in revenues to the Federal Government as corporations. By 1971, regular humans, regular Americans were paying three times as much of the revenues of the United States of America as corporations were. In 1981, it broke through 4 to 1. For every $1 an American taxpayer paid to support this country, corporations just kicked in one-quarter. In 2009, it broke through 6 to 1, meaning that the average American, the ordinary taxpayer, the individual human being puts in $6 of revenue to support this country for every $1 corporate America contributes.

When people say how overtaxed corporate America is, it is worth looking at this record of an ever-diminishing contribution by America's corporate community to our Nation's revenue. Of course, the Republican filibuster of our efforts to strip Big Oil subsidies that would have put $21 billion back into taxpayers' pockets or reduced the debt and the deficit by $21 billion is noteworthy in this light.

Even against this rapid decline in corporate tax support for American Government compared to a huge runup in what individual Americans pay, our colleagues on the other side of the aisle insist on continuing to support tax subsidies for Big Oil, while they are making the biggest profits any corporation has ever made.

We looked at the Helmsley Building a moment ago. Let's look at a different building. Let's look at a picture that our Budget Committee chairman, KENT CONRAD, uses. This was taken in the Cayman Islands. It is a relatively nondescript building, not worthy of particular note, except that over 18,000 corporations claim this building as the place they are doing business out of; 18,000 corporations. Really? Do we think 18,000 corporations are doing real business out of that building?

As Chairman CONRAD has pointed out, the only business going on in that building is funny business, monkey business with the U.S. Tax Code.

This is estimated to cost us as much as $100 billion every year. For every one of those $100 billion lost to the tax cheaters hiding down there in the Cayman Islands, honest, tax-paying Americans and honest tax-paying American corporations have to pay an extra $1 or more to make up the difference.

We recently voted for a continuing resolution to fund the government for the remainder of the fiscal year, and in it I supported, and my colleagues supported, belt tightening across many agencies and programs, including even cuts in the accounts that fund Senators' offices. So we are not against cuts.

But serious people understand we cannot just cut our way back to a balanced budget. There simply is not enough to cut. Not since 1960—more than half a century ago—have we had a balanced budget at the revenue levels as a percent of GDP that the Republican House-passed budget proposes.

When our tax system permits billionaires to pay lower tax rates than truckdrivers and allows some of the most profitable corporations in the world to pay little or no taxes at all, even if we had no budget deficits fairness and equality would demand that we address these preposterous discrepancies.

Our budget crisis, however, brings new urgency to the problem. As we continue to debate ways to close the budget gap, I hope my Republican colleagues will revisit the potential to significantly cut the deficit by addressing tax loopholes, tax gimmicks, tax subsidies, and the daily injustice to the ordinary taxpayer when the wealthiest and highest income Americans pay tax rates that are the equivalent to an ordinary truckdriver in Rhode Island, and the basic lawyer or realtor or doctor is paying rates far, far higher than the super, super-rich.

I see other colleagues have come to the floor, so I will yield the floor to them and appreciate very much the attention that has been paid to these remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TESTER). With some reservation, the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, there is a prohibition in the U.S. Constitution from cruel and unusual punishment, and the fact that you will be presiding in the chair when I am going to be speaking on an amendment which you are offering is truly cruel and unusual, but I am going to inflict it anyway. I will try to be as gentle as I can in the process.

Very briefly, I want to thank the Senator from Rhode Island for his comments on the Tax Code and the need we have in this country to address taxes in a responsible, humane, and, I would add, progressive way. I think he has made the point over and over again, which I will make myself in just a few moments, and I think the Senator from Vermont may follow me.

DEBIT CARD SWIPE FEES

Mr. DURBIN. But before that, I would like to address what is known affectionately as the Tester-Corker amendment, which was brought up on the Senate floor earlier this morning by Senator CORKER of Tennessee.

One year ago—to be more specific, about 11 months ago—we had a big debate on the floor of the Senate about Wall Street: What are we going to do about Wall Street and the practices on Wall Street which hurt our economy? Especially we were worried about the last recession and some of the things that happened on Wall Street at the biggest banks and biggest insurance companies that hurt Americans across the board; that reduced the value of our savings and caused us as a Congress, with President Bush's cooperation, to pass a basic bailout bill sending billions of dollars to these banks that had made stupid, reckless decisions that wrecked the economy; to try to save them from going under.

Think about that. Here are the biggest financial institutions in the United States that have made terrible decisions—some failed, such as Lehman Brothers—which harmed our overall economy—we are still suffering from it—harmed individual families and businesses across the board, and then, as they were about to sink out of sight, they said: You have to save us. Send us taxpayers' money.

Well, I will tell you something: I voted for that. I am not proud or happy about that, but that is the situation. But when the Chairman of the Federal Reserve and the Secretary of the Treasury came and said, as they did to us: This could be a catastrophe equal to the Great Depression if you do not do something—I thought to myself: This violates every value I have about these Wall Street financiers and the way they operate, but I cannot let the American economy go down. I think many Senators felt the same way on both sides of the aisle.

So we sent them billions of dollars to keep them afloat after their terrible decisions. How did they reward us? What was the thank-you card they sent to the taxpayers of America? They gave themselves bonuses—multi-million-dollar bonuses. These same banks, in their reckless stupidity, driving us into a recession, bailed out by taxpayers, then came back and announced they were giving each other rewards for great performance—millions of dollars. It finally ended up being billions of dollars to these big banks. Outrageous.

So last year we sat down with the Wall Street reform bill, the Dodd-Frank bill, and said: We are going to change some of the rules you play by up on Wall Street so you never have a chance to do this to America again.

We went through a broad array of things we considered. One of the things we considered affects virtually every single American; that is, the use of something called a debit card.

We may not think twice about it, but for those of us who have been around a little while, there was a time when we had cash in our wallets and a checkbook. Those were the two ways we paid for things. Then came credit cards. Then came this new invention called a debit card. A debit card is basically a plastic check. When we swipe that debit card for a transaction, money comes out of our checking accounts and pays the merchant we are doing business with. It is a great convenience. I use them now. I think more than half of purchasers across America are using debit cards and credit cards every day.

But at the same time there was this growth in debit card use across America, something else was happening that was entirely invisible to the public. Each time that debit card was swiped, the banks ended up taking a fee. Well, you say: That is not unreasonable. They should be taking a fee. They used to collect a fee for processing checks. Why wouldn't they collect a fee for using a debit card? Except something was going on that we were not aware of until we looked into it closely: they were raising the amount they were taking each time the debit card was used to now the highest level debit card transaction fees in the world.

The Federal Reserve tells us they charge on average 44 cents every time someone swipes a debit card. In other words, if someone is running a little store in Springfield, IL, and a person walks in—and I have seen this happen—and says they want to buy a $1.29 pack of gum, hands over the debit card, and they swipe the debit card, that merchant in that little store has to look at it and say: I just lost money. I am not going to make 44 cents of profit on the sale of that pack of gum. Now I have to pay that to the bank and credit card company, 44 cents.

So a year ago we said: Let's take a look and see what is a reasonable charge, not what they are charging but what is reasonable to pay to the bank and the credit card company. The Federal Reserve, which, if anything, has a strong bias toward the banking industry—always has; they are never viewed as a consumer protection agency—came back and said it ought to be closer to 10 cents or 12 cents, one-third or one-fourth of what is actually being charged.

So here is what we said: The Federal Reserve established a reasonable, proportional debit card swipe fee so consumers and retailers across America are not giving to the banks across this country, particularly the largest banks across this country, a windfall every time a debit card is swiped. It sounds reasonable to me. These merchants had no voice in determining how much was going to be charged on a debit card transaction. They were stuck with it. It was invisible, and it was killing them.

Well, what happened? What happened after we passed this? The banks and credit card companies across America went on a warpath: We have to stop this debit card amendment.

They have spent a fortune lobbying Congress, working the Members back and forth, saying: You have to protect us. You cannot let this new rule go into effect which reduces the fee we collect every time anyone uses a debit card.

Why would they lose sleep over 44 cents? Add it up. Every month in America the banks are collecting $1.3 billion from consumers across America. Every time we use a debit card to buy gasoline, groceries, go to a hotel, restaurant, make a contribution to the Red Cross in the middle of disaster, pay tuition at a university, they are taking a percentage out of every transaction to the tune of $1.3 billion a month. That is why. They have moved Heaven and Earth to stop this new rule from going into effect which reduces the fees these banks—over half of them, the largest Wall Street banks—are collecting.

We are going to have a vote on it this week. It is an important vote, and it is a vote I think will be a test as to whether we are going to come down on the side of consumers, small businesses, and retailers in America, or on the side of the Wall Street banks and the credit card companies.

Interesting test, isn't it, to find out where the Senate is going to come down on this issue? I think it will be a close vote. I am not sure, but I think it will be close, and it is important.

Senator CORKER of Tennessee came to the Senate floor earlier and said: Well, we have come up with a solution. There is a new version of our amendment today which we are going to offer. Some Members have called it a compromise. It is not a compromise. A compromise suggests that both sides came together and agreed on something. There has not been any input from the retailers, small businesses, and consumers across America. The only compromise is among the big banks and the bigger banks in terms of what they are going to collect on these debit cards.

I will tell you point blank, if the purpose of this amendment is to protect credit unions and community banks, there is a way to do it. We can give them more reassurances beyond what the law already says, which I think is totally adequate for what we need to do. This amendment, this so-called solution amendment, does not even address it. What it addresses is the overall issue and the billion dollars-plus that these banks want to keep collecting while a so-called study goes on for another year. They want to include, incidentally, in the "reasonable cost" for the debit card executive compensation, compensation of bank officials.

How much compensation do we give to those who work at the Wall Street banks? It turns out last year it was $20.8 billion in executive compensation. They want to add that in as part of the operational cost of using a debit card.

The bonuses? We are going to pay for the bonuses? That is a reasonable debit card cost?

I want to tell you, this amendment is written by and for the banks, the biggest banks of all, and it is not written with the consumers in mind. Look through all the organizations of this new amendment and try to find one consumer group, one small business group, one group of retailers that were part of establishing what a reasonable fee is. You will not find them. They are all banking regulators—people who have no reputation for standing up for consumers.

So the debate will ensue for the rest of this week on this amendment. I think it is a critical amendment. I hope my colleagues will stand by me and the Federal Reserve in the vote we took last year.

I see the Senator from Vermont is here. I was told I had a few minutes to speak. He appears anxious, so I am going to make my remarks on the other subject brief.

BUSH TAX CUTS

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island spoke about the 10th anniversary of the George W. Bush tax cuts. These were tax cuts that primarily benefitted the wealthiest people in America, and we recently renewed them. There was a decision made that to keep the economy moving forward we were not going to raise taxes, even on the wealthiest people.

But it is worth reflection for a moment about what happened when we cut the taxes 10 years ago. The promise then is the same promise we now hear from the other side of the aisle: If you will cut taxes on the wealthiest people in America, our economy will flourish.

Well, it turns out that was not the case at all. In fact, what happened is that we saw the economy suffer. Ten years ago, President Bush signed into law the first massive tax cut. He said that this tax relief would create jobs. The month the first Bush tax cuts were signed into law, in June of 2001, the American economy had 132 million jobs—132 million jobs. Three years later, we were down to 131.4 million. Cutting taxes for the wealthiest people in America was not a job stimulator. The economy lost jobs in the 3 years following the Bush tax cuts. Over his 8 years in office, job growth under President Bush was 4.8 percent, compared to 16.2 percent under President Clinton.

Before I defer to my colleague from Vermont, I will tell you one other fact that is worth noting. First, when President Clinton left office and President George W. Bush took over, we had a surplus, a surplus that was keeping the Social Security trust fund flush with money and growing in strength. At that time, the net national debt, accumulated since George Washington, $5 trillion—$5 trillion when Clinton left office and Bush took over. Fast forward 8 years later as George W. Bush left office. What was the situation? The national debt had more than doubled to more than $10 trillion, and the projected deficit for the next fiscal year for President Obama—his first fiscal year—$1.2 trillion, the highest in history.

What happened? We waged two wars and did not pay for them—wars in Iraq and Afghanistan. We added to the national debt. And President Bush, for the first time in the history of the United States, did something no other President had done: He cut taxes in the midst of a war, which is counterintuitive; you do not have enough money to pay for the ordinary expenses of government, now you have got the new expenses of war, and you are cutting taxes?

Not surprisingly, this added dramatically to our national debt. So now comes the Republican side again, with our economy still recovering—unfortunately too slowly—and their recipe is tax cuts for the wealthy. I would say those of us who are fortunate to live in this great country and have the comfort of a good salary should not begrudge paying this country's debts and this country's needs. I think it is part of our responsibility of citizenship.

There are those who are struggling to get by in lower income and middle-income categories who I think need a helping hand. But those at the highest levels of income—over $250,000 a year, over $500,000 a year—should not be angry about accepting more responsibility in trying to help this Nation move forward.

The Bush tax cuts did not help create jobs, they caused the deficit to explode and they made it even worse in terms of our inequality of income. Why would we want to do that again? There are 13.9 million people in this country who want to work but cannot find a job; millions more have accepted fewer hours and less income than they like out of desperation.

We should be focusing now on creating jobs in America, good-paying jobs that stay right here at home. We ought to be helping middle- and lower income families who are struggling to get by. We ought to deal with our deficit in honest terms, cutting spending where there is waste and misuse of funds, and then saying, we need revenue on the table as well.

We need to make sure we have a bipartisan approach for this. I will continue in that effort to try to reach that goal. But I hope we have learned a lesson over the last 10 years when it comes to tax cuts for the wealthy. They led us to the highest deficits in our history. At this point, I am afraid using that recipe again will create even more economic hardship.

I yield the floor and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT REVITALIZATION ACT OF 2011—MOTION TO PROCEED

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of the motion to proceed to S. 782, which the clerk will report by title.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 782) to amend the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965 to reauthorize that Act, and for other purposes.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, as the chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee who watched with pleasure as we voted this bill out of our committee with total unanimous support—except for one, we almost had everyone—I am delighted that the leader has chosen to go to the reauthorization of the Economic Development Administration.

I will tell you why. There are three reasons: jobs, jobs, jobs. We know when President Obama took over, he faced a situation where we were losing 700,000 to 800,000 jobs a month. Imagine. We were bleeding those jobs. Credit was frozen. We almost lost the auto industry. We had to take tremendous steps to turn this around.

I personally believe, after listening to the experts evaluate what we did, that we did some very important work to stabilize this economy. But clearly this recession we are trying to get out of is the worst since the Great Depression. The job loss has been severe. So it is very difficult. When you lose 7, 8 million jobs in that kind of a downturn, you need robust job creation to get these jobs back.

We had a very important bill on the floor dealing with small business—to help small business. That bill was loaded with a bunch of extraneous amendments and it never got off the floor. Now is our chance. I do not mind it if people attach amendments that they think are very important, and we have some reasonable time set aside for those, we have votes on those. I do not have any problem with that. But we have got to get on with the business of job creation.

Let me tell you a little bit about the EDA. For 50 years, the EDA, the Economic Development Administration, has created jobs and spurred growth in economically hard-hit communities. This bill, S. 782, will ensure that EDA will continue to create employment opportunities, maintain existing jobs, and drive local economic growth.

We know the EDA's authorization expired in 2008. And, by the way, the last time it was voted on it was I believe under George Bush, and it was done by voice vote. Even in the House it was an overwhelmingly bipartisan vote. George Bush signed it. Can't we get back to the days of bipartisanship? I say to my colleagues, this is the moment.

A bill that has been voted out of the committee with near unanimous consent, a program that has been in place since 1965, and we know these are tough times. All of our communities are going through tough times—most of our communities are.

The EDA has worked beautifully with local communities to spur economic development. EDA provides a wide range of assistance to these areas. They fund water and sewer improvements. They help manufacturers and producers become more competitive. And here is the thing about these investments: They attract State dollars, local dollars, nonprofit dollars, private company dollars, so that every dollar we put into this program yields us $7 in private sector investment.

This is the first point I want to make to my colleagues and to the American people. EDA leverages Federal dollars to create jobs. One dollar of Economic Development Administration investment is expected to attract $7 in private sector investment. This comes from congressional testimony in March of 2011. That is why we got such a great vote out of our committee.

You are going to hear from Senator CARDIN later, who serves in a very senior position on that committee. It is rare that we have these type of votes. Since January of 2009, even though the EDA was not reauthorized, it still continued to go along under the old program. It continued to go along with appropriations.

Since 2009, public-private projects that grantees have looked at say they have created 161,500 jobs. Let's look at that chart. This is good news. I have good news today. This is a program that is working for the American people. Since January 2009, EDA has funded public-private projects that grantees estimate have created 161,500 jobs.

What we bring to you is a reauthorization of a very popular program that has been in place since 1965, that has always had tremendous bipartisan support, that is working on the ground, that the local people love. Let me tell you who has already endorsed this bill: the U.S. Conference of Mayors, the American Public Works Association, the National Association of Counties, the American Planning Association, the Association of University Research Parks, the Educational Association of University Centers, the International Economic Development Council, the National Association of Development Organizations, the National Business Incubation Association, the State Science and Technology Institute, the University Economic Development Association, the National Association of Regional Councils. These are people on the ground very close to our constituents. Who could be closer than the mayors and the counties? I started out as a county supervisor in a beautiful county called Marin. I can tell you on the ground, when you see these Federal dollars work it is very exciting because the cities and counties cannot do it alone. With the infusion of Federal funds, that sparks $7 of every $1 from private sector folks, and it makes a difference. I believe this is a win-win situation for our people.

In fiscal year 2010 alone, EDA approved investments of $640 million for 928 projects nationwide that are expected to create 74,000 jobs, save 22,000 jobs, and leverage $10 billion in private investment. So $640 million is expected to leverage $10 billion in private investment. That is a huge leverage.

In my home State of California, we are struggling, as so many parts of the country are, with unemployment rates. In California, EDA approved investments of $24 million in fiscal year 2010 for 27 projects expected to create 11,000 jobs, save 400 jobs, and leverage $400 million in private investment. As I stand here now, because of this program, in 2011, we are going to see jobs saved and created. Imagine, 11,000 new jobs—11,000 families who can breathe easier, pay their mortgage, and maybe go out to a restaurant once a week. That money trickles into the community and helps the small businesses.

We now know that in California, the city of Dixon is working on a $3 million program for water system improvements. That is 1,000 jobs.

There is a project in the city of Shafter for $2 million for sewer and water improvements, which will allow development of an additional 600 acres, and it will create 1,485 jobs and leverage $253 million in private investment. Nationwide, you could look at Boeing. We all know about Boeing. To help to mitigate Boeing's decision to reduce manufacturing jobs in Renton, WA, EDA invested $2 million in 2006 to help build infrastructure to serve the commercial redevelopment of a 42-acre aircraft manufacturing site. This redevelopment has created a mixed-use campus used by businesses focusing on commercial services, high-tech, and life sciences, which has helped create 2,500 jobs.

I say to my friends that right now we are struggling getting to the bill. At this point in time, we have a Republican dissenter who doesn't want us to move forward, and they want to look at this. I hope they look at these numbers. The American people want jobs. This is a bill that is directly related to job creation. This is a bill that leverages the Federal dollar. Why on Earth should there be any objection? This is a bill that passed the Senate unanimously when George W. Bush was President. He signed it and it was law. We should not be struggling over going to this bill. We ought to get on the bill and then get off the bill and send a message to the people that we are serious about job creation.

In Duluth, a $3.5 million grant, matched by $2.3 million from the city, helped build the Duluth Aviation Business Incubator at the Duluth Airport. This investment helped Cirrus Aircraft grow from a handful of employees to 1,012 employees by 2008. The incubator is now leased to Cirrus Design Corporation, which has the largest share of the worldwide general aviation market.

Here is another one on the east coast. In 2002, EDA provided $2 million to help build the Knowledge Works pre-incubator facility as part of the development of the Virginia Tech Corporate Research Center in Blacksburg, VA. The center and its Knowledge Works pre-incubator facility have led to the creation of 2,000 high-wage jobs and the inception of 140 high-tech businesses. Repeating, a $2 million infusion from the EDA led to the creation of 2,000 high-wage jobs and the inception of 140 high-tech businesses. They built this corporate research center in Blacksburg, VA.

EDA helps with disaster relief. In addition to helping communities respond to job loss due to the closure of a manufacturing plant or defense facility, for example, EDA helps communities respond to sudden and severe economic dislocations to the natural disaster.

In 2008, Congress provided EDA with a total of $500 million in natural disaster assistance through two supplemental appropriations. With these funds, EDA was able to assume the role of a secondary responder working with affected communities to support long-term, postdisaster economic recovery in response to hurricanes, floods, and other natural disasters. We know how important it is to have a program that can respond and help FEMA.

I can give you example after example of disaster relief. There was one case in Cedar Rapids, IA, where EDA provided funding to construct and install an upgraded, energy-efficient, natural gas-fired boiler system following a 2008 flood that destroyed the boiler that had provided steam heat and hot water to St. Luke's Hospital and Coe College. When the utility that owned the damaged facility decided not to rebuild after the flood, it left the hospital and college without a reliable energy supply. We all know what happens when there is a disaster and our hospitals cannot function. They came in and made a $4.6 million investment, and it was critical in keeping the hospital and college open, saving hundreds of jobs.

I can only say, in closing my opening remarks, let's step back and look at the big picture. I think DICK DURBIN spoke to it quite eloquently. Senator DURBIN was very clear when he said we are at a time now where we have to create jobs. He gave kind of the overview of what has happened.

When Bill Clinton was President, I was privileged enough to be here, sent by the people of California—my first term here. Bill Clinton faced a deficit, a debt, and a struggling economy. But with very smart plans, we turned it around. What were the smart plans? We reduced the deficit to zero, but we did it in a smart way. How did we do it? We kept on making investments that made sense at that time in energy, high-tech research, biomedical research. We made those investments. We cut the fraud and waste. We said to billionaires: You know what, you can do more for us, please. They are happy to do it, actually. So the millionaires and the billionaires paid their fair share, and we made smart investments and cut the waste, fraud, and abuse. We not only balanced the budget, but we created a surplus.

In comes George W. Bush, and our Republican friends decided that the thing they wanted to do more than anything was give tax breaks to the billionaires and millionaires—to the Warren Buffets, who don't need it, and to the Donald Trumps, who don't need it. They don't need it. The average of these tax cuts to these millionaires and billionaires was hundreds of thousands a year. What that means is, we are short funds here.

What do our Republican friends want to do now? They want to cut Medicare—end it—in order to continue to pay for the tax cuts for the millionaires. It is not necessary to go down that road.

That is not before us today. What is before us today is, in the battle of how to get that deficit under control, what are we going to do about jobs. Today, we are looking at a program that has strong bipartisan support, that leverages the Federal dollars, that gets great reviews, that got out of our committee with only one dissenting vote; that is, the EDA, the Economic Development Administration. They have six regions. They have six regional offices, and each region—including East, West, Midwest, South—gets a fair share of the appropriations. It goes to places that have good ideas on how to attract local and State nonprofit and private sector funding. Every $1 of EDA investment is expected to attract $7 in private sector investment, thereby saving and creating thousands and thousands of good jobs.

I understand my Republican friends are going to have a discussion at lunchtime as to whether to allow this bill to move forward. I hope, from the bottom of my heart, they will do so.

I yield to Senator CARDIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. President, let me compliment Senator BOXER for her leadership as chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee. I also compliment Senator INHOFE, the ranking member.

This is an important bill, dealing with economic development and the Economic Development Administration. This is all about creating jobs, as Senator BOXER pointed out, particularly in underserved communities. That is what EDA does.

This is a reauthorization bill. It was worked on in the last Congress. It came out of the Environment and Public Works Committee in the last Congress. It enjoys strong bipartisan support. Historically, it has been agreed to. It is important this reauthorization bill move through the Senate and the House and that the President has an opportunity to sign this bill so we can continue this important economic tool for our underserved communities.

I also compliment the majority leader, Senator REID. The bills he has brought forward in this Congress have been focused on creating jobs. We had the FAA reauthorization bill, which was important for the modernization and safety of our air traffic system, but it also created jobs and provided economic opportunity for more jobs in America.

We then considered the SBIR bill, which would have helped small businesses with innovation, growth, and job growth. I regret that that bill could not be completed because of extraneous amendments. But it shows our priority on moving legislation forward that will create jobs.

The EDA bill now before us I hope we can get to and move it quickly because it is, to me, a very important part of our strategy for the recovery of our economy and to create jobs in particularly underserved communities.

In Maryland, we have many communities that depend upon EDA funding in order to save and create jobs. The EDA, through the economic development districts, is helping plan to build roads, spread commerce, office parks, business centers, and for private sector businesses to locate to and expand access to broadband, which is critical to communication in today's global economy. These are the types of projects EDA sponsors. There are road projects and broadband to connect communities together.

EDA is responsible for promoting job growth and accelerating industrial and commercial development in communities suffering from limited job opportunities, low per capita income levels, and economic distress.

As the only Federal agency focusing solely on promoting private sector job growth in economically underserved communities, EDA pursues regional comprehensive strategy development, public works, and business loan funds. They put together a strategy for our areas that have high unemployment, areas that are difficult to attract new job opportunities. They developed a winning strategy to create jobs.

In Maryland, the EDA and our State university centers and economic development districts are responsible for helping administrate public works projects in rural communities on the Eastern Shore and in the western part of our State. These projects have assisted with the regional commercial needs as well as services to meet the needs of residents.

For example, the EDA has been essential in assisting with the planning and installation of the broadband communication network in western Maryland. Maryland will be a State that will be totally connected by the broadband. EDA has helped to bring that into underserved areas. We are connecting communities together by having jobs in broadband capacity.

It is also helping us create more small business opportunities, which is what we find is the dominant economic growth engine. We know in the Nation overall it is small businesses, but when we are dealing with underserved communities, small business growth is critical to their economic future. These investments go toward revitalizing, expansion, and upgrading of physical infrastructure in order to attract new industries, encourage business expansion and diversify local economies. In so doing, EDA seeks to establish foundations that enable communities to develop their own economic development programs for sustained development.

The EDA has an established and proven record of using increasingly limited resources to complete projects in a timely manner that leverage—leverage—private sector investment. Senator BOXER pointed that out. We are leveraging private sector investment with a relatively small amount of public funds.

In my home State of Maryland, EDA has supported more than 33 projects in the last 4 years that are credited with creating more than 2500 jobs, retaining over 100 jobs, and leveraging $218 million in private investment from $12 million in EDA investments. That is a much higher ratio than the average, as Senator BOXER pointed out. It is important we provide EDA with the resources necessary to continue this work. Many of these projects are in the more rural or underserved parts of the State.

Most recently, EDA provided seed money for two exciting projects on Maryland's Eastern Shore. In Dorchester County, near the town of Cambridge, on the Eastern Shore, the EDA is investing more than $600,000 in the renovation and repair of an existing vacant industrial building to be reused by a new manufacturing company that specializes in the production of green products made from recyclable materials.

This is a win, win, win situation. This is a project that will restore a defunct industrial facility—recycling an industrial facility—and saving jobs on the Eastern Shore of Maryland. It reduces material waste by making new products out of recyclable waste material, helping us with our energy and environmental policies, and saving 103 jobs while creating 20 new jobs. These 103 jobs would have been lost. Instead, we now have 123 jobs in an area where it is difficult to attract new jobs. It is leveraging more than $600,000 in direct investment in a facility that is expected to generate $6.6 million in private investment once the facility is operational, once again, referring to what Senator BOXER said, the leveraging of public funds for private investment in underserved areas and saving and creating jobs. This means for every Federal dollar invested, it generates $10 in private investment.

The economies of Wicomico, Worcester, and Somerset Counties have historically been linked to the health of the Chesapeake Bay. Years of Chesapeake Bay impairment have taken their toll on the bay's fisheries. Closely linked to the bay's impairment is the decline in lowland forest lands due to development pressures. The effects of these natural resource crises have resulted in the decline of jobs in the seafood harvesting and forestry industries on the lower shore. It is a priority of mine to restore the health of the Chesapeake Bay and the natural systems and jobs that support a healthy bay.

I also support the immediate work the EDA is doing to address the decline in jobs in the traditional industries on the lower shore by investing over $800,000 in workforce and business development centers that serve the lower counties of the Eastern Shore.

Much of the hard work that goes into selecting and developing projects is done by the hardworking men and women on the ground working for the local economic development districts and the university centers. These are the ones with the best understanding of the economic needs in the communities in which they work. That is why I worked hard with my colleagues on the Environment and Public Works Committee to improve the potential resources available to economic development districts to do the necessary planning for economic development projects in their districts.

Planning funds are hard to come by, but planning funds are essential. When the Environment and Public Works Committee took up the bill last Congress, the issue my economic development district urged me to fight for was increasing the authorization level for planning grants because they were so useful to the work they were doing and represented a sound investment of Federal dollars in the communities that needed the help the most. Planning grants provide invaluable matching funds for economic development districts, tribes, and local communities to pursue regional economic development goals and strategies.

None of the projects the economic development district helps administer would be possible without these planning grants. The demands on the economic development districts have increased significantly due to the current economic downturn as well as the new mandates by the EDA and the evolving nature of the global economy. The scope of the economic development districts' work goes well beyond EDA's projects and spans into planning and coordination of rural transportation projects, USDA rural health and water systems projects as well as HUD projects.

Without the annual planning investment EDA provides through the economic development districts, most rural areas would not have the capacity to apply for or administer economic development resources. The planning and administrative work done by the economic development districts is the backbone of EDA's public works and facilities development projects and would not be possible without the planning grants.

I greatly appreciate the leadership of Senator BOXER and Senator INHOFE on our committee, and I am pleased by the bipartisan support of our committee that brought out a comprehensive bill, including the areas I have mentioned, that will allow EDA to continue its core purpose of creating jobs for our community. It is exactly this type of legislation we need to help continue our economic growth to bring us out of this recession, to create the type of jobs we need, and to encourage private sector capital.

This bill translates into jobs. I urge my colleagues to allow this bill to move forward, to limit the amendments, particularly those that are not relevant to the underlying legislation, so we can get this bill to the House and to the President because it will help our communities grow and create jobs.

With that, Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Ms. AYOTTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REMEMBERING GOVERNOR WALTER PETERSON

Ms. AYOTTE. Mr. President, I rise today to honor the memory of Governor Walter Peterson—a great New Hampshire citizen who represented the very best of the Granite State's independent spirit.

Governor Peterson came from what is well-known as the “greatest generation,” and he more than lived up to that label. A veteran of World War II, he committed his life to public service and civic engagement, leaving behind a legacy of civility, decency, and integrity in politics.

Following his graduation from Dartmouth College, Governor Peterson settled in Peterborough, NH, becoming a lifelong figure in the Monadnock region. A small businessman, he went on to serve in New Hampshire's citizen legislature and rose to the position of speaker of the house. In 1968, New Hampshire voters elected him as the State's Governor, a position he held for two terms.

Governor Peterson represented a special breed of politician—someone who could disagree without being disagreeable. A strong leader, he had the courage of his convictions. He believed it was more important to stand firm for what he believed was right for New Hampshire rather than worry about being reelected. That principled approach and inherent goodness secured his place in New Hampshire history as a deeply respected statesman.

Outside of public life, Governor Peterson was the beloved patriarch of his family. Together with his wife Dorothy, to whom he was married for over 60 years, they had two children, Meg and Andy. The Peterson family is well known in the Monadnock region because of their strong commitment and dedication to the community. Andy Peterson followed in his father's footsteps and served in our State legislature with distinction.

During my visits to Peterborough—the idyllic New Hampshire town Governor Peterson lived in and loved—I always knew he would extend a warm welcome to me. A steadfast source of Yankee wisdom, I came to cherish Governor Peterson's friendship as much as his keen insight into the people of New Hampshire.

After leaving statewide office, Governor Peterson took his special brand of leadership to academia, serving as a college president and as a trustee of the university system of New Hampshire. In those roles, he worked to build institutions of higher learning that empowered students to take full advantage of the opportunities our great country provides, believing in the transformative power of education.

With Governor Peterson's passing, New Hampshire citizens have lost a wonderful, true, and loyal friend. At this sad time, we celebrate his life, grateful to have known a leader who embodied the very best of public service.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. CARDIN). The Senator from Montana.

Mr. TESTER. Mr. President, when we are able to move the economic development bill, I will have a bipartisan amendment that will address the interchange issue in a way I think most Senators can support.

I wish also to note that I appreciate Senator DURBIN's passion on the issue—and with any number of issues we have in common—and I look forward to working with him again very soon.

Most of the folks in this body know I am a farmer; that I come from the agricultural sector. It is important because, over the many years I have been able to be in agriculture, I have watched consolidation in agriculture, where fewer and fewer companies control more and more of the food supply. We call it consolidation. The same thing has occurred in our energy sector, where we have fewer and fewer companies, with less competition in the marketplace. And we are paying that price in both areas.

We have seen enough consolidation in the financial area. Why is this important? It is important because the amendment I am going to offer—the bipartisan amendment—will help so that we don't further consolidate the financial industry. I also come from rural America. We all know, as the Senator from Illinois pointed out, that we are coming out of a very difficult economic time. In fact, the Senator pointed out he voted for the bailout of the big banks because it was for jobs. I want the record to be clear that I did not vote for that TARP bailout, but I too am concerned about jobs. I am concerned about jobs across the country, but particularly in rural America.

The amendment we voted on a year ago had a provision in it that exempted banks under $10 billion from this debit swipe fee rule. Everybody thought it would work—at least those who voted for the amendment thought it would work. But the fact is every regulator has said, with regard to this $10 billion exemption, we don't know how to enforce it. The regulators have said, we do not know how to craft a rule to exempt those small community banks and credit unions under $10 billion.

The single regulators have said the same thing. In fact, Chairman Bernanke admitted the rule could “result in some of the smaller banks being less profitable and even failing.” That is because the two-tiered system will not work under the current law. That is not my opinion. That is the opinion of the folks whose job it is to regulate these banks. And the customers—the hard-working folks—are going to get stuck with higher fees, potentially no access to capital or, even worse, no local banks at all—further consolidation in the banking industry.

Let me be clear. If any one of the regulators—the Chairman of the Federal Reserve, the Chair of the FDIC, the Comptroller of the Currency—told me that the interchange rule we passed last year would actually protect small banks, I would not be here, we would not even be here having this debate, we would be moving on. But that is not what happened.

The Wall Street banks are going to be just fine. My amendment is not about the Wall Street banks. They can distribute their costs. They have a lot of different irons in the fire. They can distribute their costs. The fact is, the small banks, credit unions and community banks cannot distribute those costs. That will result in less access to capital in rural America and I think across the country. It will result in fewer jobs because you have to have capital to grow business and create jobs.

Oftentimes we make decisions based on incorrect information. It is nice when you make decisions based on good information, and that is what we are asking to do here: Take a step back, take a look at this stuff, and make a good decision, a decision that will work not only for rural America but for the whole country.

This is an important amendment. It is a critically important amendment, from my perspective. If we shut down access to capital in rural America because community banks and credit unions cannot compete, not only will we further consolidate the financial industry but we will take away opportunity for small businesses, opportunity that will allow them to grow and create jobs at a time when we need growth in our economy and we need more job creation.

With that, I yield the floor.

RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will stand in recess until 2:15 p.m.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT REVITALIZATION ACT OF 2011—MOTION TO PROCEED—Continued

Mr. INHOFE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, earlier today I was on the floor speaking about the importance of a program called the economic development revitalization. It has been in place since 1965. It has run out of its authority. Our committee, the Environment and Public Works Committee, in a near unanimous vote—almost unanimous—decided it was really worth making some reforms to the program to make it work even better and to reauthorize it.

I am going to turn the time over to my wonderful friend, JIM INHOFE. He and I, as everybody knows, are good friends. We work very well together. There are issues on which we sharply disagree. I think they would fall on the environmental side. But when it comes to public works, when it comes to building the infrastructure of our country, when it comes to jobs related to the private sector, we are very much joined at the hip. On this particular issue, we are together because we look at this and we say that at a time when there need to be jobs, over a 2-year period beginning in 2009, grantees estimate that EDA-funded projects created over 160,000, and for every $1 invested by the Federal Government $7 came from the private sector.

It is my pleasure to yield to make sure my ranking member has sufficient time for whatever he would like to speak to this issue.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, the EDA is something that has worked very well in our State of Oklahoma. First, let me say the Senator from California is right—there are many issues on which we do not agree. In fact, we have fought tooth and nail for a long time against the cap-and-trade and a lot of these environmental issues and will continue to do so. However, what we agree most on is not necessarily the EDA program but the need for reauthorization of transportation.

We have a very serious problem. In my State of Oklahoma, just a short while ago a young lady, the mother of two small children, was driving under a bridge, and it crumbled and fell and killed her. There are things like that, crises that are going on right now.

We were very proud when we had what we thought at the time was a very robust highway reauthorization bill, a transportation reauthorization bill in 2005. While the amount sounded like quite a bit, it was really just barely enough to maintain what we had. There are some things government is supposed to be doing. I am always ranked as one of the most conservative Members, but I am a big spender in areas such as national defense and infrastructure. Those are needs we have.

In putting together this bill and taking it out of committee—and it did come out of committee unanimously—there had been a GAO report that talked about duplication. I put in language in order to have them identify anything that would be duplicative so that would come out. That was a little bit of a surprise to a lot of us. I don't question the report. I think it was probably accurate. But we took care of that because we don't want to have any duplication of efforts.

The chairman said there is a 7-to-1 ratio. We have actually done better than that in the State of Oklahoma. In one area, it was a $2.25 million EDA grant, in Elgin, OK, which is adjacent to Fort Sill, OK, which is adjacent to a live range. It was one that was intended to actually produce a 150,000-square-foot manufacturing business employing many people. Because this administration axed some of the military programs, it did not turn out to be that beneficial, but the ratio there was still well in excess of 10 to 1.

If we want to get the economy moving, this is a way of doing it. We have to do it in a way that is well thought out. I am hoping this bill will be. It is my understanding it will be open to amendments, and there will be a lot of amendments and a lot of my friends who are not supportive of this want to have this vehicle for that purpose. I certainly respect that and look forward to working on this bill.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I thank the ranking member. I know he has a series of meetings and he is off to those, but I again thank him. I know he may look at reducing this authority. It is his right to do so. My own opinion is, if there were ever a time to support programs that leverage dollars the way this one does, this is one of them. But I respect whatever he feels he needs to do to feel better about the bill.

He talked about one of the important amendments he wrote which would eliminate duplication. There are other reforms that allow private parties to buy out the Federal Government investment. There is much we have done to update this program, but it is very important today.

The one word I have come to use—perhaps overuse—is “leverage.” Leverage is crucial. We know we are facing deficits and debts. We know we have to do something about spending, so we want to be wise, we want to see that when we do spend $1 of Federal money, it really has a punch behind it. This is one example, again, of that occurring. There is $7, on average, for every dollar invested, and in the case of Oklahoma, in this one example, $10. There are others where it is even higher than that.

I think it is very clear. I am not sure this is the up-to-date list, but we have many supporters of EDA. I am going to show some of them here.

The U.S. Conference of Mayors, the American Public Works Association, the National Association of Counties—

I mentioned this morning that I started out in my first elected office as a county supervisor. They understand how important the EDA is because they are on the ground in these counties, as are the mayors in the cities. They see the needs in these underserved areas, in these redevelopment areas. They want to attract the private capital, so they really need the help the EDA gives them to do it.

The Association of University Research Parks—let me tell you why they like this. We have seen incubator projects, small business incubator projects that start in these research parks that grow into mature, job-producing businesses. EDA is the spark, EDA is the leverage we need. That is why you see the Association of University Centers, the International Economic Development Council, the National Association of Development Organizations, the National Business Incubation Association.

We know today it is tough for some businesses to get the capital. Some of them are fortunate—they go to Silicon Valley, and they get some dollars there. Some will go to banks, and they will be told it is too risky. The banks are not lending the way they, frankly, should to create the jobs, so the leverage that is gotten for these programs from the Federal Government goes a very long way.

The State Science and Technology Institute, the University Economic Development Association, and the National Association of Regional Councils.

We see we have a record of job creation. We have a lot of support, and in 2009—this really says it all: 160,000 jobs over a 2-year period, in 2009. This is a story that is a success story. It is why Senator INHOFE and I join together on this issue.

I know this is going to be a contentious time in the next few days on this bill because some contentious amendments that have nothing to do with the underlying bill are going to be offered. All I would say to colleagues is let's not allow these jobs bills to be weighed down so we do nothing. The American people are sick of it.

We have had a small business bill. MARY LANDRIEU, the chair of the Small Business Committee, stood right here day after day begging colleagues: Don't offer poison pill amendments to that bill. Do you know who lost? Not MARY LANDRIEU. The American people lost and the small businesses lost because this bill, the small business bill, became the way everybody offered everything they had ever dreamed about and thought about, and a lot of it was controversial.

So I urge colleagues on both sides of the aisle, if you are going to offer amendments that are not related, please agree to time agreements. Let's get rid of these amendments one way or the other. If they pass, fine; if they don't, that is life. But let's get to the reauthorization of the EDA. It started in 1965. It has saved jobs, it has created jobs, and any problems we have had because of some of the rules, we have addressed in this reauthorization.

I have here a letter, a legislative alert, hot off the press from the AFL-CIO. They support the passage of S. 782, the Economic Development Revitalization Act of 2011. They say it "has played an often unheralded but important role in creating jobs and spurring economic growth in economically distressed communities."

The public investments supported by this legislation make a little funding go a long way by leveraging private dollars in support of these projects. Resources for technical assistance and research infrastructure, and assisting in the development and implementation of economic development strategies helps revitalize communities. EDA established an admirable track record in assisting economically troubled low income communities with limited job opportunities by putting their investments to good use in promoting needed job creation and industrial and commercial development.

Today when the lack of jobs and income stagnation are the primary issues facing this Nation, S. 782 is a bipartisan bill that can help make a difference. We urge Congress to pass the Economic Development Revitalization Act of 2011.

I think that really says it.

I have one more letter I just got. We have a letter from the U.S. Chamber, the Business Civic Leadership, saying how much they support the program. They say, "I am writing to share with you the U.S. Chamber Business Civic Leadership Center's positive experience in working with the EDA. EDA has served as a valuable partner in many communities"—they cite "San Jose, California; Seattle, Washington; Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Mobile, Alabama; New Orleans, Louisiana; Atlanta, Georgia; Boca Raton, Florida; Minneapolis, Minnesota; Newark, New Jersey" and many others.

I know some of these programs that went into these cities with this relatively small investment by the Federal Government spurring all this private sector capital and local and State funds. They say they worked with the EDA in "conducting regional forums to bring corporate contributions professionals together with economic development experts." They provide "opportunities to build up relationships between and among companies and government agencies."

They developed "a report that maps how and why companies invest in communities across the U.S."

They believe that as they work with them on these programs, including "working with local chambers of commerce in disaster affected regions to provide local recovery grants," that that worked very well.

They say they are the "corporate citizenship arm of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce." They "work with thousands of businesses and local chambers of commerce on community development and disaster recovery."

They are consistently looking for "best practices, lessons learned, technical assistance, planning and strategy support, and other insights, tools, and techniques to make their communities as economically competitive as possible."

They say:

In our experience EDA members have displayed a high degree of professionalism and technical expertise. They have engaged with us on multiple levels from consultations at the national level to sharing valuable field experience at the state and local levels.

They say:

We have canvassed many businesses and local chambers about their community development needs, and they almost unanimously tell us that some of their highest priorities include business recruitment and retention and helping small-and-medium sized businesses grow. They also tell us that support for regional economic development planning that transcends municipal boundaries is an increasing area of interest, and that this is a unique capability that EDA can and does support.

As you consider EDA's future roles and responsibilities, we would be happy to share with you our experiences and lessons learned in working with the agency and to provide you with additional information.

Signed by Stephen Jordan, executive director of the Business Civic Leadership Center of the Chamber of Commerce.

So here we have an arm of the Chamber of Commerce sending us a letter of praise for the EDA, and we have the AFL-CIO doing the same.

Senator INHOFE referred to the highway bill. That is another example where we have both sides coming together, and what I want to say to colleagues who may be watching in their office or hearing this as they do their other work, please, let's get this done.

Every single person in this Chamber goes home and talks about jobs, jobs, jobs. If we mean it, if we are not just posturing or posing for pictures and we mean it, then let's get it done.

We had a bad experience here with the small business bill. It got loaded up with things that had nothing to do with anything, and we didn't get time agreements and we couldn't get it done. Let's hope that this gets done.

I cannot imagine anybody holding up this bill when we know that in 2009 it funded over a 2-year period 160,000 jobs at a very small cost to Federal taxpayers because that cost is leveraged.

I could go on about EDA, and I will later. I think I have spoken enough at this particular time.

Mr. President, unless there is someone on the floor, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT REVITALIZATION ACT OF 2011

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the cloture motion with respect to the motion to proceed to S. 782, the Economic Development Act, be withdrawn and the Senate adopt the motion to proceed to S. 782; further, that after the clerk reports the bill, the committee-reported amendment be agreed to, the bill, as amended, be considered as original text for the purposes of amendments, the motion to reconsider be considered made and laid upon the table with no intervening action or debate; that Senator TESTER be recognized to offer an amendment, followed by Senator DURBIN to be recognized to offer an amendment; following that, Senators BOXER and INHOFE be allowed to give their opening statements on this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, Senator INHOFE and I have already spoken on the floor. What I would appreciate is just 2 minutes before we turn to Senator TESTER just to set the stage.

Mr. REID. I think I have protected the Senator in that regard. I want to get the amendment laid down and the second-degree amendment laid down. All right.

Mrs. BOXER. All right.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I renew my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 393 TO AMENDMENT NO. 392

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN] proposes an amendment numbered 393 to amendment No. 392.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To address the time period for consideration of the small issuer exemption)

On page 10, line 9, strike “2 years” and insert “one year”.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. TESTER. Mr. President, over the last month, Senator CORKER and I have worked with several Senators who are concerned about the unintended consequences of the debit interchange amendment the Senate adopted last year. We voted against that amendment. We were concerned about the impact of those consequences on folks—especially across rural America—who rely on their small local banks and credit unions.

The Federal Reserve's rules based on this amendment are about to go into effect, and the result is going to be bad for small banks and credit unions and ultimately for the whole country but especially rural America. Even Chairman Bernanke admits that the rule could “result in some smaller banks being less profitable or even failing.”

I am proud to be joined in this effort by Senators CRAPO, BENNET, HAGAN, and several others—all folks who share my concern about the impact of debit interchange fees on our local banks.

Senator CORKER and I began with a concern that local community banks and credit unions would end up being subject to the same one-size-fits-all regulation designed to address the excesses of some of the world's largest financial institutions. As I have said over and over, those big Wall Street banks are going to be just fine. They have plenty of sources for their revenue. No one needs to shed a tear for them. But the Main Street banks and credit unions will not be OK if these rules are implemented.

Let me give you one example. Community First Credit Union has two branches—one in Miles City and one in Ekalaka, MT. Those two towns are about as far away from Wall Street as you can get. Ekalaka, in fact, is pretty far away from just about everywhere. But last year the Senate approved an amendment that was aimed at holding the big banks accountable for the fees they charge when you swipe your debit card at Walmart. Folks were promised we would have a split system where big banks such as Bank of America would get one interchange rate and Community First Credit Union would be able to get a higher rate. The reality is going to be quite different. Without changes, the small guys like Community First will not see this promised benefit.

This so-called two-tiered system will not work under the current law. That is not my opinion; it is the opinion of folks who regulate these small banks.

What Ben Bernanke, Sheila Bair, and others say is that market forces will inevitably push the rate down to the lowest level. That push has already started. Retailers are seeking laws at the State level to give themselves the freedom to deny purchases with debit cards that have a higher interchange fee. Given the amount of money the big box retailers are putting into their lobbying campaigns, it is only a matter of time before they are successful. So what happens to the consumer who does her banking at a small community bank or credit union? These are the folks I am concerned about because they are the majority of Montanans. Unfortunately, they are going to get stuck with higher fees, with no access to capital or, even worse, no banks at all.

Let's be clear: If any single one of the regulators—whether it be the Chairman of the Federal Reserve or the Chair of the FDIC or the Comptroller of the Currency—had told me the interchange system proposed last year would actually protect small banks and credit unions, we would not be here. But that is not what happened.

The Chairman of the Federal Reserve said that without changes, the system that will be implemented on July 21 will cause small institutions—the kinds of banks that serve most Montanans—to suffer and some could even fail. The Chair of the FDIC said that unquestionably these banks would be hurt. The credit union administrator agrees. Perhaps they will make up for those losses by raising rates on checking accounts. Maybe it will be higher fees when a small business comes in looking for a loan to expand. That will surely help the biggest banks to capture more of the market share at the expense of the smaller banks like Community First.

This week, we have a chance to stop and rewrite these rules before they hurt those small banks, before they hurt those small credit unions, before the new rules hurt the consumers and the small businesses in rural America that prefer to do their banking business with folks who know them and who are a part of their communities.

Rural America is what I know. It is where I am from. As I have watched consolidation in the agriculture industry and have watched rural America get smaller and smaller, I am not about to let this happen in the financial services industry. Fewer banking options in rural America is a death knell for rural America, and that is where we are headed today. One way to stop this from happening is for us to slow down and fix the debit interchange regulations so the small banks that serve rural America do not get hit.

We also know how dangerous it is to set a price for a product without understanding all the costs that go into that product. Small business owners certainly could not stay in business if they did not understand their own costs. Likewise, if we are going to be regulating debit interchange fees, we need to understand all the costs associated with debit transactions and debit programs.

When we voted on this amendment last year, we thought we were voting to allow the Federal Reserve to consider all costs. However, the reality is that last year's interchange amendment limited the costs that could be included. Some fraud costs were allowed to be included but others were not. Some technology costs were included but others not. The result is a proposed Fed rule that sets the debit interchange rate at 7 or 12 cents for all transactions—a level most folks agree is too low.

I am sure the big box retailers think 7 cents or 12 cents is too high. In fact, they have argued that the rate should be closer to 4 cents. I have heard from many of my retailers in my home State, and some have said 12 cents is probably too low, and they understand you absolutely cannot set the price of doing business below what it costs to do business.

If we are going to be regulating this market, we must do it in a way that is fair, in a way that still directs the Fed to determine what is "reasonable and proportionate" but gives them the discretion to look at all of the costs associated with debit transactions. That does not mean executive pay. That does not mean the cost of a corporate jet or a special rewards program. All the costs will still need to be justified, but the Fed will not be limited arbitrarily in what they can look at.

That is why my friend Senator CORKER and I are offering this amendment today. This amendment is a compromise, and that is how we do business in Montana. We find the common ground and we work together to do what is best.

Senator CORKER and I first proposed a 2-year delay of the Fed's rules to allow adequate time to study the impact on small banks and rewrite the rules based on what we learn in that study. The Fed tells us now that it may be able to do this joint study in 6 months. So that is what our amendment proposes—just 6 months to study whether the rules that will govern the debit interchange marketplace can protect small banks.

In this amendment, we outline the topics the study should address, including taking a closer look at all of the actual costs associated with debit card transactions, the impact on consumers, and whether an exemption for small banks as proposed in the interchange amendment last year will actually work.

If, after the study, at least two of the agencies involved determine that the current rules do not take into account all costs, that the rules may harm consumers, or that the exemption meant to protect small banks and credit unions will not work, then the Fed has 6 more months to rewrite the rules considering all costs.

That is 1 year to address our concerns and to make sure rural banks do not get wiped out by this rule. If the agencies find that the rules consider all costs, consumers would not be harmed, and that the small issuer exemption will work, then the current rules pending would move forward.

What about the little guys? We put into place a process that will address any potential impact on small issuers. My contention has long been that market forces would drive fees for small issuers to the lowest rate. Since we cannot fully understand how the market will operate until interchange regulation is enacted, we direct the Fed to report the actual impact of the market on small issuers a year after the rules are implemented.

The Fed has to present a report to Congress and every other year thereafter on the impact of a regulated market on small issuers. Most importantly, the report will include recommendations for how to resolve any potential harm to small issuers and to enforce the exemption.

This will help make sure that when Congress acts, we will have the facts about how we would impact small banks. That means the regulatory process is over in 12 months, and Congress does not have to revisit this issue. Let me say it again. Congress does not have to revisit this issue.

At the end of the entire process, there is still a regulated market for debit interchange fees. That is what the Senate voted for last year, loudly and clearly, and we preserve the regulated marketplace, which is what Senator DURBIN and others have been calling for.

We will have regulated the marketplace once we fully understand all the costs relative to debit transactions and the impact of these rules on consumers and small issuers. That is what the majority of the Senate voted for last year, and that is what we will get. But it will be a regulatory framework that does not penalize small banks and credit unions and is fair by not setting prices below costs. When every banking regulator who has a role in overseeing the debit interchange market tells you that Congress has created a system that will not work in the way that was intended, then we ought to listen. Today's debit interchange market is not fair for some retailers, so I understand their desire to see it fixed.

But the answer is not to create a new system that is unfair to the small banks in Montana and other parts of rural America. The amendment the Senate approved last year was designed to punish Wall Street. But the result may be the bank in Ekalaka and the other banks all over rural America that will lose customers and potentially even fail.

Let's measure twice and cut once. Let's do it quickly, but let's make sure we get this right and that if we are going to create regulations, we are doing it in a way that is fair and consistent with the intent.

I urge my colleagues to support the amendment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRANKEN). The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. CORKER. Mr. President, I rise to speak favorably toward the Tester-Corker amendment.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Tennessee if he would mind yielding and indicate how long he might be speaking?

Mr. CORKER. Mr. President, 8 minutes max—8 to 10.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CORKER. I do wish to say that my friend from Montana has been a great partner in this effort. I know lots of times people use a lot of rhetoric down here to talk about what is happening and the fact that anyone who might be proposing this type of amendment might be supporting Wall Street institutions. But I think you can see that my friend from Montana is anything but Wall Street. Certainly, I think all of us are just trying to come up with a solution that makes sense.

I wish to give a brief history. Dodd-Frank came to the floor last year. There were numbers of amendments to the bill. One of the amendments that came to the floor was called the Durbin amendment. It was an amendment that had no hearings. A lot of us—people such as myself who are opposed to price fixing—what the Durbin amendment said was that the Fed was going to set prices on debit transactions—were opposed to it. On the other hand, there were numbers of people in this Chamber who supported Durbin because they were frustrated with where retailers were and their inability to negotiate prices with Visa and some of the other companies. So they thought this might be a type of solution to that dilemma of not being able to have appropriate negotiations.

I think what all have understood, regardless of where they are on this issue now, is that the Durbin amendment did not actually give the Fed the ability to set prices as it relates to cost on debit cards. It only allowed certain costs—in other words, the incremental cost of a transaction. I think the retailers that I know are very strongly supportive of the Durbin language know—they all tell me this anyway in private—they could not operate under that same scenario.

But they are frustrated. So what TESTER and I and others—MIKE CRAPO, who voted for Durbin, I might add; KAY HAGAN, who voted for Durbin; Senator BENNET, who voted for Durbin—what people have realized is that the Durbin amendment is way too narrow and does not allow appropriate costs to be considered by the Fed when setting these rates.

So my friend from Montana who has numbers of rural institutions—I have the same in my State—we all realized this is going to be highly detrimental to the financial system. So what we tried to do is come up with a compromise that works for both sides.

As I mentioned, Senator CRAPO, Senator HAGAN, Senator BROWN, Senator CARPER, numbers of people have gotten involved in this and have come up with a one-vote strategy. I know numbers of people want to vote and get this behind them. I understand this is one of those issues where we have retailers on one side, we have bankers on the other side, and we feel, in some ways, we are trying to deal—we are trying to pick between friends. What I think we are trying to do is put a good, sound policy in place, a place that the retailers should be very happy because they are going to end up with a regulated market—something, candidly, I do not support.

But I think the Senator from Illinois has been very successful on that front. Basically, the retailers win on this because they are going to end up with something that is regulated. They feel as if they do not have the ability to negotiate with Visa and other institutions. So now the Fed is going to be setting pricing.

On the other hand, those Senators—most Senators in this body who understand economics, understand business—also know you cannot run a business if you are only going to change the incremental costs. It would be akin to a pizza parlor selling pizza, literally, and only being able to charge for the dough it takes to make the pizza, not to be able to charge for electricity, not to be able to charge for the other things it takes to actually run that particular place.

I think we have come up with something that is a good middle-of-the-road solution. The Fed is directed to consider both fixed costs and incremental costs, something any retailer or any business in America would want to be considered if they were being regulated. We have also come up with a solution that allows the Fed to look back every 2 years and make sure those smaller institutions Senator TESTER is so concerned about, and I am so concerned about, that the Fed look at those to ensure that every 2 years these policies that are being put into place do not disproportionately negatively affect those institutions. If so, they recommend—they do not prescribe, they recommend to Congress—possible legislative remedies.

As the Senator mentioned, I think we should measure twice, cut once. I think this ends up putting this issue in the place that is fair. I am feeling momentum building around this. I will say the Senator from Illinois is an outstanding legislator. I think he has done a very good job championing this issue. I do not think we would be where we are on this issue without the efforts he has put forth.

But I think he realizes possibly that by not keeping in place all costs as it relates to a transaction, what you are doing is limiting the availability of that to the public down the road. You limit innovation. You limit the amount of technology investment that goes toward each transaction.

I hope very soon to be paying my bills by just swiping my electronic device in front of a cash register. I think we all see us moving toward this. But what the Durbin amendment does now, in the form it is in, is basically say to these institutions, when you conduct these types of transactions, debit transactions, you are going to lose money every time you do it. I do not think that is where we want to be.

Again, there are going to be some unintended consequences whenever there is a bill the size of Dodd-Frank that passes. Surely, all of us can come together and figure out more common-sense ways of solving problems such as this when they arise. I would have so to say that I like the way this body is functioning around this issue. We have people on both sides of the aisle who have realized this policy is one that is detrimental. We have people on both sides of the aisle who have tried to work together. We have three iterations now of Corker-Tester to try to get it in a place that is in the middle of the road, that takes into account the concern of retailers, and takes into account the concern of small credit unions and small banks around this country that are going to be devastated, as all of the regulators have said.

This is unusual, by the way. We talk about regulatory overreach in this body. This is a case where we have given regulators the ability to regulate, and they are saying, please, do not make us do this. This is bad policy. That rarely happens in Washington. But it has happened in this case.

Out of respect for the tremendous amount of work so many people have put into coming up with a slightly better solution than the Senator from Illinois, who worked so hard on this issue, to put it forth originally, I would ask every Member to please, whether you end up voting with us or not—and I hope you will—please sit down for 10 minutes, just 10 minutes, and allow your staff to at least explain. I know a lot of people have made commitments 10 days ago, 1 week ago, to be on the other side of this. But I think most people have not seen the last iteration that puts this in the middle of the road, that keeps debit cards regulated but gives the regulators the ability to at least consider the costs that any normal business has when it functions.

I thank you for the time to talk about it. I thank the Senator from Illinois, who looks like he is getting ready to speak. I thank him for the way he has conducted himself. As a matter of fact, I think we have come up with such a great solution I would hope the Senator from Illinois would consider being a cosponsor.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. To my friend from Tennessee, not a chance. My wife over the weekend, in Springfield, said: I would like you to clean the garage. I said: Well, I have decided to clean half the garage. It is a compromise. She said: With whom did you compromise? That is what we are faced with. Senators CORKER and TESTER have come to the floor and said: We have a compromise. With whom did you compromise?

It was not with the people who are affected by these debit card fees. No. They compromised among the banks. The banks all sat down and said: Let's work this out among us because we are talking about real money. That is their compromise. It is not a compromise.

What is this all about? The average person listening to this debate is going to think: What are they fighting over there in the Senate, this bipartisan battle? What we are talking about is something we all carry around in our wallets and purses these days, a debit card.

If I take this card and go to a local restaurant—well, let's use a different one. If I went to a local convenience store and said: I want to get a pack of chewing gum—Wrigley's because that is based in Chicago—I want to get a pack of Wrigley's chewing gum, here is my debit card, they take the debit card these days and they swipe it and they complete the transaction.

What you do not know, but the merchant knows, is he just lost money on that because it costs more to the merchant selling the goods to process the piece of plastic than they could possibly profit on the goods they are selling. So you wonder, how did it reach this point, where the use of this piece of plastic costs so much? It reached that point because the big giants of credit cards, Visa and MasterCard, said to merchants and retailers all across America: If you want to accept plastic at your place of business, then you are going to pay us a swipe fee every time that piece of plastic goes through the reader.

How much is that swipe fee? Turns out it is 1.10 percent, on average. It does not sound like a lot, but it is. The banks that issue these cards receive each month in swipe fees from all across the United States, from convenience stores, restaurants, hotels, charities—if you gave a donation to Red Cross because of the terrible tragedy that happened in Jopla, MO, and used your debit card, guess what. Visa and MasterCard got a percentage of it, the amounts you thought you were giving to the charity—college book stores, you name it.

Every time you sweep these, it ends up generating, each month, on average, for the banks across America, $1.3 billion.

Each year, there are more than $15 billion in swipe fees. What did the merchants have to say about how much they were being charged? Nothing. Take it or leave it, buddy. If you don't want to pay the swipe fee, don't take plastic.

Over the years, as you might expect, merchants and retailers said this is a rotten deal. Not only is this an invisible charge that we have to add to the cost of doing business on everything, we have no control over it. We are faced with paying a swipe fee or not accepting plastic and, in this day and age, imagine how long you would last in many businesses if you didn't accept debit cards.

So 4 or 5 years ago, I called for a study asking: What is a reasonable amount to charge? I was opposed, naturally, by the banking industry. They put out an all-points bulletin to kill the Durbin study of debit fees. They didn't want to study it. All that could do is put the spotlight on them. They don't want that to happen. So we waited and waited and last year we had the Wall Street financial reform bill. I sat here patiently on the floor saying I want to offer this amendment to finally come up with a reasonable way to regulate this fee, which is not a product of competition and isn't transparent or disclosed. The vote finally came along.

After 25 amendments on Wall Street reform, they decided this vote would not require a majority, it would require 60 votes, a supermajority. OK. We won with 64 votes in favor of our position. It surprised a lot of people. It sure surprised the banks. They didn't think this Senate, on a bipartisan basis, would hold them accountable for the fees they are charging on the debit cards.

What do we say in the law? The Federal Reserve—a nonpartisan bank regulating agency—would have the authority to determine what is a reasonable and proportional fee for swiping the card, and that fee would go into effect this July—July 21—1 year after we passed the law. We said, in the meantime, to anybody who has thoughts, ideas or comments, send them to the Federal Reserve. They received 11,000-plus comments. Everybody had an idea. Some didn't like the law, some did—on and on.

So they came out with a preliminary report—not a rule—in December. You know what they found? They found that the average charge per transaction in the United States was 44 cents and the average cost to the bank for processing the debit transaction was about 12 cents—one-fourth. So the plot thickens.

It turns out the banks issuing these cards are not only charging this invisible fee, they are dramatically overcharging merchants and retailers. Guess what Mr. and Mrs. Consumer. We pay it; we pay it in additional charges. Even if you go into that store to buy a package of chewing gum with cash, the price has been raised because they are expecting you to give plastic instead, and you pay more. So then the battle was on—whether the Federal Reserve would issue this rule establishing a more reasonable swipe fee for these debit cards. It is a big battle.

Imagine, if you will, what it means to the biggest banks in America when they have on the line $1.3 billion a month. They pulled out all the stops. A friend of mine—a lobbyist in Washington—said: Praise the Lord. Come up with some more ideas. This is a full employment amendment. Everybody in Washington who is a lobbyist is working on this amendment. We love you to pieces.

The sad reality is, it is coming—maybe—to a close with a vote on this amendment. But the banks and credit card companies started piling it on. Let me be fair. The other side did too. The merchants and retailers said: We want fair treatment, and if we have to fight to protect this new law, we are going to do that.

Senators TESTER of Montana and CORKER of Tennessee have offered an amendment I am about to describe. This is interesting, though. They are offering this amendment in an effort to stop the Federal Reserve from issuing a rule that will establish how much that swipe fee is going to be. How soon would the Fed issue the rule? Within the month, within a matter of days. They are desperate to get this amendment to the floor to try to stop the Federal Reserve from saying what is a fair swipe fee and to protect merchants, retailers, small businesses, and consumers across America. The banks want to stop them.

There is one other part of the story that is important. We decided that when we wrote this law, we would give smaller banks, community banks, and smaller credit unions an exemption. In other words, they are not covered by the Federal rule.

You say, why? From a consumer's point of view, all the arguments made still apply.

Well, that is true. But many of these smaller institutions are more financially vulnerable. I happen to agree with Senators TESTER and CORKER. I believe in community banks and local banks and want them to survive. So we carved them out. Instead, if the value of your bank is below $10 billion, you will not be affected by this. If the value of the credit union is below $10 billion, you will not be affected. How many did we exempt? Out of 7,000 banks in America, only 100 would be affected by the law. Out of 7,000 credit unions, only 3 would be affected by the law.

Then there is another part of the story. It turns out that the three biggest banks in America are the ones that make the most money on debit fees. Each month, they collect more than 50 percent of the debit fees. What are those banks? Chase, Wells Fargo, and Bank of America.

They have been fighting viciously to stop this rule from going into effect because there are billions of dollars at stake. They don't want to lose that income.

Let's have a little trip down memory lane about these banks. Do you remember a few years ago when these banks got us into the biggest economic mess in current memory? Did you notice any change in your savings account or perhaps your IRA—the money you put away for retirement? I sure did. I think Loretta and I lost about 30 percent of our value because they were playing games with subprime mortgages, new derivatives and AIG offices in London and this holy mess ended up being visited on families, businesses, and consumers across America. We were in a panic. The Chairman of the Federal Reserve, Ben Bernanke, and Treasury Secretary Hank Paulson met with us and said: If you don't do something immediately, banks all across America are going to fail and our economy will collapse and not just here but across the world. So you have to come to their rescue.

We had to come up with a bailout for the banks. Remember that, taxpayers of America? How did the big three debit card banks do in the bailout? Chase got $25 billion in taxpayer money because they had acted so recklessly and endangered their bank, and they needed a helping hand. Bank of America got $45 billion in taxpayer bailout funds. Wells Fargo got $25 billion in taxpayer bailout funds. Remember, taxpayers of America, when the same banks that will profit from these debit card fees were so desperate that they needed a helping hand from taxpayers to save their banks? Do you remember how they expressed their gratitude to us? It was heartwarming. As soon as they could, they called a meeting of the boards of directors and awarded one another bonuses for their reckless conduct. It warmed my heart that they were so appreciative of the taxpayers across America sacrificing with their taxes to save these big old banks.

Well, I have news for the taxpayers: They are back. They are back today, and now it is smaller—I will concede that—it is only $15 billion a year. But these same big banks are asking for a handout and a subsidy from the Senate. Are we going to get shakedown a second time?

That is what this debate is all about. At the end of the day, if this amendment that is pending on the floor passes, then for at least 1 year—I think way beyond that—these banks will continue to take in $1.3 billion out of the wallets and purses of consumers across America every time a person uses one of these plastic cards. I don't think that is fair. I don't think it is right. I think there is a way to deal with this honestly. I will tell you what it is.

Let the Federal Reserve issue its rule this month. They will come out with it. Let's look at it. Nobody knows what they are going to say. I have heard both Senators who introduced this amendment say: Well, we cannot accept this rule. They don't know what the rule is, and neither do I. It has not been published yet. At a minimum, should we not see it before we say it is unacceptable?

I am ready to wait. I trust that the Federal Reserve will do its job. I think it can produce a good rule—a rule that is fair to consumers, retailers, small businesses, and the banks too. Senator CORKER said the problem with Durbin's amendment is, he doesn't allow the banks to add in all the possible charges and costs in a debit card transaction; he is just allowing them to count the value of the dough and the pizza, not all the other things they might add in.

No. What we said was that you can charge a fee that is reasonable and proportional to the cost of the transaction. Pretty simple, right? Reasonable and proportional. Well, this amendment on the floor decides to open the door wide. It is no longer reasonable and proportional. They have full pages describing all the different things the banks can add in to establish the fee they charge small businesses and consumers. Are you trusting of these banks to be careful with what they add in? I am not. I can tell you that when you look at the list of things they include, it includes executive compensation, because it is about the costs of the operation of the program, which happens to include a lot of managers and officers as well. I don't know what else it includes, but it is wide open.

Here is what the banks have said. Incidentally, I guess it is somewhat gratifying when your name is associated with an amendment and you hear it over and over—Chase, for example, wrote to every person that is a customer in my State of Illinois and said: Beware of the Durbin amendment. If it goes through, it reduces the debit fee charge we can charge, and your fees are going up. Your benefits and premiums are going to go down. Here is what Chase failed to mention—and the other banks as well. The total amount the Big Three banks take in in a year from debit cards fees is about a little over—almost half the total amount collected, about $8 billion a year. So the argument that JP Diamond and Chase are making is that if you cut our credit card fees, your fees are going to have to go up, and it is a cost of doing business. What Mr. Diamond and others in that business failed to note is, last year on Wall Street, the banks awarded, in bonuses, $20.8 billion. So when they argue that an $8 billion loss means fees are going up, oh, really? Or does it mean bonuses might go down? On behalf of consumers and businesses across America, that is part of it.

Let me tell you a few things about the pending amendment. It is not a compromise. Second, it includes costs that cover the whole ballpark, that they can say we are going to add in the cost of ATM machines to the debit card fees and pretty soon, get serious, they are right back up to 44 cents a transaction. That is how it is designed.

They carefully wrote this so there is no effective date for the rule. It says the Board will decide the effective date. There is no effective date for this going into effect. That is awful.

Finally, the argument made on the floor over and over is that we just want to protect the community banks and credit unions. That is why we are doing all this—not a word in here—I take that back—there is one reference to these smaller exempt institutions. There are ways—and they know it—if they wanted to, to have even more protection and reassurance for the smaller community banks and credit unions. They didn't include them because that is not what this is about. This is about all of the banks. Particularly, it is about the giant banks on Wall Street that have at stake in this amendment $8 billion a year in profits—$8 billion a year in subsidies through this amendment and through the second round of bailouts.

This is a good test for the Senate. I don't know how it is going to end. I won last year, but they have poured it on ever since. The banks have done everything they can to reverse what we accomplished last year. It is up to my colleagues now. They have to decide whose side they will be on. It is simple. They are either going to be on the side of the banks and credit card companies or on the side of consumers and businesses all across America, to give them a fighting chance. How many speeches have we heard on the floor of the Senate about small business? If we could unleash the power of small business—their expansion and hiring of more people—we could turn this economy back where it should be. This will be a direct hit on small businesses all across America if this pending amendment is enacted.

This is our chance to say to the big banks on Wall Street: If you can have $20.8 billion in bonuses last year, you are doing quite well, thank you. Incidentally, one of these banks had a 48-percent increase in profits. They are doing okay, folks. We don't need a tag day for any of the Wall Street banks.

Secondly, if you believe in small businesses and merchants and retailers in your hometowns, stand up for them, fight for them. That is what they are asking for. That is what this debate is all about.

Let's wait until this rule comes out. Let's defeat this amendment, and see what the Federal Reserve says. I have given my word—and I will say it again—to work with any Senator on either side of the aisle. If we need to have any kind of reassurance or protection added to what we have done in this law, I am there. As I have said many times, the only perfect law I am aware of was carried down a mountain on stone tablets by Senator Moses. The rest of the time we just do our best. If there is a way to improve it, I will be there.

But at the end of the day, let's finally, finally, finally stand up for consumers and small businesses across America and say to the Wall Street banks and Visa and MasterCard: Sorry, this party is over.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. CORKER. Mr. President, I rise to speak about the Tester-Corker amendment that, hopefully, will be before us shortly.

I have to say I have just witnessed a great discussion of populism, and that is, if an institution is making some money, let's take it from them and give it to others in the name of fairness.

I think everybody knows there certainly are tremendous numbers of small institutions across America that are very concerned about the Durbin amendment and its effects—and a number of small retailers. And there is no question, let's face it, the big boxes, my friends—Walmart, Home Depot, and Target—have funded this effort, as was mentioned, on K Street with the lobbyists. There is no question a lot of the larger financial institutions have funded the effort on the other side. There is no question. But the people who Senator TESTER and myself and others listen to are those folks who come in from our home States—the small community banks and credit unions around our country that are very concerned.

Let me talk about a couple of things. No. 1, the Senator from Illinois talked about timing. Well, we have been trying to find some vehicle to attach this amendment to for some time. The fact is, the Senate hasn't done any business this year. We come in from time to time and vote on a noncontroversial judge, but we have been trying to find some vehicle to attach this to, and we have been trying to do that for months.

Secondly, the Federal Reserve, which has been asked to put forth this rule, is the one saying what they have been asked to do is not appropriate. They have testified publicly saying the Durbin amendment is inappropriate.

Let me describe what the Senator said about reasonable and proportioned. That means if you went out and built a debit system—you invested in all the technology, the computers, the marketing, the fraud prevention, all the things that went into that—the Fed can now look at setting the price. After you have set all that up, and you are processing millions of transactions a year, if you send one more transaction across the wire, what does that cost you—after you have invested? That is what he is saying about reasonable and proportional.

There is no way any business in America could possibly operate under that scenario. Again, retailer after retailer after retailer has been in my office and said: We know the criteria laid out by the Durbin amendment is absolutely inappropriate. We couldn't function with that criteria. We don't know of any other way of solving this problem, and we hate to have the Fed involved in price setting.

So all of us set out to try—many of us set out to try—to solve that problem. What we have come up with is, in fact, a compromise, and this is what it says: We agree the debit card industry should be regulated. We agree retailers are having difficulty in negotiating with Visa and others. Let's get the Fed to set the prices based on the cost of the transaction, which do include, I hate to say, some fixed costs in technology and other kinds of things, such as fraud prevention. The Fed has asked us to do that.

It is not as if we are usurping the Fed coming in and making a rule. They have testified publicly the way the Durbin amendment is written it is going to be terrible for community banks and rural banks.

I think we all know the Senator from Illinois likes to use these larger institutions, but all of us know the big guys just get bigger—they just get bigger—when we do these kind of things, and that creates hardships for the smaller institutions.

The fact that some two-tiered system was set up and won't work—I mean the FDIC has come in and said, look, you cannot make it work where the small banks and small credit unions are held harmless. It won't work. The OCC has come in and said it won't work. Market forces will take over. This will not work. They are going to get crushed. The State examiners, the State bank commissioners have come in and said the Durbin amendment, as written, is going to be disastrous for consumers. It is going to be disastrous for the smaller institutions with which we all deal.

I am not trying to carry water for either side. I am trying to come up with a solution that is fair. I have worked with Senator TESTER, Senator CRAPO, Senator HAGAN, Senator BENNET, Senator BROWN, and numbers of other people, trying to come up with language that hits that sweet spot. The Senator from Illinois is right, we have probably never developed a perfect law. But I think we have a responsibility, when we know something is about to happen that won't work, that is going to be devastating, to come up with something that meets the test of trying to be fair to both sides. And I think that is what this amendment does.

The Senator talked about all kinds of things being added. The banks can't just add it. The Fed is regulating them. The Fed will decide what is reasonable and proportioned. The Fed will decide, but they will use all of the costs that it takes to actually do those operations and the cost, which the Durbin amendment did not do.

I think this amendment meets the test. I know there are numbers of people who voted for the Durbin amendment in the past who have now coauthored this. They coauthored this because they realize the Durbin amendment was far too narrow; that the Durbin amendment didn't take into account anything but, again, the cost of adding one transaction on top of an infrastructure that had already been built. There is no business that could operate that way.

The Presiding Officer used to be part of a weekly broadcast. If all that was charged was the incremental cost of that going out and being broadcast to other television stations around the country, and that was the only cost he could get, there is no way our Presiding Officer would have been known to America the way he is now known because there is no way that operation could have succeeded.

This is a very commonsense solution. People who supported the Durbin amendment during this debate—even though there was never a hearing held; and it was a pretty major issue to never have a hearing in the Banking Committee—and it was passed at a time when many people around this country were rightfully upset with some of the larger players in our financial system—have now woken up and they realize this is a bad piece of policy. But if we tweak it, then the retailers still end up with a regulated market where they are not overcharged.

The institutions are providing this service. By the way, it is a service or people wouldn't use it. Retailers like getting their money instantly and people like being able to carry around plastic to pay their bills instead of cash. But what this amendment does is puts it in the middle of the road where it is fair to the retailers, fair to the institutions involved, and most of all it protects consumers around this country. I think we have seen the letters that were sent out as to what is going to happen to consumers if the Durbin amendment goes into effect as it is now laid out.

The Senator does a great job, I know, in taking a few of these institutions that no doubt behaved badly, and causing the whole thrust of this to be about poking a stick in the eye of these institutions that have paid bonuses and made bad decisions. But the fact is, this is a bad policy as it exists. The Tester-Corker amendment, with many other cosponsors, is something to bring that into the middle of the road. So I ask each Senator to please spend 10 minutes with your staffers and understand what the third round of revisions does. Look at this commonsense solution that has been put forth by the best efforts of this body, with people working together to get here, and hopefully we can end up with a piece of legislation of which we are all proud.

We can continue to have a financial system that is strong and that includes the many small players we depend upon in small communities across this country, and we can also continue to have a viable retail industry that counts on the additional sales they get from having access to these types of transactions.

With that, Mr. President, I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I wanted to make sure the Senator from Tennessee knows his amendment is pending. It has already been put into play, and we are on it at this time. I just wanted to be sure he knew that.

Mr. CORKER. I thank the Senator. There was some discussion a minute ago about when it was going to occur. I thank you for that and for your deft management of this bill.

Mrs. BOXER. Thank you very much. The Senator from Tennessee probably won't agree with my position on his amendment, but I do know my friend has worked long and hard with Senator TESTER and others, and I appreciate all the time he has put into trying to come up with what he considers to be a compromise.

I do want to say this. The Senator talks a lot about the Durbin amendment. There is no Durbin amendment. It is the law. The Durbin amendment was included in the bill that is now the law of the land. So it is a question of saying that we should essentially repeal it or delay it, study it, whatever the word is, before it has a chance to actually go forward.

I understand that, and I want to say for the record where I stand on it. I have met with all sides. I have met with the retailers, that are very strongly supportive of the Durbin law. I have met with the banks, and they are fiercely against it. The credit unions are very worried they are going to get hit with a situation where they will not be able to compete with the banks. I have told them all the same thing, which is I think what is important when we pass a reform is to see if it is going to work, and if it doesn't work, I agree with Senator DURBIN, we will do everything in our power to work that out.

I understand the Fed says, help me, give me guidance. I think there is a lot of guidance in the law. I think every bureaucracy in the world would rather have the details fall on us. I think the details fall to them. So I am going to be voting no on the amendment. I do appreciate, however, all the work and all the time and effort that went into trying to pull us all together.

I will say the last thing on the swipe fee that I find compelling is the swipe fee reform my friends want to delay—and was signed into law last year—places reasonable constraints on the fees Visa and MasterCard fix on behalf of the Nation's largest banks. But here is the thing. The United States has the highest debit interchange fees in the world, and the rates keep going up. The average debit interchange fee in the U.S. is 1.14 percent. The average debit interchange fee in the European Union is 0.20 percent, and the average debit interchange fee in Canada is zero. So it is not as if the banks are taking it on the chin here.

I feel we should give this a chance to work. I am not saying it is the perfect law. As Senator DURBIN said, maybe there was one perfect law—the Ten Commandments—but as far as laws here, they can all be made better. It may well be once the Fed acts, if we are not happy, we can move at that time.

I want to get back to the bill, the underlying bill we are debating, which is the Economic Development Administration reauthorization, and to thank Senator INHOFE for his remarks he made on the floor about it. He pointed out that we have a lot of work to do here to create jobs. When we have a program that takes $1 of Federal funds and it attracts $7 of private investments and many jobs, we ought to come together.

I will go through a couple of charts.

The EDA is an efficient job creator. They just are. In 2009 and 2010, investments by EDA created over 160,000 jobs and saved nearly 45,000. One dollar of EDA investment is expected to attract—and this is a fact—it has attracted nearly $7 in private sector investment on average. Sometimes it is $10, sometimes it is $15, sometimes it is $4, $3, $2, but the average is $7. EDA project funding creates one job for every $2,000 to $4,600 invested. You see the average cost of creating a job is very low in terms of the Federal investment. This is terrific. This program really works.

There are a couple of things we believed we ought to take a look at—duplication and also a way for the community to buy out the Federal Government share of a project. We put that in the reauthorization. We believe we really strengthened this law, and I again thank the Democrats and Republicans on the Environment and Public Works Committee.

This morning, I went through some of the programs in California:

The city of Dixon, $3 million for a water system that is expected to create 1,000 jobs and leverage $40 million in private investment—$3 million attracting $40 million in private investment.

The city of Shafter, $2 million for sewer and water. It is going to develop an additional 600 acres to enable continued growth of the East Shafter Logistical Center and is expected to create 1,400 jobs and leverage $250 million in private investment.

San Jose, $3 million for the renovation and expansion of the Center for Employment Training. They can then expand their capacity by 860 students, expand access to the GED, the literacy, language, and small business entrepreneurship classes to low-income areas. This is absolutely key. It really should bring us together because they are training students so students get out and get their GED, get their literacy, and can really make sure the community is growing and thriving. That particular grant is expected to leverage $3 million in private investment and create 4,900 jobs. So it is a 1-to-1. In that case, it is $3 million of public and $3 million of private.

Nationwide—I talked about this. I talked about other examples, but I didn't mention ones on the west coast. In the Central Valley, there was a 23,000-square-foot water and energy technology incubator, and the incubator has housed more than 15 entrepreneurs since it opened in 2007. They obtained $17 million in private capital and created jobs for Californians, so $1.8 million attracted $17 million.

We have the case of Boeing, and they were able to expand one of their campuses. It created 2,000 jobs.

I talked about Duluth. In 2001, an EDA grant of $3.5 million matched by $2.3 million from the city of Duluth helped build the Duluth Aviation Business Incubator at the Duluth Airport. This investment helped Cirrus Aircraft grow from a handful of employees to 1,012 by 2008. It is now leased to Cirrus Design Corporation, which has the largest share of the worldwide general aviation market.

When we are talking about the EDA and the way it attracts private sector funding and creates jobs, this is not hyperbole, this is not just rhetoric, this is reality. This is a program that has been going on since 1965. Republicans and Democrats have supported it. The last time it was authorized was when George W. Bush was President. It passed unanimously.

So I stand here today on the opening day full of hope, hoping that is not naive, hoping we will see a few amendments—that is all fine. We don't mind amendments. Amendments are fine, but let's have reasonable discussion and reasonable time set aside and move on.

There is the Maytag plant in Newton, IA, which employed 1,800 factory and administrative workers. It was closed. We all know how painful that is. We remember back when we were losing 700,000 to 800,000 jobs a month. It was not that long ago. By 2008, the city identified two new manufacturing operations that could be located at that old plant—TPI Composites, Inc., a wind turbine blade manufacturer, and Trinity Structural Towers, Inc., a manufacturer of massive steel towers for windmills. The EDA invested $580,000 in 2008 for grading, site preparation, and surfacing for a wind tower storage facility that was leased to Trinity and created 140 jobs and generated $21 million in private investment.

That same year, EDA also invested $670,000 in the Central Iowa Water Association in Newton to help build a booster station and storage tank to serve TPI. This project helped create 500 jobs and generate $40 million in private investment.

On the east coast, in 2010 the EDA gave a $750,000 grant to Seedco Financial Services, Inc., a national nonprofit community development financial institution. Seedco used this funding to provide capital to Sub Zero Insulation and Refrigeration Technologies, LLC, which is a family-owned manufacturer of custom, environmentally friendly, energy-efficient insulated commercial truck and van liners—Sub Zero. It is pretty famous. They are located in Brooklyn, NY. They had been denied financing by a major bank.

This is the thing. A lot of our companies—while the banks want to charge very high swipe fees, they are somehow absent when our companies need them. In 2010—that is just last year—Sub Zero was denied financing. EDA provided access to capital, which allowed Sub Zero to fulfill its contract with Edible Arrangement to outfit delivery vehicles and to win contracts from Ford, Chevy, and Dodge. This allowed Sub Zero to hire 15 new staff. They started in 2004 with just 3 employees and producing 75 vehicles a year, and the company now has 20 employees and produces approximately 400 vehicles a year.

It goes on.

EDA provided $2 million to help build the Knowledge Works preincubator facility as part of the development of the Virginia Tech Corporate Research Center, and now we have seen 2,000 high-wage jobs created and the inception of 140 high-tech businesses.

The way EDA works is there are regional offices, about six of them, and they get funded through the Appropriations Committee to the Commerce Department, and then each region makes the decision as to which projects really meet the goals of the legislation, which is to bring economic development to distressed areas, create jobs, and leverage the dollars.

In addition to this, EDA—in 2008 we gave them an extra $500 million in disaster assistance to give to areas which were experiencing disaster problems, and they assumed the role of a secondary responder, working with affected communities to support long-term postdisaster rebuilding. As an example of that, again back in Iowa, they provided funding to help construct and install an upgraded, energy-efficient natural gas-fired boiler system in Cedar Rapids, IA, following a flood that destroyed the boiler that had provided steam heat and hot water to Saint Luke's Hospital and Coe College. We all know what happens when a hospital can't count on a backup generator: they can't count on energy. We know what happens when that occurs: everything shuts down, and people are in peril. EDA steps in in these areas, and while FEMA is dealing with the immediate impacts, they are looking a little bit more at the long-term work that could be done so that when and if there is another disaster, the community is ready.

All I can tell you is nothing is perfect. I am sure there are examples we have that are not as good as the ones I mentioned. I am sure there are because nothing is perfect and nobody is perfect. But this is a very good program. It is time-tested, signed into law by Democratic Presidents and Republican Presidents. The last time, it passed here by unanimous consent, was voted out of the committee which I am privileged to chair with almost unanimous consent. We had one dissent, and that is fine. We hope we will win over that dissenter. But here is where we are. We have a chance to reauthorize this program.

There are reforms we have made. I want to share some of the reforms we have made. This can go on without an authorization and stumble around. But what is important at this particular time, when the main three issues on people's minds are jobs, jobs, and jobs, is we have to do a jobs bill. This is a jobs bill. This creates jobs at very low cost to the Federal Government. This creates jobs in the private sector in some of our cities and public works areas.

This is what we did in order to help people understand why we think it is important to reauthorize this. Working with my ranking member, Senator INHOFE, we came up with some good reforms.

We changed the current cost-share requirements, so we increased the Federal share for areas in which unemployment is especially high and per capita income is especially low because we want to make sure that when we go into an area that is deeply in need, we do a little more for them.

We require additional planning assistance if overall funding levels increase. In other words, we want to keep our eye on these projects. We want to make sure they are meeting their goals.

We modified the existing Revolving Loan Fund Program to allow recipients to convert an existing revolving loan fund to carry out another EDA-eligible project. So we take the bureaucracy and say: Look, if they have a better idea, let's go forward and let them use those funds in that way.

We modify rules to allow recipients of grants that are more than 10 years old to buy out the Federal Government's interest at a depreciated rate. In other words, if a State, city, county or participant says: You know what, we want to do this on our own, this is an older grant and we believe we want to take it over, they can buy out the Federal Government's interests.

We emphasize that EDA should work with Federal, State, and local agency partners to support economic and workforce development strategies.

Senator INHOFE mentioned his reform that he made sure happened, which is that we are not duplicating other programs. That is important. We don't want to be duplicative. We want to be sure that what we are doing is not being done elsewhere.

We walk in and we do something, frankly, that people need now: We create jobs and we leverage. That word "leverage" has become the first thing out of my mouth when I talk about things I support now. That is why we support the highway bill that we hope is going to come here in a bipartisan way. We leverage dollars. Anytime you can leverage dollars—you put $1 down for something good, and people come to the table from local government, the nonprofit sector, the profit sector, State, all the different agencies, all the different parties come together and say: This is a great idea. If we all kick in just a little, we are going to do something big. That is the idea behind the EDA.

I visited projects in my own State, shopping malls and other things that were done in these very fine communities where it is tough to get capital, where the banks just turn their backs, where perhaps the venture capitalists are saying: This isn't our cup of tea. That is why this is a successful program.

Again, I hope we will have debate today on the Tester-Corker amendment. It is a very controversial one. It is not happy because it is one of these things where, if you do one thing, 50 percent of the people think you are right, and if you do the other, 50 percent think you are wrong, although Senator DURBIN says the polls show that people support these lower fees in this case. But I respect the fact that the amendment was offered on this bill. It is an amendment that is directly related to our economy. But I hope we vote tomorrow, as early as possible, and I hope we do not have a lot of amendments dragging us down because, guess what, people are looking at us and they are thinking: Why aren't they doing more to create jobs? This will send a signal that we are making EDA a priority.

This is not a big spending measure. This is an authorization, and the number at which we are authorizing has been frozen so we are not adding to it. But we are sending a signal to the appropriators and to the Commerce Department that we think this is a good and important program.

Madam President, I thank you very much. I have said my piece for the moment. I note the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLUMENTHAL). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following morning business on Wednesday, June 8, the Senate resume consideration of S. 782, the EDA Revitalization Act, with the time until 2 p.m. equally divided between the proponents and opponents of the Tester amendment No. 392 regarding swipe fees; that at 2 p.m. the Durbin amendment No. 393 be withdrawn and the Senate proceed to vote in relation to the Tester amendment No. 392, with no amendments, motions, or points of order in order prior to the vote other than budget points of order and the applicable motions to waive; the Tester amendment be subject to a 60-vote threshold; and the motion to reconsider be considered made and laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I want to express my appreciation to Senators DURBIN and TESTER for their warm relationship and to every Senator here on this most difficult issue, for allowing us to get this done tomorrow expeditiously. It is something that had to be done and it is the right thing to do and we will move forward upon completing this to try to do other things on this very important piece of legislation.

MORNING BUSINESS

NATIONAL HUNGER AWARENESS DAY

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I rise today in honor of National Hunger Awareness Day. On this day, we focus on the more than 50 million people in the United States without enough to eat and reassert our commitment to assist those in need.

Millions of families live each day not knowing if they will have enough to eat. Rather than thinking about what the next meal will be, these parents worry if there will be a next meal. Rather than concentrate on homework, these children are trying not to think about their hunger pangs. In a nation as resourceful and agriculturally abundant as ours, this is inexcusable. If children—or adults—are hungry in America, that is a problem for all of us.

The level of hunger in our Nation is at the highest level since the government began tracking food insecurity in 1995. The number of Americans experiencing hunger increased from 35.5 million in 2006 to 50 million in 2011. In Illinois, over 11 percent of households are food insecure. These are working families who just aren't able to make ends meet and are forced to skip meals to make sure food will last through the week.

At a time when millions of middle class Americans are struggling to keep up with higher gas prices and grocery bills, more families are looking to Federal programs for assistance. Throughout the country, Federal hunger assistance programs have responded to this growing need by providing essential support to hungry families. Over the past 2 years, Illinois food banks have seen a 50-percent increase in requests for food assistance.

According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, applications for food stamps are on the rise at the same time recipients are making more frequent use of food pantries to fill gaps in their grocery needs. Over 44 million people nationwide rely on the Federal food stamp program. Currently, 1,802,252 people in Illinois receive food stamps, an increase of 14 percent from last year and the highest level ever in Illinois. But for the millions of people who don't have assistance, everything is different.

We know hunger is a reality in our communities. We see long lines at our food pantries. We have heard from seniors forced to choose between groceries and medication. And children are in our schools who have not had a decent meal since the previous day's school lunch. We see families showing up a day earlier than normal at the food pantry because the monthly pay is not stretching as far it once did. Parents are giving up their own meal to make sure their child has something to eat at night.

Last week, I visited a Summer Food Service Program at the Boys & Girls Club in Decatur, IL. This summer program provides 2 free meals a day to up to 150 children. For the over 500,000 Illinois children in food insecure households, the summertime means months without the free and reduced breakfasts and lunches available in school. Thanks to the Summer Food Service Program, food banks, and food pantries, families who are having a difficult time keeping up in our tough economy are able to put meals on the table. One woman with three kids in the Summer Food Service Program in Decatur said the meals provided in the program help her save money so she can afford to put gas in her car to get to work.

In the Nation that prides itself as the land of plenty, we cannot hide the fact that we need to protect these vital antihunger programs and that we need to do better at making sure everybody has at least enough to eat. As Congress works to rein in our Nation's debt, I look forward to working with my colleagues to ensure we make responsible decisions that protect vital antihunger programs like the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program and the Emergency Food Assistance Program.

If there is one hungry person in our Nation, hunger will be a problem for all of us. I hope we will continue to work together to fulfill our duty to end hunger in our Nation and the world.

TAIWAN AIR DEFENSES

Mr. CORNYN. Mr. President, on February 23, 2011, the RAND Corporation released a report funded by and prepared for the U.S. Air Force entitled, "Shaking the Heavens and Splitting the Earth." This report provides a comprehensive review of the capabilities of the Chinese Air Force, and it is alarming. In less than a decade, China has transformed its air force from an antiquated service based on 1950s-era Soviet technology into a modern, highly capable 21st century air force. RAND predicts that, by approximately 2015, the weapon systems and platforms China is acquiring "would make a Chinese air defense campaign, if conducted according to the principles described in Chinese military publications, highly challenging for U.S. air forces."

Without question, China's military expansion poses a clear and present danger to our longstanding ally, Taiwan—a threat that also has very serious implications for the United States. In its report, RAND predicts that, should the United States have to intervene in a conflict between Taiwan and China, the United States "should expect attacks on its forces and facilities in the western Pacific, including those in Japan. . . . Chinese military writings, moreover, emphasize the advantages of preemptive and surprise attacks, so it is possible that Chinese attacks on U.S. forces in the western Pacific would precede a use of force against Taiwan." RAND further states that, in the event of a military conflict off of Taiwan, "even if the United States intervened on a large scale," the "capabilities of Taiwan's armed forces would also be critical to the outcome. . . . Defending Taiwan against air attack is feasible if Taiwan makes systematic, sustained, and carefully chosen investments."

These military investments by Taiwan are critical, due to the continuing deterioration of its air force. A January 21, 2010, Defense Intelligence Agency, DIA, report on the current condition of Taiwan's Air Force quantified its eroding air capability in stark terms: "Although Taiwan has nearly 400 combat aircraft in service, far fewer of these are operationally capable. Taiwan's F-5 fighters have reached the end of their operational service life, and while the indigenously produced F-CK-1 A/B Indigenous Defense Fighter, IDF, is a large component of Taiwan's active fighter force, it lacks the capability for sustained sorties. Taiwan's Mirage 2000-5 aircraft are technologically advanced, but they require frequent, expensive maintenance that adversely affects their operational readiness rate."

Last August, the Department of Defense, DOD, released its 2010 Annual Report to Congress on the Military and Security Developments Involving the People's Republic of China. It states: "Cross-Strait economic and political ties continued to make important progress in 2009. Despite these positive trends, China's military buildup opposite the island [Taiwan] continues unabated. The PLA is developing the capability to deter Taiwan independence or influence Taiwan to settle the dispute on Beijing's terms while simultaneously attempting to deter, delay, or deny any possible U.S. support for the island in case of conflict. The balance of cross-Strait military forces continues to shift in China's favor." This report recounts that China has a total of approximately 2,300 operational combat aircraft, including 330 fighters and 160 bombers stationed within range of Taiwan.

These disturbing reports are just the latest warnings that highlight both China's military expansion and Taiwan's increasing need for new defensive weapons. Some have openly questioned whether selling arms to Taiwan is worth the political cost to the U.S.-China bilateral relationship. Surely, we would all prefer to have Taiwanese pilots flying Taiwanese fighter jets as the island's first line of defense, instead of American military pilots. Taiwan understands this, and it wants to remain the primary guarantor of its own freedom and democracy. A strong and robust defensive capability built on an air force capable of holding its own with China will promote a Beijing-Taipei détente that can build on the work President Ma has done to ease tensions and promote better economic ties with China. It remains to be seen how far the Obama administration's support extends to Taiwan and whether this administration will try to strategically counter the military rise of China.

China should never be allowed to dictate U.S. policy, either directly or indirectly. That includes our decision to sell defensive weapons to an important democratic ally. Yet there is evidence that this administration is already bowing to Chinese pressure. According to a February 7, 2010, report by Defense News, China's extensive holdings of U.S. Government securities are already directly influencing U.S. national security policy. This article reports that, according to an unnamed Pentagon official, Obama administration officials softened a draft of a key national security document in order to avoid "harsh words" that "might upset Chinese officials at a time when the United States and China are economically intertwined." The article indicates that Pentagon officials "deleted several passages and softened others about China's military buildup." This critical document, the 2010 Quadrennial Defense Review, QDR, is intended to provide an assessment of long-term threats and challenges for the Nation and to guide military programs, plans, and budgets in the coming decades.

Although the QDR was watered down by administration officials, other reports effectively highlight the disparity between China's diplomatic rhetoric and its true intentions, as demonstrated by its rapid and robust military modernization effort. According to the DOD's 2010 report on China, "The pace and scope of China's military modernization have increased over the past decade," increasing "China's options for using military force to gain diplomatic advantage or resolve disputes in its favor." The DOD's report highlights to China's military modernization has been focused on "improving its capacity for force projection and anti-access/area-denial." These modernization efforts are heavily focused on offensive capabilities, including the development of an antiship ballistic missile with a range in excess of 1,500 km that is "intended to provide the PLA the capability to attack ships, including aircraft carriers, in the western Pacific Ocean," as well as an active aircraft carrier research and development program. Moreover, PLA Air Force, PLAFAF, Commander General Xu Giliang has emphasized the transformation of the PLAFAF "from a homeland defense focus to one that 'integrates air and space,' and that possesses both 'offensive and defensive' capabilities."

It is because of China's military rise and the troubling shift in the cross-Strait balance in China's favor that Taiwan recognizes its need to modernize its air force. As a result, Taiwan has made repeated requests to purchase new F-16 C/D aircraft from the United States since 2006. Taiwan desperately needs these F-16s—a "carefully chosen investment"—which are comparable to China's own domestically-developed J-10 fighter aircraft.

Yet despite a compelling argument, Taiwanese President Ma's requests to the United States to purchase these aircraft continue to be snubbed. In an interview with the Washington Post, President Ma said, "Our objective in improving cross-strait relations is to seek peace and prosperity. However, the Republic of China (Taiwan) is a sovereign state; we must have our national defense. While we negotiate with the mainland, we hope to carry out such talks with sufficient self defense capabilities and not negotiate out of fear. This is an extremely important principle. Therefore, we must purchase the necessary defensive weapons from overseas that cannot be manufactured here in Taiwan to replace outdated ones. This is essential for our national survival and development."

Moreover, the United States has a statutory obligation under the Taiwan Relations Act of 1979 to provide Taiwan the defense articles and services necessary to enable Taiwan to maintain sufficient self-defense capabilities, in furtherance of maintaining peace and stability in the western Pacific region. Our obligations under the Taiwan Relations Act recognize that the key to maintaining peace and stability in Asia in the face of China's dramatic military expansion is ensuring a militarily strong and confident Taiwan.

To that end, in early 2010, President Obama notified Congress of a $6.4 billion military sale to Taiwan. This was a welcome step, but it remains the only visible step the Obama administration has taken to provide Taiwan the defensive arms it needs, in accordance with our statutory obligations. While the administration dithers on Taiwan's request for F-16s, evidence continues to mount that what Taiwan desperately needs to restore the cross-Strait balance and regain the ability to defend its own airspace is new fighter aircraft to bolster an air force that is borderline obsolete.

It is my understanding that the administration may favor selling Taiwan upgrade kits for its existing fleet of F-16 A/Bs, instead of selling Taiwan brand new fighters. Such a tradeoff will not enhance the security of Taiwan. What Taiwan's air force needs is new F-16s and the ability to deploy them in sufficient numbers to strengthen its defensive posture. Simply upgrading airframes that are more than 20 years old is not a solution—it is nothing more than a public relations Band-Aid. Efforts to upgrade Taiwan's air fleet have to be coupled with the sale of new aircraft that can serve for two decades or more into the future.

Another important consideration is the shrinking time window for this purchase. The continuing production of new F-16s is dependent on foreign sales. It is my understanding that, if no new overseas orders are secured this year, the thousands of U.S. suppliers who help build the F-16 will begin shuttering that capability. Once this happens, it will be very difficult and expensive to restart the supply chain. Washington has a longstanding habit of putting off difficult decisions, but the decision on whether to sell new F-16s to Taiwan is literally now or never.

As the DIA report made clear, the majority of Taiwan's 400 fighter aircraft need to be retired or upgraded. Within the next 5 years, Taiwan will have to mothball or scrap more than 100 combat aircraft—one-quarter of its current force. Without the ability to augment its air force with new F-16 aircraft, as well as updates to its existing fleet, Taiwan will lose all ability to project a defensive umbrella over the island. The repercussions of a rising and potentially aggressive China, able to dominate the airspace over Taiwan, demands the attention of our military planners, government officials, and Members of Congress because it opens the door for China to use force against Taiwan. To that end, I was proud to recently join with 43 of my Senate colleagues in sending a letter to President Obama urging him to act swiftly to provide Taiwan with the F-16s that are critical to preserving Taiwan's self-defense capabilities.

It is time to recommit ourselves to strengthening the ties that bind the U.S. and Taiwan together—from arms sales to free-trade agreements. Doing so will promote peace and stability in the region, while also protecting U.S. and Taiwanese security interests. I urge President Obama and his administration to move quickly and work with Taiwan to notify the sale of these fighter jets to Congress.

NEVER TO FORGET

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, last week Senator COCHRAN, Senator GRASSLEY, Senator SHELBY, and I travelled to Flanders Field, the American Cemetery and Memorial in Belgium. We visited the cemetery on the eve of Memorial Day to take part in a ceremony honoring Americans who have made the ultimate sacrifice for our freedom.

The U.S. Ambassador to Belgium, Howard W. Gutman, shared an extraordinary poem he had written at the commemoration. "Never to Forget" is a tribute to those who gave their lives for our country and also a reminder that we must heed the lessons of our past to create a better future for our children.

I would like to share Ambassador Gutman's poem with my colleagues. I ask unanimous consent that a copy be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEVER TO FORGET MEMORIAL DAY 2011

We commemorate Memorial Day never to forget.

Never to forget who they were.

Men and women of many titles.

To some they were sergeant or colonel or general;

To others they were mom or dad,

Uncle or aunt . . .

Son or daughter.

To us, they are all heroes.

We honor them all.

And we honor their parents who lost children.

We honor their children who lost parents.

As a head of one of our American Battlefield cemeteries once told me:

For those buried in his cemetery

They remain each day on active duty. . .

And on each day that we fail to remember them . . . that we fail to honor them . . . they have served a day without a mission.

Every soldier is entitled to his mission.

Here at Ardennes American Cemetery/Henrichappelle—we—Belgians and Americans, parents and children—we are that mission.

We commemorate Memorial Day never to forget.

Never to forget what they did.

Every one of them understood when they joined that the road would be rough.

They knew that this was not about television commercials boasting pressed uniforms and glistening shoes or steeds clashing on chessboards.

They knew this was not about training exercises amidst sunny days in North Carolina,

They knew instead that this was about life and death.

They knew that for every moment of thrill, there could be months of fear.

But they knew that the rest of us needed them. They knew our fellow world citizens had been victims of murder or terror.

Perhaps they knew in 1915 that the poppies and the hearts of Belgians had been trampled on the way to 9 million deaths in WWI.

Or perhaps they knew in 1944 that Max Gutman was hiding in the woods in Poland after every other Jew in his small town of Biyala Rafka had been slaughtered. Maybe they knew that his dream one day to come to America, to raise a future U.S. Ambassador to Belgium, had nearly been extinguished along with the future for so many Poles and Catholics and Jews.

Maybe they knew in 2001 that our citizens had been the victims of terror and remained under threat.

Whenever they served, wherever they served, they knew we needed someone to help, to respond, to free, to save, to protect.

And they said, "I will."

We commemorate Memorial Day never to forget the face of evil.

We welcome all into the brotherhood of man.

We will meet you far more than half way. We and our allies will send our diplomats, help feed your poor, and treat you with respect. But threaten none, harm even fewer,

We commemorate Memorial Day never to forget.

Never to forget what they died for.

Can you hear them each and every one of the 5323 buried here and the tens of thousands buried elsewhere . . .

Can you hear them?

If not, it is because you are listening with your ears.

But on Memorial Day, we listen not with our ears, but instead with our hearts.

And with our hearts we can hear them loudly and clearly.

They tell us that they lived in a country that believed in freedom and understood right from wrong.

And they tell us that they believed in service, in duty, in the mission of creating a better world.

They tell us never to forget, but certainly to move forward and build bridges where pools of hatred previously existed.

They fought and they died to move us a step closer towards the brotherhood of man. We must never use their memory as an excuse not to get there.

Thus while we can never forget, while we will never forget, we will forgive those who have followed. Where we faced each other to the death, we will walk together to rebuild a better life.

And that may be the most enduring lesson—lessons for Belgium, for Europe, for the Middle East, or for all places where tensions rooted in the mistakes or ill deeds of the past threaten the progress of the future.

The lessons are that we need not carry the blame nor clear the name of our parents and grandparents looking back.

Rather that we build a better name for our children and our grandchildren going forward. That we must use the lessons of the past to carve a better future.

We are so used to the expression "Forgive but don't forget." And of course Memorial Day proclaims that we shall never forget.

But in making sure we don't forget, sometimes we don't truly forgive.

We commemorate Memorial Day never to forget precisely so that we can forgive.

—Ambassador Howard Gutman

TRIBUTE TO RICK COCHRAN

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, my fellow Members of the U.S. Senate have heard me say this before, but today I have reason to say it again: Vermonters are some of the most innovative and hardworking people in this country. The U.S. Small Business Administration recently highlighted one of these great individuals when it named Rick Cochran of the Mobile Medical International Corporation in St. Johnsbury, Vermont, as the 2011 National Small Business Person of the Year.

Mr. Cochran deserves this recognition for his many years of hard work building a successful small business that provides mobile, combat-ready shelter systems both in the U.S. and abroad. In collaboration with the U.S. Department of Defense, the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs, the U.S. Air Force, and others, Mr. Cochran and his team provide quality medical services to the many dedicated men and woman worldwide who put their lives at risk in the military. Mr. Cochran has also deployed mobile surgical units across the globe to developing countries, giving third world countries cost-effective mobile access to modern medical facilities.

From an otherwise nondescript industrial building in St. Johnsbury, Mobile Medical has touched the lives of thousands of people from across the globe. Whether the company is shipping units to the Middle East, deploying units with National Guard soldiers, or quickly delivering aid to communities devastated by natural disasters here at home, the men and women who have engineered and manufactured these mobile medical facilities have found a novel and cost-effective way to deliver state-of-the-art medical care in some of the world's most challenging environments. Just last week, I learned that Mobile Medical had already deployed mobile healthcare facilities to assist in the recovery efforts in Joplin, MO, following the catastrophic weather that left hundreds dead and thousands more injured.

Mr. Cochran and his staff have improved the lives of others both abroad and locally, as their business has created hundreds of job opportunities for Vermonters in our rural Northeast Kingdom. As a longtime supporter of Mobile Medical, I was pleased to see this locally owned business recognized for the great work it has done in Vermont and across the globe.

I continue to be proud of the many small businesses thriving across Vermont. And today I am especially proud of the work of one small business that has succeeded both financially and socially Mobile Medical International Corporation of St. Johnsbury, VT. I wish Rick and his business continued success in the future. I also ask that the May 20, 2011, U.S. Small Business Administration announcement of this award be printed in the RECORD.

The information follows:

VERMONT MANUFACTURER OF MOBILE HEALTH CARE UNITS IS NATIONAL SMALL BUSINESS PERSON OF THE YEAR

[Friday, May 20, 2011]

WASHINGTON.—When Rick Cochran was working with five employees in his basement in Walden, Vt., his dream was to find a way to provide advanced medical care to underserved areas, and build a company that could deliver it.

Today, the Vermont manufacturer of state-of-the-art mobile healthcare and diagnostic units was named 2011 National Small Business Person of the year by Karen Mills, Administrator of the U.S. Small Business Administration. Mills made the announcement during ceremonies at SBA's celebration of National Small Business Week in Washington, D.C.

First runner-up is Deborah Carey, president and founder of the New Glarus Brewing Company, in New Glarus in southwestern Wisconsin. Second runner-up is Leigh Kamstra, owner and chef of Roma's Ristorante in Spearfish, S.D., north of the Black Hills.

"The innovation, inspiration and determination shown by Rick Cochran and his employees have elevated his company, Mobile Medical International, to a level that is above and beyond the norm," said Mills. "These are the qualities that make small businesses such a powerful force for job creation in the American economy and in their local communities. Rick had a dream and he persisted—creating jobs, winning the loyalty of his team, and filling a need in the marketplace that has taken Mobile Medical from his basement to a worldwide stage. We are especially proud that when Rick Cochran's company needed financing, he turned to the U.S. Small Business Administration, and the SBA was able to help him.

"I applaud Rick and his team, and I applaud the runners-up and their staffs, and all of the state small business persons of the year who are here today," Mills said. "We are all grateful for their contributions to our economy. They are magnificent examples of the character of America's most successful entrepreneurs."

The National Small Business Person of the Year and runners-up were selected from among the state winners in 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, and Guam. All are being honored this week in Washington, D.C., as part of National Small Business Week. The awards were announced at today's National Awards Luncheon, sponsored by Sam's Club at the Mandarin Oriental Hotel.

For Cochran the road began when he left a job at an advanced medical equipment provider to establish his first venture, Outpatient Services of America, a consulting firm specializing in planning and developing ambulatory surgery centers. His plan evolved in 1994, when he researched and created an initial design for a mobile surgery unit and established Mobile Medical International, working from his basement with a staff of five. By 1995, he had the capital, and by 1996, he had his prototype.

At first, he provided temporary solutions for hospitals undergoing renovations, but he was able to expand the business into broader commercial, military, and emergency response applications worldwide. During one rough patch in 1999, much of his core team—inspired by Cochran's perseverance, optimism and faith—worked without pay when financing ran dry and the company nearly closed its doors. They were reimbursed later, when the company rebounded. The company also secured financing support from three SBA-backed loans in 1997, 2005 and 2008.

MMI's products include mobile surgical hospitals built into a semi-sized tractor-trailer and an inflatable hospital ward that fits into a trailer pulled by a Humvee. To date, MMIC has 22 mobile healthcare units in its product line, including Mobile Breast Care Centers, Mobile Intensive Care, Mobile Laboratory/Pharmacy, Mobile CT Scan/Dental/Ophthalmology, Mobile Ophthalmology and Mobile Endoscopy Units.

Today, MMI's staff has grown to 54, and net income—just $9,835 in 2008—rose in 2010 to $1.68 million on gross revenues of more than $14 million.

First runner-up Carey developed her business plan for the New Glarus Brewing Company while her husband Dan, a master brewer, gathered the materials, grains and equipment needed for start-up. In 1993 they negotiated to lease a warehouse in New Glarus, exchanging the lease for stock in the company. They sold their home and raised $40,000 in seed money, yet still needed more cash to fund the startup. Carey pitched her story to local newspapers, and the media attention brought in $200,000 from investors.

In the early days, the couple worked hard to establish the brewery's reputation for consistent quality beers. Carey based her plan on developing a very loyal customer base. She set up beer tasting classes along with offering brewery tours, and the brewery started to take off, attracting notice from distributors. New Glarus Brewing Company has grown to 50 full-time employees, has registered growth in profits of 123 percent from 2007 to 2009, and is Wisconsin's number one micro-brewery relative to sales volume.

Kamstra, the second runner-up, had been eyeing an old, dilapidated stone building that had stood empty while she was a college student attending Black Hills State University. She didn't know exactly at the time how or why, but she knew somehow her future would be in that building.

After earning a degree in business and 10 years in banking, Kamstra changed course and earned a degree in culinary arts at the Colorado Institute of art. In 1999, with the help of an SBA-guaranteed loan, Kamstra leased the old dilapidated building, refurbished it and opened Roma's Ristorante. When the old building proved too small, Kamstra adapted, securing another SBA-backed loan in 2010 to finance construction of a new building, with more space. Since then, sales have nearly doubled and staff has increased from 11 to 35.

TRIBUTE TO GRACE S. MATTERN

• Ms. AYOTTE. Mr. President, today I recognize and congratulate Grace S. Mattern for her 30 years of service on behalf of the New Hampshire Coalition Against Domestic and Sexual Violence.

Since its inception, the coalition has become a leader in the struggle for victims', women's, and children's rights. Over the past quarter century, Grace has shaped the way domestic violence and sexual assault is understood and responded to in New Hampshire. Under Grace's leadership, the coalition has developed a nationally recognized model for protocols, state law, and health care initiatives. On the local level, there has been no victim-centered legislation in which Grace has not played a major part.

One of Grace's strongest attributes is her ability to work with people and facilitate meetings in a productive way. She has worked tirelessly to encourage everyone to work together to strengthen efforts to end domestic violence, sexual assault, and stalking. Her work includes participation in many boards and commissions both nationally and locally.

Grace has been involved in various projects that involve groundbreaking work not only for New Hampshire but also for the country. Because of her leadership in 1997, the coalition, in conjunction with the State, was selected by the Family Violence Prevention Fund to establish a partnership to improve the health care system's response to domestic violence, called the National Health Initiative. New Hampshire was one of only 10 States in the Nation to participate in this program and the only State in New England. To this day, Grace continues to work with the medical community to educate physicians on the impact of trauma from domestic and sexual violence.

In 1999, the coalition successfully applied to be one of six sites in the country selected for what is known as the Greenbook Project. Grafton County was selected and funded as a national demonstration site for improving collaboration between domestic violence organizations, courts, and child protective services in families where there is a co-occurrence of domestic violence, child abuse, and neglect. New Hampshire was the only site selected in the eastern United States. This project has led to more collaborative efforts not only in Grafton County but across New Hampshire.

Grace was highly involved in the creation of one of the first AmeriCorps programs in the State. Named the AmeriCorps Victim Assistance Program, it was a "first in the Nation" model that she started with representatives from the New Hampshire Department of Justice and the State's court system, and is now in its 11th year. The program recruits and trains members to assist victims of domestic violence, sexual violence, and stalking at crisis centers, police departments, prosecutors' offices, the New Hampshire Department of Justice, and on college and university campuses throughout the State.

As Grace retires, I commend her efforts and congratulate her for all of the accomplishments of the New Hampshire Coalition Against Domestic and Sexual Violence. I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing her 30 years of service on behalf of the people of New Hampshire.●

MENDOTA HIGH SCHOOL CHESS TEAM

● Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating the Mendota High School chess team on winning the 2011 CalChess Premier Division State Championship in Santa Clara this April. The Mendota High School chess team worked tirelessly to become State champions and a source of great joy and pride to the people of Mendota and Fresno County.

Mendota High School chess team coach, Vanness French, has been working with most of the members of the championship chess team since they were in the third grade. It was Coach French who gave the team its unique nickname, Knucklehead, a reference to the long-lasting cylinders on vintage Harley-Davidson motorcycles. The 2011 Mendota chess team certainly lived up to their expectations, never giving up as they defeated several higher rated opponents en route to claiming the State title.

The members of the 2011 Mendota High School CalChess Premier Division State Championship include: Eduardo Alonso, Edwin Brioso, Joel Montalvo, Chrispen Reyes, Milton Arroyo, Luis Castillo, Julian Estrada, Lizzy Gonzales, Charle Ledesua, Sergio Mayares, Kevin Romero, Jessi Mendez, and Felipe Beltran.

It is with great pride that I congratulate these students on an extraordinary accomplishment, and the hard work, dedication, and perseverance they showed in achieving it.

As the Mendota chess team celebrates the 2011 CalChess Premier Division State Championship, I commend them a remarkable and memorable year and wish them continued success in their future endeavors.●

TRIBUTE TO MR. AND MRS. JOHN BEARDEN WILLIAMS

● Mr. VITTER. Mr. President, I wish to acknowledge two very special people who have reached a significant milestone in their lives, Mr. and Mrs. John Bearden Williams. This week, Mr. Williams and his bride, Gretchen Schilde Williams, celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary.

John and Gretchen's marriage has been very blessed. They were married on June 6, 1971, in Baton Rouge, LA, at the First Baptist Church. Throughout their marriage they have maintained a strong partnership, working together in ministry and giving of themselves to their church and community.

They have been longtime supporters of the Louisiana School for the Deaf, and Mr. Williams and his children were all featured in the Louisiana Bar Journal for their many years of service to the Baton Rouge legal community. During Mr. Williams' more than 40 years of legal practice, Mrs. Williams was a constant and committed advocate, organizer, and friend. Their unbreakable alliance has served to encourage, uplift, and bring out the best in one another, and the longevity of their union shows their deep and abiding love and commitment to each other, growing stronger throughout their journey. They have raised three children, Stephen Schilde, John Richard, and Cynthia Williams Dashiell, and are now the proud grandparents of five grandchildren—Haley, Jack, Mary Gretchen, Martin, and Scott.

I am pleased to recognize and honor John Williams and Gretchen Williams as they celebrate 50 years of marriage, and I hope their family continues to be blessed.●

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. WYDEN (for himself, Mr. CRAPO, Mr. RISCH, and Mr. MERKLEY):

S. 1149. A bill to expand geothermal production, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, today Sen. CRAPO, Sen. RISCH, Sen. MERKLEY, and I are introducing the Geothermal Production Expansion Act of 2011. The bill is aimed at making improvements to the Geothermal Steam Act and is very similar to legislation introduced in the 111th Congress as S. 3993.

Both bills contain identical provisions to allow the Secretary of the Interior to lease a limited amount of public land adjacent to existing geothermal property at fair market value.

The reason for this change is to allow the rapid expansion of already identified geothermal resources without the additional delays of competitive leasing and without opening up those adjacent properties to speculative bidders who have no interest in actually developing the resource, only in extracting as much money as they can from the existing geothermal lease holder. Current lease holders are understandably reluctant to nominate adjacent lands to proven resources for competitive leasing because doing so would immediately signal the value of those adjacent properties. As a result, existing geothermal developers will likely not realize the full potential of the geothermal energy resources that they have spent millions of dollars exploring, proving, and developing without these changes. And, the Treasury will not realize the economic value of those adjacent parcels, which go unleased and undeveloped as a result. For these reasons, the bill has the strong support of the Geothermal Energy Association.

I want to emphasize that this bill is not a giveaway. The amount of land that can be leased non-competitively is limited to less than 640 acres per lease. It can only be leased where there are already proven resources and thus more likely than not to increase overall Federal royalties paid to the Treasury as the adjacent parcels are incorporated into the developer's geothermal energy project. Third, the bidder must pay fair market value for the lease as determined by the Interior Department. Finally, this bill contains an additional provision, which was not included in the prior version, which will significantly increase the annual rental payments for the newly acquired adjacent land in order to ensure that the bill comes as close as possible to full economic recovery for the taxpayers.

Current law sets two different annual rental payment levels for geothermal leases. These are amounts that the lease-holder pays per year for every acre held in lease. The rental rate for non-competitive leases is $1 per acre per year. The rate for competitive leases begins at $2 per acre for the first year and increases to $3 for the next 9 years. The sole difference between the bill introduced in the prior Congress and the bill being introduced today is that the version being introduced today treats the new, adjacent lease as a competitive lease for determining the annual rental even though it is being acquired as a non-competitive lease. This will have the clear effect of raising the annual rental payments on the newly acquired adjacent lands to the higher rate of $2 and then $3 per acre and increase revenue to the Treasury. This change underscores our intent, as sponsors of the bill, to ensure that the result of these changes in the Geothermal Steam Act is truly to increase geothermal energy production on Federal lands without any overall loss of revenue to the taxpayers from non-competitive award of these adjacent lands.

Geothermal energy is, by definition, a domestic renewable energy resource with enormous potential, but developers face high costs and economic risks of finding the right location to extract energy. These changes will help ensure that once those resources have been proven on Federal lands, they can be fully developed as quickly and efficiently as possible.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1149

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Geothermal Production Expansion Act of 2011".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) it is in the best interest of the United States to develop clean renewable geothermal energy;

(2) development of that energy should be promoted on appropriate Federal land;

(3) under the Energy Policy Act of 2005 (42 U.S.C. 15801 et seq.), the Bureau of Land Management is authorized to issue 3 different types of noncompetitive leases for production of geothermal energy on Federal land, including—

(A) noncompetitive geothermal leases to mining claim holders that have a valid operating plan;

(B) direct use leases; and

(C) leases on parcels that do not sell at a competitive auction;

(4) Federal geothermal energy leasing activity should be directed toward persons seeking to develop the land as opposed to persons seeking to speculate on geothermal resources and artificially raising the cost of legitimate geothermal energy development;

(5) developers of geothermal energy on Federal land that have invested substantial capital and made high risk investments should be allowed to secure a discovery of geothermal energy resources; and

(6) successful geothermal development on Federal land will provide increased revenue to the Federal Government, with the payment of production royalties over decades.

SEC. 3. NONCOMPETITIVE LEASING OF ADJOINING AREAS FOR DEVELOPMENT OF GEOTHERMAL RESOURCES.

Section 4(b) of the Geothermal Steam Act of 1970 (30 U.S.C. 1003(b)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(aa) 4 times the median amount paid per acre for all land leased under this Act during the preceding year; or

“(iii) QUALIFIED FEDERAL LAND.—The term ‘qualified Federal land’ means land that is otherwise available for leasing under this Act.

“(iv) QUALIFIED GEOTHERMAL PROFESSIONAL.—The term ‘qualified geothermal professional’ means an individual who is an engineer or geoscientist in good professional standing with at least 5 years of experience in geothermal exploration, development, or project assessment.

“(vi) VALID DISCOVERY.—The term ‘valid discovery’ means a discovery of a geothermal resource by a new or existing slim hole or production well, that exhibits downhole or flowing temperature measurements with indications of permeability that are sufficient to meet industry standards.

“(B) AUTHORITY.—An area of qualified Federal land that adjoins other land for which a qualified lessee holds a legal right to develop geothermal resources may be available for a noncompetitive lease under this section to the qualified lessee at the fair market value per acre, if—

“(i) the area of qualified Federal land—

“(I) consists of not less than 1 acre and not more than 640 acres; and “(II) is not already leased under this Act or nominated to be leased under subsection (a);

“(ii) the qualified lessee has not previously received a noncompetitive lease under this paragraph in connection with the valid discovery for which data has been submitted under clause (iii)(I); and

“(iii) sufficient geological and other technical data prepared by a qualified geothermal professional has been submitted by the qualified lessee to the applicable Federal land management agency that would lead individuals who are experienced in the subject matter to believe that—

“(I) there is a valid discovery of geothermal resources on the land for which the qualified lessee holds the legal right to develop geothermal resources; and “(II) that thermal feature extends into the adjoining areas.

“(C) DETERMINATION OF FAIR MARKET VALUE.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall—

“(I) publish a notice of any request to lease land under this paragraph;

“(II) determine fair market value for purposes of this paragraph in accordance with procedures for making those determinations that are established by regulations issued by the Secretary;

“(III) provide to a qualified lessee and publish, with an opportunity for public comment for a period of 30 days, any proposed determination under this subparagraph of the fair market value of an area that the qualified lessee seeks to lease under this paragraph; and

“(IV) provide to the qualified lessee and any adversely affected party the opportunity to appeal the final determination of fair market value in an administrative proceeding before the applicable Federal land management agency, in accordance with applicable law (including regulations).

By Mr. LEAHY (for himself, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. CARDIN, and Mr. FRANKEN):

S. 1151. A bill to prevent and mitigate identity theft, to ensure privacy, to provide notice of security breaches, and to enhance criminal penalties, law enforcement assistance, and other protections against security breaches, fraudulent access, and misuse of personally identifiable information; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, today, I am pleased to reintroduce the Personal Data Privacy and Security Act. The recent and troubling data breaches at Sony, Epsilon and Lockheed Martin on U.S. Government computers is clear evidence that developing a comprehensive national strategy to protect data privacy and cybersecurity is one of the most challenging and important issues facing our Nation. The Personal Data Privacy and Security Act will help to meet this challenge, by better protecting Americans from the growing threats of data breaches and identity theft. I thank Senators SCHUMER and CARDIN for cosponsoring this important privacy legislation.

When I first introduced this bill six years ago, I had high hopes of bringing urgently needed data privacy reforms to the American people. Although the Judiciary Committee favorably reported this bill three times—in 2005, 2007, and again in 2009—the legislation languished on the Senate calendar.

While the Congress has waited to act, the dangers to our privacy, economic prosperity and national security posed by data breaches have not gone away. According to the Privacy Rights Clearinghouse, more than 533 million records have been involved in data security breaches since 2005. Just last week, Google announced that the Gmail accounts for hundreds of its users, including senior U.S. Government officials, have been hacked in an apparent state-sponsored cyberattack. As The Washington Post editorial board recently observed, “[n]ow there is a need for legislative action. As the recent high-profile leaks of personal data at Google, Sony and the data-collecting company Epsilon suggest, this issue is a ticking bomb.”

In May, the Obama administration released several proposals to enhance cybersecurity, including a data breach proposal that adopts the carefully balanced framework of this bill. I am pleased that many of the sound privacy principles in this bill have been embraced by the President and his administration.

The Personal Data Privacy and Security Act requires that data brokers let consumers know what sensitive personal information they have about them, and to allow individuals to correct inaccurate information. The bill also requires that companies that have databases with sensitive personal information on Americans establish and implement data privacy and security programs.

The bill would also establish a single nationwide standard for data breach notification. The bill requires notice to consumers when their sensitive personal information has been compromised.

This bill also provides for tough criminal penalties for anyone who would intentionally and willfully conceal the fact that a data breach has occurred when the breach causes economic damage to consumers. The bill also includes the administration’s recent proposal to update the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act, so that attempted computer hacking and conspiracy to commit computer hacking offenses are subject to the same criminal penalties, as the underlying offense.

Finally, the bill addresses the important issue of the Government’s use of personal data by requiring that Federal agencies notify affected individuals when Government data breaches occur, and by placing privacy and security front and center when Federal agencies evaluate whether data brokers can be trusted with Government contracts that involve sensitive information about the American people.

Of course, no one has a monopoly on good ideas to solve the serious problems of identity theft and lax cybersecurity. But, this bill puts forth some meaningful solutions to this vexing problem.

I have drafted this bill after long and thoughtful consultation with many of the stakeholders on this issue, including the privacy, consumer protection and business communities. I have also consulted with the Departments of Justice and Homeland Security, and with the Federal Trade Commission. I have worked closely with other Senators, including Senators Feinstein and Schumer.

This is a comprehensive bill that not only deals with the need to provide Americans with notice when they have been victims of a data breach, but that also deals with the underlying problem of lax security and lack of accountability to help prevent data breaches from occurring in the first place. Enacting this comprehensive data privacy legislation remains one of my legislative priorities as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

This bill has always garnered strong bipartisan support. Protecting privacy rights is of critical importance to all of us, regardless of party or ideology. I hope that all Senators will support this measure to better protect Americans' privacy.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) databases of personally identifiable information are increasingly prime targets of hackers, identity thieves, rogue employees, and other criminals, including organized and sophisticated criminal operations;

(2) identity theft is a serious threat to the Nation's economic stability, homeland security, the development of e-commerce, and the privacy rights of Americans;

(3) over 9,300,000 individuals were victims of identity theft in America last year;

(4) security breaches are a serious threat to consumer confidence, homeland security, e-commerce, and economic stability;

(5) it is important for business entities that own, use, or license personally identifiable information to adopt reasonable procedures to ensure the security, privacy, and confidentiality of that personally identifiable information;

(6) individuals whose personal information has been compromised or who have been victims of identity theft should receive the necessary information and assistance to mitigate their damages and to restore the integrity of their personal information and identities;

(7) data brokers have assumed a significant role in providing identification, authentication, and screening services, and related data collection and analyses for commercial, non-profit, and government operations;

(8) data misuse and use of inaccurate data have the potential to cause serious or irreparable harm to an individual's livelihood, privacy, and liberty and undermine efficient and effective business and government operations;

(9) there is a need to ensure that data brokers conduct their operations in a manner that prioritizes fairness, transparency, accuracy, and respect for the privacy of consumers;

(10) government access to commercial data can potentially improve safety, law enforcement, and national security; and

(11) because government use of commercial data containing personal information potentially affects individual privacy, and law enforcement and national security operations, there is a need for Congress to exercise oversight over government use of commercial data.

Congress finds the following:

(1) A vibrant and growing small business sector is critical to the recovery of the economy of the United States.

(2) Regulations designed for application to large-scale entities have been applied uniformly to small businesses and other small entities, sometimes inhibiting the ability of small entities to create new jobs.

(3) Uniform Federal regulatory and reporting requirements in many instances have imposed on small businesses and other small entities unnecessary and disproportionately burdensome demands, including legal, accounting, and consulting costs, thereby threatening the viability of small entities and the ability of small entities to compete and create new jobs in a global marketplace.

(4) Since 1980, Federal agencies have been required to recognize and take account of the differences in the scale and resources of regulated entities, but in many instances have failed to do so.

(5) In 2009, there were nearly 70,000 pages in the Federal Register, and, according to research by the Office of Advocacy of the Small Business Administration, the annual cost of Federal regulations totals $1,750,000,000,000. Small firms bear a disproportionate burden, paying approximately 36 percent more per employee than larger firms in annual regulatory compliance costs.

(6) All agencies in the Federal Government should fully consider the costs, including indirect economic impacts and the potential for job loss, of proposed rules, periodically review existing regulations to determine their impact on small entities, and repeal regulations that are unnecessarily duplicative or have outlived their stated purpose.

(7) It is the intention of Congress to amend chapter 6 of title 5, United States Code, to ensure that all impacts, including foreseeable indirect effects, of proposed and final rules are considered by agencies during the rulemaking process and that the agencies assess a full range of alternatives that will limit adverse economic consequences, enhance economic benefits, and fully address potential job loss.

SEC. 3. INCLUDING INDIRECT ECONOMIC IMPACT IN SMALL ENTITY ANALYSES.

Section 601 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(9) the term ‘economic impact’ means, with respect to a proposed or final rule—

“(A) the economic effects on small entities directly regulated by the rule; and “(B) the reasonably foreseeable economic effects of the rule on small entities that—“(i) purchase products or services from, sell products or services to, or otherwise conduct business with entities directly regulated by the rule;

“(ii) are directly regulated by other governmental entities as a result of the rule; or

“(iii) are not directly regulated by the agency as a result of the rule but are otherwise subject to other agency regulations as a result of the rule.”.

TITLE _____—DEBIT INTERCHANGE FEE REFORM

SEC. 1. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the “Debit Interchange Fee Reform Act of 2011”.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) in response to the proposed debit interchange rule of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System mandated by section 1075 of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act, the Chairman of Board, the Comptroller of the Currency, the Chairperson of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Chairman of the National Credit Union Administration Board have publicly raised concerns about the impact of the proposed rule;

(2) while testifying before the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs of the Senate on February 17, 2011, the Chairman of the Board stated in response to questions about the small bank exemption to the interchange rule, “there is some risk that the exemption will not be effective and that the interchange fees available through smaller institutions will be reduced to the same extent we would see for larger banks”;

(3) the Acting Comptroller of the Currency, in comments to the Board, cited safety and soundness concerns and stated, “We believe the proposal takes an unnecessarily narrow approach to recovery of costs that would be allowable under the law and that are recognized and indisputably part of conducting a debit card business. This has long-term safety and soundness consequences for banks of all sizes.”;

(4) the Chairperson of the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation stated in comments to the Board regarding the proposed rule their concern that the small bank exemption would not work, stating, “We are concerned that these institutions may not actually receive the benefit of the interchange fee limit exemption explicitly provided by Congress, resulting in a loss of income for community banks and ultimately higher banking costs for their customers.”;

(5) the Chairman of the National Credit Union Administration Board, in comments to the Board, cited concern with making sure there are “meaningful exemptions for smaller card issuers”;

(6) all of the comments and concerns raised by the banking and credit union regulatory agencies cast serious questions about the practical implementation of section 1075 of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act, and further study and consideration are needed.

(E) Ways the agency or program could be less burdensome but still efficient in protecting the public.

(F) Whether reorganization, consolidation, abolishment, expansion, or transfer of agencies or programs would better enable the Federal Government to accomplish its missions and goals.

(G) The promptness and effectiveness of an agency in handling complaints and requests made under section 552 of title 5, United States Code (commonly referred to as the Freedom of Information Act).

On page 29, after line 20, insert the following:

TITLE II—DEBT INSTRUMENT TRANSPARENCY

SEC. 201. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the “Foreign-Held Debt Transparency and Threat Assessment Act”.

SEC. 202. DEFINITIONS.

In this title:

(1) APPROPRIATE CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES.—The term “appropriate congressional committees” means the following:

(A) The Committee on Armed Services, the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Committee on Finance, and the Committee on the Budget of the Senate.

(B) The Committee on Armed Services, the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the Committee on Ways and Means, and the Committee on the Budget of the House of Representatives.

(2) DEBT INSTRUMENTS OF THE UNITED STATES.—The term “debt instruments of the United States” means all bills, notes, and bonds issued or guaranteed by the United States or by an entity of the United States Government, including any Government-sponsored enterprise.

SEC. 203. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) On March 16, 2006, the United States Senate debated and then narrowly passed legislation, H. J. Res. 47, to increase the statutory limit on the public debt of the United States. In a statement published in the Congressional Record, then-Senator Barack Obama opposed the legislation and stated, “The fact that we are here today to debate raising America’s debt limit is a sign of leadership failure. It is a sign that the U.S. Government can’t pay its own bills. It is a sign that we now depend on ongoing financial assistance from foreign countries to finance our Government’s reckless fiscal policies.”. Then-Senator Obama went on to say that “Increasing America’s debt weakens us domestically and internationally. Leadership means that ‘the buck stops here’”. Instead, Washington is shifting the burden of bad choices today onto the backs of our children and grandchildren. America has a debt problem and a failure of leadership. Americans deserve better.”.

(2) On February 25, 2010, United States Secretary of State, Hillary Rodham Clinton, urged members of Congress to address the Federal budget deficit: “We have to address this deficit and the debt of the United States as a matter of national security, not only as a matter of economics. I do not like to be in a position where the United States is a debtor nation to the extent that we are.”. The Secretary went on to say that reliance on foreign creditors has hit the United States “ability to protect our security, to manage difficult problems and to show the leadership that we deserve.”.

(3) On February 16, 2011, Admiral Mike Mullen, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, testified before the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate: “Indeed, I believe that our debt is the greatest threat to our national security. If we as a country do not address our fiscal imbalances in the near-term, our national power will erode, and the costs to our ability to maintain and sustain influence could be great.”.

(4) The Department of the Treasury borrows from the private economy by selling securities, including Treasury bills, notes, and bonds, in order to finance the Federal budget deficit. This additional borrowing to finance the deficit adds to the Federal debt.

(5) The Federal debt stands at more than $14,344,000,000,000.

(6) According to a report issued by the Department of the Treasury on May 16, 2011, entitled “Major Foreign Holders of Treasury Securities”, foreign holdings of United States Treasury securities stood at more than $3,175,000,000,000 at the end of March 2011. The People’s Republic of China was the single largest holder with holdings of more than $1,144,000,000,000.

(7) Despite efforts by the Department of the Treasury to identify the nationality of the ultimate holders of United States securities, including United States Treasury securities, data pertaining to foreign holders of these securities may still fail to reflect the true nationality of the foreign entities involved. For example, another Department of the Treasury report, issued on February 28, 2011, entitled “Preliminary Report on Foreign Holdings of U.S. Securities At End-June 2010”, assigns $732,000,000,000 worth of United States securities to the Cayman Islands, a British overseas territory with a population of only 55,000 people. The Cayman Islands is not itself a large investor in United States securities; rather, it is a major international financial center and is routinely used as a place to invest funds from elsewhere.

(8) On February 25, 2010, Simon Johnson, an economics professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and a former chief economist for the International Monetary Fund, testified before the U.S.-China Economic and Security Review Commission that United States Treasury data understate Chinese holdings of United States Government debt and “do not reveal the ultimate country of ownership when debt instruments are held through an intermediary in another jurisdiction.”. He stated that “a great deal” of the United Kingdom’s increase in United States Treasury securities last year “may be due to China placing offshore dollars in London-based banks”, which are then used to purchase United States Treasury securities.

(9) On February 25, 2010, Dr. Eswar Prasad, an economist at Cornell University, testified before the U.S.-China Economic and Security Review Commission that the amount of United States debt held by the People’s Republic of China is much higher than United States Treasury data indicate. In his revised testimony, Dr. Prasad went on to explain that China is probably currently holding more than $1,300,000,000,000 in United States Treasury securities.

(10) According to a February 3, 2009, report by the Heritage Foundation, entitled “Chinese Foreign Investment: Insist on Transparency”, the State Administration of Foreign Exchange (SAFE) of the People’s Republic of China, the government body that purchases foreign securities, is the single largest global investor and the largest foreign investor in the United States.

(11) According to a September 2008 Council on Foreign Relations report entitled “Sovereign Wealth and Sovereign Power,” “. . . political might is often linked to financial might, and a debtor’s capacity to project military power hinges on the support of its creditors . . . The United States’ main sources of financing are not allies.”. The report goes on to argue that, “the United States’ current reliance on other governments for financing represents an underappreciated strategic vulnerability.”.

(12) In recent years, Chinese military officials have publicized the potential use of United States Treasury securities as a means of influencing United States policy and deterring specific United States actions. On February 8, 2010, retired People’s Liberation Army (PLA) Major General Luo Yuan, from the PLA Academy of Military Science, stated in an interview with state-controlled media that China could attack the United States “by oblique means and stealthy feints”, in retaliation for United States arms sales to Taiwan. He went on to say, “Our retaliation should not be restricted to merely military matters, and we should adopt a strategic package of counterpunches covering politics, military affairs, diplomacy and economics to treat both the symptoms and root cause of this disease. For example, we could sanction them using economic means, such as dumping some U.S. government bonds.”.

(13) The PLA has also referenced the concept of nonmilitary aspects of deterrence in written statements. A PLA textbook, “The Science of Military Strategy”, observes that there are various forms of deterrence, including economic and technological, all of which need to be developed and consciously strengthened in order to maximize effect. These forms will only work “with the determination and volition of employment of the force, and by dangling the word of deterrence over the rival’s head in case of necessity.”.

(14) According to a May 16, 2011, report by ABC News, a congressional delegation of 10 United States Senators visited China in April 2011, and met with Chinese government officials. The news report indicates that, during one meeting, the Senators were reprimanded by a Chinese official regarding the mounting United States Federal debt.

(15) A February 7, 2010, report by Defense News suggests that China’s extensive holdings of United States Government securities have already directly influenced United States national security policy. According to an unnamed Pentagon official, Obama Administration officials softened a draft of a key national security document in order to avoid “harsh words” that “might upset Chinese officials at a time when the United States and China are economically intertwined.”. The news report indicates that these officials “deleted several passages and softened others about China’s military buildup”. This critical document, the 2010 Quadrennial Defense Review, provides an assessment of long-term threats and challenges for the nation and is intended to guide military programs, plans, and budgets in the coming decades.

(16) The United States Government pays China a substantial amount of interest on China’s $1,144,000,000,000 in holdings of United States Government debt, and this enhances China’s ability to fund its own military programs.

(17) According to a March 4, 2011, report by Xinhua, the official press agency of the government of the People’s Republic of China, China plans to increase its 2011 military budget by 12.7 percent to 601,000,000,000 yuan (the equivalent of $91,500,000,000). This increase is in addition to China’s 2010 increase in its military budget of 7.5 percent.

(18) According to the Department of Defense’s (DoD) 2010 report entitled “Military and Security Developments Involving the People’s Republic of China,” the DoD estimates China’s actual total military-related spending for 2009 to be over $150,000,000,000.

SEC. 204. SENSE OF CONGRESS.

It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the growing Federal debt of the United States has the potential to jeopardize the national security and economic stability of the United States;

(2) the increasing dependence of the United States on foreign creditors has the potential to make the United States vulnerable to undue influence by certain foreign creditors in national security and economic policymaking;

(3) the People’s Republic of China is the largest foreign creditor of the United States, in terms of its overall holdings of debt instruments of the United States;

(4) the current level of transparency in the scope and extent of foreign holdings of debt instruments of the United States is inadequate and needs to be improved, particularly regarding the holdings of the People’s Republic of China;

(5) through the People’s Republic of China’s large holdings of debt instruments of the United States, China has become a super creditor of the United States;

(6) under certain circumstances, the holdings of the People’s Republic of China could give China a tool with which China can try to manipulate the domestic and foreign policymaking of the United States, including the United States relationship with Taiwan;

(7) under certain circumstances, if the People’s Republic of China were to be displeased with a given United States policy or action, China could attempt to destabilize the United States economy by rapidly divesting large portions of China’s holdings of debt instruments of the United States; and

(8) the People’s Republic of China’s expansive holdings of such debt instruments of the United States could potentially pose a direct threat to the United States economy and to United States national security. This potential threat is a significant issue that warrants further analysis and evaluation.

SEC. 205. QUARTERLY REPORT ON RISKS POSED BY FOREIGN HOLDINGS OF DEBT INSTRUMENTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

(a) QUARTERLY REPORT.—Not later than March 31, June 30, September 30, and December 31 of each year, the President shall submit to the appropriate congressional committees a report on the risks posed by foreign holdings of debt instruments of the United States, in both classified and unclassified form.

(b) MATTERS TO BE INCLUDED.—Each report submitted under this section shall include the following:

(1) The most recent data available on foreign holdings of debt instruments of the United States, which data shall not be older than the date that is 7 months preceding the date of the report.

(2) The country of domicile of all foreign creditors who hold debt instruments of the United States.

(3) The total amount of debt instruments of the United States that are held by the foreign creditors, broken out by the creditors’ country of domicile and by public, quasi-public, and private creditors.

(4) For each foreign country listed in paragraph (2)—

(A) an analysis of the country’s purpose in holding debt instruments of the United States and long-term intentions with regard to such debt instruments;

(B) an analysis of the current and foreseeable risks to the long-term national security and economic stability of the United States posed by each country’s holdings of debt instruments of the United States; and

(C) a specific determination of whether the level of risk identified under subparagraph (B) is acceptable or unacceptable.

(c) PUBLIC AVAILABILITY.—The President shall make each report required by subsection (a) available, in its unclassified form, to the public by posting it on the Internet in a conspicuous manner and location.

SEC. 206. ANNUAL REPORT ON RISKS POSED BY THE FEDERAL DEBT OF THE UNITED STATES.

JOB CREATION

Mr. MORAN. Mr. President, on Friday of last week, the U.S. Department of Labor released a dismal update on our Nation's economy. Not only did our Nation's unemployment rate rise to 9.1 percent, but the number of Americans looking for work increased to 14 million, and those who have been jobless for at least 6 months climbed 45.1 percent.

It is clear the current economic policies are not working in our favor. In fact, I suggest they are working against us, creating an environment of uncertainty and hampering job growth in America. When the message coming from Washington, DC, is more taxes, more regulation, and more intrusion in the free market system, it is no wonder businesses are not hiring additional workers.

Americans are looking for leadership to get our economy back on its feet so they can find a job and provide for their families. In a recent survey, 90 percent of Americans said the economy is in bad shape and, by a margin of 2 to 1, Americans said our economy is on the wrong track. I couldn't agree more. Changing the course of our economy will require Washington, DC, changing its course.

Instead of creating barriers to job growth, Congress and the Obama administration should be implementing policies that encourage job creation. History shows that sustainable economic growth starts with the private sector. So Congress and the administration have a responsibility to create an environment where businesses can flourish and start hiring again, and that starts by pursuing a series of pro-growth policies.

First, in my view, Congress must rein in government regulation and stop passing burdensome mandates that come at the expense of that job creation. As I tour manufacturing plants and other businesses in my home State of Kansas, owners often ask: What is the next thing coming from Washington that will put me out of business? Jobs in this country are undercut with each new government regulation because it drives up the cost of doing business, erodes our global competitiveness, and limits the access to credit that businesses need to grow. Rather than hiring new employees, businesses are spending their resources on complying with these burdensome regulations and costly mandates—from the EPA's effort to regulate carbon to the mandates imposed by the new health care law.

According to the Small Business Administration, the smallest businesses—those with less than 20 employees—spend 36 percent more per employee than larger firms to comply with Federal regulations. That is roughly $10,585 per employee to comply with all Federal regulations, and very small firms are burdened even more per employee.

Small business, as we know, is the backbone of the American economy. Those businesses employ half our private sector workers and have generated 65 percent of new jobs over the last 20 years. So it makes no sense to drive up their operating costs with additional government regulations because that leaves them with fewer resources to hire new workers.

Second, Congress can spur economic growth by replacing our convoluted and burdensome Tax Code with one that is fair, simple, and certain. When businesses know what to expect, they can better plan for future expenses and will invest in their companies, grow, and hire new workers.

Unfortunately, Congress is often too shortsighted when it comes to tax policy. A 1-year or 2-year extension of tax cuts does not give businesses the certainty they need to plan for that future. Employers have to make decisions about the future of their business today, and given the fact that their taxes will rise in the near future, they are reluctant to hire new workers or expand their business. If we are serious about creating jobs in this country, we have to give our country's job creators the ability to plan for the future and a Tax Code that encourages investment.

Third, Congress must open foreign markets for American manufactured goods and agricultural products. Across the country, thousands of Americans depend upon exports for jobs, including more than one-quarter of all manufacturing workers in Kansas. By increasing our Nation's exports, we will create jobs and opportunities for all Americans without raising taxes or increasing the Federal budget. We should be exporting our manufactured goods and agriculture products, not our jobs.

Unfortunately, trade agreements with Colombia, Panama, and South Korea, for example, have been stalled for 4 years, and each day that passes, we risk losing more of our market share to our competitors. During this delay, Colombia has moved forward on trade deals with Canada, Chile, the European Union, Brazil, and Argentina. On July 1, a pending agreement between the European Union and Korea will go into effect. We cannot afford to sit on the sidelines while other countries continue to move forward in their trading relationships with our trading partners.

Together, the trade agreements with Colombia, Panama, and South Korea are worth an estimated $13 billion in U.S. exports. The agreement with Korea alone is worth $11 billion and would create an estimated 70,000 new jobs for Americans.

It is past time for the President to send Congress implementing language for these trade agreements so we can open more markets for American goods and agricultural commodities. When American businesses are given the opportunity to compete on a level playing field for these markets, they will succeed and more jobs will be created here at home.

Fourth, the United States, to remain competitive in the global market, must develop a comprehensive energy policy that allows for ample energy supply that is both affordable and reliable. Rising gas prices and recent events in the Middle East have again demonstrated the importance of having access to a reliable energy supply. Higher energy prices are not only threatening our global competitiveness, they are also hampering our economic recovery. I don't know how we can expect our economy to recover when energy prices are what they are. But when employers have access to reliable energy supplies, they can spend their resources on hiring new workers rather than on those escalating energy costs.

In my view, no single form of energy can provide the answer. To meet our country's energy needs, we must develop traditional sources of oil, natural gas and coal, encourage the development of renewable energy sources such as biofuels, wind, solar, geothermal and hydropower and expand the use of nuclear energy, as well as encourage conservation.

A recent report from the Congressional Research Service found that our country's resources are far greater than those of Saudi Arabia, China, and Canada combined. In fact, our combined recoverable oil, natural gas, and coal supplies are the largest on the planet. Yet, in 2009, the administration canceled 77 oil and gas leases in Utah and last year suspended 61 leases in Montana. The administration has also restricted access to oil and gas exploration in the eastern Gulf of Mexico and off the Atlantic coast—although these two areas hold commercial oil reserves of 28 billion barrels and up to 142 trillion cubic feet of natural gas. More production of energy in the U.S. means more jobs in the U.S. and more U.S. workers at work and lower energy costs for businesses and their employees.

Finally, Congress must reduce government spending to bring about this economic growth. I think the debate on government spending is often seen as some philosophical discussion or a partisan political bickering opportunity here in Washington, DC. But the reality is out of control government borrowing and spending has very real consequences for the daily lives of Americans. Our failure to balance the budget will result in increased inflation, higher interest rates, fewer jobs, and a lower standard of living for every American. But this reality has not yet sunk in here in Washington, DC, despite several recent warnings.

At the end of April, Standard & Poor's, one of the world's big three credit rating agencies, downgraded our Nation's future financial outlook from "stable" to "negative." S&P said our country has "very large budget deficits and rising government indebtedness—and the path to addressing these is not clear."

Furthermore, just last week another credit rating agency, Moody's—if we needed another reminder—warned that our failure to reduce our growing deficit could prompt them to downgrade their outlook on our AAA rating to negative. Without a "credible agreement on substantial deficit reduction"—this is Moody's talking—this could happen as soon as next month. This would have a devastating impact on our already struggling economy.

Reducing our Nation's debt will require us to work together to craft a serious plan. President Obama's proposal to balance budgets in part by raising taxes on businesses, in my view, would only make our economic circumstances worse.

Washington does not have a revenue problem; it has a spending problem. It is time for us to work together and pass a responsible budget to reduce our deficit this year, next year, and far into the future. The plan should include significant spending reductions, a balanced budget amendment to restrict Washington's future ability to borrow money that would put us right back in the mess we are in today, and should address our long-term unfunded mandates.

As John Adams once quipped: "Facts are stubborn." And the facts tell us that Washington must change direction if we are to grow our economy and put people back to work. The failed economy we are experiencing and the financial collapse around the corner is the most expected economic crisis in our lifetime. We know what is going to happen if we do not act, and it would be immoral for us to look the other way or to kick the can down the road because the politics of these issues are too difficult to deal with.

Americans deserve leadership here in our Nation's Capital to confront these challenges and not to push them off to the next generation of Americans. If we do so, if we confront these issues correctly in a responsible way, businesses will succeed, profits will be made, employees will be hired, and Americans will again be able to live and pursue the American dream.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak in morning business for up to 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

QUALIFIED RESIDENTIAL MORTGAGES

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Kansas. I had no idea when I came to make my remarks that they would be so in keeping with a part of his speech with regard to regulation and what the regulatory regimen of the current administration is doing to economic improvement and economic development in the United States of America.

I rise for a moment to talk about the Dodd-Frank legislation, to talk about the qualified residential mortgage provision, and to talk about the six regulators of financial services and a recent decision they made.

Shaun Donovan, Ben Bernanke, Sheila Bair, Edward Demarco, John Walsh, and Mary Schapiro were challenged with carrying out and writing the rules of intent for Dodd-Frank. When they published, a few weeks ago—about 2 months ago now—the proposed rule on qualified residential mortgages, it created a firestorm and created a number of speeches on the floor of the U.S. Senate. It also created a letter from 39 Members of the U.S. Senate, which I ask unanimous consent be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,

Washington, DC, May 26, 2011.

Hon. SHAUN L.S. DONOVAN,

Secretary, Department of Housing & Urban Development, 7th Street, SW, Washington, DC.

Hon. BEN S. BERNANKE,

Chairman, Board of Governors of The Federal Reserve System, 20th & Constitution Avenue, NW, Washington, DC.

Hon. SHEILA C. BAIR,

Chairman, Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., 17th Street, NW, Washington, DC.

Hon. MARY L. SCHAPIRO,

Chairman, Securities and Exchange Commission, F Street, NE, Washington, DC.

JOHN G. WALSH,

Acting Comptroller, Office of the Comptroller Of the Currency, E Street, SW, Washington, DC.

EDWARD J. DEMARCO,

Acting Director, Federal Housing Agency, G Street, NW, Washington, DC.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: We the undersigned intended to create a broad exemption from risk retention for historically safe mortgage products when we included the Qualified Residential Mortgage (QRM) exemption in the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act.

The statute requires the QRM definition to be based on "underwriting and product features that historical loan performance data indicate result in a lower risk of default," and provides clear guidance on the types of factors that can be used, including:

Documentation of income and assets;
Debt-to-income ratios and residual income standards;

Product features that mitigate payment shock;

Restrictions or prohibitions on non-traditional features like negative amortization, balloon payments, and prepayment penalties; and

Mortgage insurance on low down payment loans.

The proposed regulation goes beyond the intent and language of the statute by imposing unnecessarily tight down payment restrictions. These restrictions unduly narrow the QRM definition and would necessarily increase consumer costs and reduce access to affordable credit. Well underwritten loans, regardless of down payment, were not the cause of the mortgage crisis. The proposed regulation also establishes overly narrow debt to income guidelines that will preclude capable, creditworthy homebuyers from access to affordable housing finance.

The extensive additional requirements for QRMs in the proposed rule swing the pendulum too far and reduce the availability of affordable mortgage capital for otherwise qualified consumers. Many borrowers would simply be forced to pay much higher rates and fees for safe loans that nevertheless did not meet the exceedingly narrow QRM criteria. Sadly, in many cases, some creditworthy borrowers may not be able to get a mortgage at all.

Congress included the QRM to exempt safe, well-underwritten mortgages that have stood the test of time from the risk retention requirement. We urge you to follow our intent as you modify the proposed risk retention rule.

Sincerely,

Mr. ISAKSON. These 39 Senators wrote specifically to these regulators to express their concern with the possible effects of the proposed regulation that the regulators were proposing on qualified residential mortgages. I am pleased to say that a few days ago the six regulators extended the comment period from June 20 now to August 1. I have not talked to them, but I hope it is because they have been listening to speeches, they have been reading the comments, they have been seeing the testimony, and they understand, if left uncorrected, and if put in place, the current rule on qualified residential mortgages will be a second hit to what is already a very fragile U.S. housing market.

Just last week, the reports for the most recent month in terms of residential home sales saw the beginning of a second dip in residential housing. This morning the Wall Street Journal reported 40 percent of the homes in America that contain a second mortgage or an equity line of credit are now under water—40 percent.

One of the reasons they are is because prices are continuing to decline. One of the reasons prices are declining is the buyers are not there. It is a seller's market, we have too many foreclosures, and too many short sales.

The impact of the qualified residential mortgage amendment to Dodd-Frank was an amendment offered by Mrs. HAGAN, Ms. LANDRIEU, and myself—all with experience in housing and knowledge about the marketplace. We put it in because the original Dodd-Frank legislation said mortgage people making mortgages were going to have to hold risk retention of 5 percent in that mortgage, which basically would put most everybody in the mortgage business out of the mortgage business, except a handful of people. We put in the qualified residential mortgage amendment the specific parameters by which a mortgage could be exempt from risk retention, which were a downpayment of at least 20 percent or, if the downpayment was less than that, it had to carry private mortgage insurance to insure the effect of an 80 percent loan; second, qualified ratios that demonstrated the couple could pay back the mortgage under any reasonable assumption; third, the house had to appraise; fourth, the credit worthiness of the individual had to demonstrate they could pay for the mortgage.

Those were all the reasonable underwriting criteria that existed before the financial collapse of mid 2006–2007. The rule that was proposed by the six regulators, on which now they have extended the commentary time, completely avoided and made no mention of the private mortgage insurance requirement and said for a qualified residential mortgage to exempt risk retention, the buyer would have to put down at least 20 percent. Most buyers in America do not have at least 20 percent, and under current economic times and what has happened, they have a lot less than that.

But for years—and I was in the housing business for 33 years—the 90 and 95 percent conventional loans made in this country were the backbone of the loans that helped support the housing market, and those loans required a private mortgage insurance policy on any amount of loan exceeding 80 percent, up to 95 percent. We need the ultimate rule coming back from these regulators, by August 1, to contain that provision so as to exempt from risk retention any mortgage that meets the underwriting criteria, including private mortgage insurance on any amount above 80 percent, and up to 95 percent.

If we do not do it, I want to tell you what will be the outcome, and it is without question. You will remember, Mr. President, when we got into trouble in housing it was because we directed Freddie and Fannie to buy affordable housing loans, which became a consumer of subprime packages that were generated on Wall Street. Subprime packages were loans that had high coupon rates, and they were made to risky borrowers. They were intended to get more people into housing, but they became an abused process.

Because we directed Freddie and Fannie to buy that type of paper, it created a demand for that type of paper, which Wall Street fulfilled. So, in other words, you had a premium pricing on the coupon, which made the security attractive, but the risk was greater because the loans were to people with less good credit.

We have now gone the other way. The pendulum has swung 180 degrees the other way. With the pending rule being circulated, upon which this commentary time has been extended, if it goes into place, you will create 90 and 95 percent loans being priced just like loans that were subprime priced because very few people will make those loans—only a few large lenders. They will price the interest rate on those loans high because of scarcity. In other words, a borrower borrowing 95 percent or 90 percent with private mortgage insurance will end up paying a premium—a premium in interest rate or discount points—in order to get that loan because there will not be a wide distribution or availability of that type of conventional financing.

The unintended consequence of the rule being proposed—which we, fortunately, have an extension on comment time—would create another ability for lenders with the capacity of risk retention to price a loan at such a rate that it is too high for the average consumer.

The other thing it is going to do is a lot of consumers who cannot get a qualified residential mortgage of 90 or 95 percent will be out of the housing market.

What is the result of that? The result of that is an extension of what the most recent figures demonstrated: lower demand, declining housing prices, and a protracting continuance of the worst housing recession in the history of the United States of America.

So I come to the floor today, first of all, to say thank you to the six regulators for extending the comment period; second, to urge my colleagues to urge the lending institutions, the real estate industry, the consumer interest groups, the housing advocacy groups, to have their input with these regulators on the proposed qualified residential mortgage rule, because if left unamended—as it currently is proposed by the regulators—it will make housing less affordable in America; the access to conventional credit less available in America; it will decline the demand that exists already, which is historically too low; it will protract the continuing decline of housing values in America; and it will cause our economy to continue to slide in an even deeper, deeper depression.

It is critically important what the Senator from Kansas said be recognized: Be sure when you pass a regulation that the unintended consequence does not cause a bigger problem than the problem you are trying to correct.

I admire our regulators. I appreciate the hard job we have given them. I appreciate the fact they have extended the comment time. I hope now they will also listen to the comments being made, come back, and make a qualified residential mortgage rule that includes the provision for private mortgage insurance on loans in excess of 80 percent and no more than 95 percent.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

MEMORIAL DAY 2011 SPEECH BY ASHLEY SZATALA

HON. MARCY KAPTUR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, June 7, 2011

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to place in the RECORD the Memorial Day address offered by a rising star in our district in Ohio. Ashley Szatala, a student at Sandusky St. Mary's High School, presented her remarks during the Memorial Day 2011 opening ceremony in Sandusky. The following is Ashley's Memorial Day 2011 speech and the ceremony program.

Over the last few weeks, hundreds of volunteers have placed flags at the graves of our Nation's soldiers. Many local communities lined their streets with flags in honor of Memorial Day. Hundreds of you this morning gathered at the roadside waving a small American Flag as parade participants passed by. The flag goes wherever our leaders go. It has gone before soldiers in battles and is draped atop the casket of fallen heroes. For over 200 years the American flag has been the symbol of our Nation's strength and our unity. The Stars and Stripes—as we affectionately refer to it—stands for the ideals we hold true—liberty, equality, and freedom. Its history tells the story of perseverance by our Nation's veterans as they fought in defense of our liberty.

The most poignant moment in our Nation's history was made on January 1, 1776. Before laying siege against the British army, General of the Continental Army, George Washington, commanded that the Grand Union Flag be raised. Since that historic raising of our Nation's flag it has been a constant companion to our troops in times of war and peace. On June 14, 1777, the U.S. Congress proposed the "Flag Act," which introduced the American Flag as a prominent symbol of our nation. The original flag was decorated with 13 red and white stripes, and adorned with 13 stars amidst a blue background at the top left corner of our flag. The number 13 represented the 13 original colonies. After a series of changes from 1777–1960 to the original design, the final look of the American flag consisted of 13 alternating red and white stripes, and 50 white stars surrounded by a blue background. The 50 stars represented the 50 United States.

Since its inception, the American flag inspired Francis Scott Key to compose our Nation's anthem, The Star Spangled Banner. Like many other American citizens of the day, Key worried that the American flag would not be flying over Fort McHenry during a battle in the war of 1812. Overcome with joy to see the flag of new America, he wrote the song that we hold dear to our hearts today. Since then, the American Flag has journeyed to foreign lands during the World Wars, Korea, Vietnam, Iraq, and Afghanistan wars. It has stood as a beacon of light as our brave men and women fought against oppression and tyranny. Today, the American Flag is one of the most revered and respected symbols in America. However, it is not just a piece of cloth, but a symbol of liberty and freedom. In fact, its colors of red, white, and blue have rich symbolism.

A review of that rich symbolism will help you understand why it is only fitting that an American flag stands beside each grave of our fallen heroes. The color red stands for the hardiness and valor. Our servicemen and women are hardy. They are strong in the face of danger. Their collective strength is not measured by how much muscle they have, but by how strong and resilient their heart is. They demonstrate valor as they defend liberty, justice, and freedom against the enemy. They demonstrate personal bravery and courage far beyond what the rest of us will ever be called upon to exhibit.

White in the American flag refers to purity. Our great country remains pure in its ideals. Those ideals of liberty, justice, equality, and freedom have held strong through the years and never wavered. Our veterans and active servicemen and women have rallied around these ideals and have fought and sacrificed everything for the sake of these ideals. These ideals continue to be gifted to every American citizen. Their sacrifice gave us all these gifts so today we owe them our sincere gratitude for such.

Last, the color blue symbolizes vigilance, perseverance, and justice. Vigilance is an enduring quality of our military men and women, and our veterans. Throughout the world, they have remained vigilant in their service of protecting the liberty and freedom of American citizens. Perseverance means one never gives up. How true of our service men and women. Despite the terrible conditions of war, they never gave up on the ideals for which they were fighting for. They fought to keep America free and safe for generations of American citizens. Without their vigilance and perseverance, America would not be the great country it is today. Each day, school children recite the words, "With liberty and justice for all," when they say the Pledge of Allegiance. What this means is that America upholds the ideals of pursuit of life, liberty, and happiness. Anything that threatens these ideals is perceived as a threat to justice. It's not us, the average citizen, who eliminates the threat, but our country's service men, women, and veterans who stand up and fight for justice for all.

So hold high the flag and its colors. Her story is one of freedom. Through the years, our military has rallied around her and fought and sacrificed so much. They have fought to keep us free. The flag unites us all under her majestic colors.

So, as we are gathered here today, take a look around you. The flowers that decorate the grave sites will one day wither and die. The engraving on the headstones will eventually fade. The sound of Taps will linger silently through these trees. But the one thing that will forever remain, year after year, is the American flag, waving valiantly over the graves of our fallen heroes. Thank you.

DEBIT CARD SWIPE FEES

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, this afternoon there will be a critical vote that will take place on the Senate floor. It is one of the most controversial, business-oriented votes that we have faced. Leading up to this vote has been one of the most heated debates and exchanges that many of us in the Senate have seen in our time. It relates to an issue that affects almost every American family, and certainly all American businesses, and the financial community. It is a basic question that needs to be resolved on the Senate floor.

My friend and colleague from Montana, Senator JON TESTER, is offering an amendment, which I oppose. I have the highest respect for JON. We have discussed this, and our friendship remains strong throughout this debate. We just see this differently. Whatever the outcome of the vote, I certainly am going to continue my strong friendship with JON and be a fan of what he brings to the Senate and what he does for the State of Montana.

Joining him in this amendment is Senator BOB CORKER of Tennessee. I have the same high regard for Senator

CORKER, and any remarks that I make today are no reflection on them at all. I think they are both honorable people who are standing tall for their point of view, with which I happen to disagree. But I want to make it clear that I think this is a historic vote, a threshold vote in terms of whether the Senate, the Congress, and the Government of the United States will step into a situation that has created a fundamental unfairness. And this is the unfairness.

When we use debit cards, or plastic, to pay for a transaction, there is a fee that is collected. It is a fee that is paid to banks and, of course, paid to the issuing credit card network. The merchant or retailer that accepts that plastic, that debit card, has no voice in determining what that fee will be, and it is invisible.

Just one floor below us in the Capitol is a carryout. I went there this morning to pick up a little breakfast, and there was a young lady—a Capitol Hill policewoman—in front of me. She took a package of chewing gum and put it on the counter and handed her debit card to the cashier. The chewing gum cost $1.20. The average fee paid by the merchant—in this case, the proprietor of the carryout—is 44 cents on that transaction, more than one-third of the cost of the pack of chewing gum. The owner of the carryout had no voice in that fee. It is a fee that has been imposed on that merchant by the credit card network that issued the debit card.

A year ago, we took up this issue and asked, Is it fair or reasonable? The reason I think we need to take a look at this is, in the United States of America the so-called swipe fee is dramatically greater than in virtually any other country in the world. The same networks, Visa and MasterCard, charge, on average, 1.14 percent on every transaction using a debit card. If one goes to the European Union, the average debit interchange fee is .2 percent, less than one-fifth of what is charged in the United States by the same credit card network. Then, of course, take a look at Canada, just north of the United States, where there is no—zero—interchange fee charged on debit card transactions.

Why is the United States, through its consumers, small businesses, and large retailers alike, paying so much more? These credit card networks, through their issuing banks, are charging this because they can. There is no restraint whatsoever—at least there wasn't until last year.

We had a debate on the floor of the Senate, and we asked—on behalf of consumers, small businesses, retailers, and merchants all across America—should we establish a reasonable fee for the use of a debit card? We voted, with 64 votes, to do that. The fee is to be established by the Federal Reserve.

Most everyone would concede two things. First, the Federal Reserve is not partisan. It is going to make this judgment based on the economics of the marketplace, in terms of what the fee should be. Second, if there is any bias at the Federal Reserve, it is not toward consumers. This is not a consumer protection agency. No one has ever called it that. It is an agency which, by and large, is more comfortable in the boardrooms of major banks. So we gave them this responsibility.

What the Federal Reserve came up with, after 5 or 6 months of investigation, was a startling discovery; and that was the interchange fee being charged on debit card transactions in the United States, on average, was 44 cents—that is what the 1.14 percent translates into, 44 cents a transaction—and the actual cost to the debit card network issuing banks was in the range of 12 cents.

What is being charged to consumers and small businesses all across America is more than three times the reasonable and proportional cost of the transaction. At that point, the Federal Reserve said: We are going to sit down as instructed by this law passed by Congress and signed by the President and come up with a reasonable interchange fee. They confessed—Chairman Bernanke and others said it was a challenge, and it is. But they said they were going to do it, and do it right, and they needed more time. Chairman Bernanke called me and said: I need an additional 6 to 8 weeks to do that. I said I was sorry to hear that.

They had more than 11,000 comments posted to the Federal Reserve about what this debit fee should be, what is a reasonable fee. They are about to announce, before the end of this month, what it is going to be. I don't know what their report will say. I suspect it will be somewhere between 12 cents and 44 cents, with many other provisos included. That is where we stand.

Under the law passed last year, this new debit card interchange fee rule would go into effect July 21. Well, needless to say, it has generated a lot of controversy, particularly among the card networks, Visa and MasterCard, and the issuing banks that issue these debit cards. They don't like this at all.

As Senator Dale Bumpers of Arkansas—who used to sit right back there—used to say: They hate this interchange fee regulation “like the devil hates holy water.” They have done everything in their power to stop the Federal Reserve from issuing a rule that would bring down this 44-cent charge on every swipe of our plastic debit cards. Of course, they want to do it before the Federal Reserve issues their rule.

Today on the Senate floor, at 2 o'clock this afternoon, the banks and credit card companies get their chance to stop the Federal Reserve from coming forward with this new approach to the interchange fees.

As you can imagine, it is a titanic struggle because of all the retailers and merchants in the United States. From Walmart, on down to the corner bodega in Manhattan, or the corner store in Chicago, they are all involved. When I get into the car that picks me up at O'Hare to take me to my apartment in Chicago, my driver says: We are pulling for you. Every time somebody gives us a debit card, we end up paying more and more because of it.

I think the reach of these charges may surprise a lot of people. Here is a letter that we received yesterday from Tom Gordy, president of the Armed Forces Marketing Council. He writes and says:

On behalf of the member companies of the Armed Forces Marketing Council, I want to offer our sincere appreciation for your efforts to curb the skyrocketing costs to retail business through debit card fees.

Our particular concern about debit card fees is the adverse impact the fees are having on the pocketbooks and the quality of life of military families through the military exchange systems.

As you are aware, the military exchanges provide a non-pay compensation benefit to military families and support military families' financial readiness by offering name brand products at an average savings of over 20 percent. Additionally, the profits generated by the military exchanges are given back to the military community through dividends that support quality of life programs on military bases, including childcare centers, movie theaters, gyms and swimming pools, to name a few.

Let's bring it back to the Senate floor now, and here is what he writes:

Currently, the three military exchange systems—Army-Air Force Exchange System, Navy Exchange Command and the Marine Corps Exchange—are having to pay well over $100 million per year combined in interchange fees and interchange fees are the fastest growing uncontrollable expense to the military exchange system.

As interchange fees continue to increase, the military exchange systems must either absorb the costs, thus reducing the dividends that support essential military quality of life programs, or they must pass the cost of the fees on to the military family by raising prices. Either way, military families lose because of interchange fees.

That is just one example, but an example that should hit close to home to us because it is an example that reflects on the quality of life of people we care for very much—military families—who sacrifice for this Nation. A system which is designed to help them is paying over $100 million a year to the issuing banks for the Visa and MasterCard debit fees. Is $100 million reasonable? If next year it is twice that, is that amount reasonable?

Most people would argue, if you believe in a free market system, you believe in two things: transparency, so people know what the rules of the game are—the actual prices and cost—and competition. The honest answer is there is no competition here. Visa and MasterCard literally dictate these fees that are collected. What choice does a merchant have? Could you stay in business today and not take plastic? I guess some people do, but not many. The reality is more and more people are using plastic to buy things as basic as a pack of chewing gum for $1.20, which I saw this morning.

That is what this debate comes down to. The question is whether we will let the Federal Reserve issue this rule, take a close look at it, watch its implementation, and then respond, if needed. I don't know if their rule will be excellent or need help. I am prepared to stay the course with it. If we need to address it in any aspect with further legislation, I want to do that.

I particularly want to address my friends—at least those friends I have left—in the banking community. I am not going to stand here in defense of Wall Street. I think they have had quite a bit of friendship and love thrown their way by this Congress over the last few years. I am going to say, though, when it comes to community banks and credit unions, I think they deserve an exemption. It was included in the law. If we need to provide any other reassurances after the rule is issued, I will be there. I believe I can speak for the merchants and retailers, that they will be there as well. They have never disputed this issue of the community banks and credit unions being treated differently than the big banks.

But I do want to make it clear what is going on here in terms of the biggest banks that issue these debit cards. There is $1.3 billion a month collected in debit card interchange fees—$1.3 billion—which is more than $15 billion a year. Three banks—Bank of America, Chase, and Wells Fargo—control 50 percent of the debit card market, and they will collect nearly $7 billion in fees this year off of these debit cards. As I mentioned, the merchants and retailers have no voice in this. They pay what they are told they have to pay and they collect it from consumers.

Jamie Dimon is a person I have known. He is the CEO of Chase Bank. I worked with him when he was in Chicago. I had many conversations with him when he moved back to New York. I respect him for his business acumen. But he has been particularly pointed in going after this regulation of interchange fees. He has called it idiotic, in letters to shareholders and his customers. Chase has written to all of their debit card customers across the United States and said this so-called Durbin amendment—incidentally, it isn't an amendment anymore, it is a law—will mean that Chase will have to raise fees on the people holding debit cards because they will collect less from debit card interchange fees.

That seems to make sense, doesn't it? If less revenue is coming in, they will have to make it up some way. But I want to call to the attention of those who are following this debate to this fact: The bonuses distributed by the banks on Wall Street last year amounted to $20.8 billion. If they lost every nickel in interchange fees on debit cards, it wouldn't even get close to the amount they paid out in bonuses to their executives.

So before Mr.—before the Chase Bank—I don't want to be personal about this—threatens its customers about increased fees and reduced benefits, let them be honest with their customers about the bonuses that are being paid. That bank—Chase—if I am not mistaken, had an increase in annual earnings of 48 percent this year. They are doing quite well, thank you.

And for the record, let me remind those who are following this debate that the taxpayers of America were asked to stand by these banks in one of their darkest hours when we faced this recession. Many of us believe it was brought on by some awful practices on Wall Street and among other banks, insurance companies, and financial institutions around the world. But in their darkest hour, when things were toughest, where did they turn for help? Not the good old free market system, but the Treasury of the United States of America. So in the end we gave—we gave—$25 billion to the Chase Bank. We gave $45 billion to Bank of America and $25 billion to Wells Fargo to help them through their time of need.

Oh, sure, they survived and they paid us back. But what was their gratitude? How was it reflected? It was reflected by these banks, after receiving taxpayer money to get them out of the hole they dug for themselves, turning around and awarding bonuses to their executives right and left. That is not an expression of gratitude where I come from. Now they come to us and say, we want you to continue this interchange fee subsidy, 50 percent of which goes to the three largest banks in the United States of America.

I think it is time for us to say no. I think it is time to stand for consumers and small businesses across America who have no voice, no power, and deserve our help in making this system fairer, more transparent, and more competitive.

The amendment before us is one I want to address specifically. Because instead of letting the Federal Reserve issue their rule at the end of this month—measuring whether its impact is as we had planned, responding, if needed, to changes—what the banking community and the credit card networks want to do is to kill this rule literally in the cradle before it has a chance to be issued, before it has a chance to be implemented. I think that is plain wrong.

Right now, I hear my colleagues who come to the floor offering this amendment—both Senator CORKER and Senator TESTER—saying this is a compromise. This is a compromise.

This is not a compromise. A compromise involves sides with differing views sitting down together and working out their differences. I wasn't invited to any meeting to come up with this so-called compromise. The merchants and retailers and businesses across America were not invited—not at all. There were no representatives of consumers in these meetings for this grand compromise. This was a compromise between the biggest banks, the medium-sized banks, and the small banks. So it is a bankers' compromise for bankers' benefit. That is what it comes down to.

In the last 2 days alone, letters opposing this amendment have been sent by consumer groups—military exchanges, as I mentioned, 11 colleges and university associations—because, incidentally, our kids at college bookstores, using debit cards, are actually paying more for their books because of these fees as well—308 national and State merchant trade associations and 6,500 small businesses. They are all opposing this so-called compromise amendment, though it isn't a compromise.

Secondly, this amendment is described as a 1-year delay of the interchange rulemaking. Actually, it is an open-ended delay. The bankers who wrote this very carefully crafted it. The amendment requires the Federal Reserve's rules to be rewritten in 1 year, but it doesn't set an effective date for the revised rules. There is no telling when, if ever, these rules will go into effect. This delay could be significant, and from the banks' point of view, the longer the delay, the better, because it is worth $1.3 billion a month for every month they can delay it. And how long would they like to delay it? Forever.

Then there is this idea of needing a study after the Federal Reserve put 12 months into reviewing this issue, considering thousands of comments to promulgate this rule. The amendment sets up a study of the interchange system that only takes into account the views of the banking regulators. Search the amendment—the Tester-Corker amendment—for one indication there will be anyone sitting in the room representing the consumers or small businesses of America for this study. They are not invited. Not welcome. Not part of the conversation. Is this another compromise—a compromise that just involves banking regulators sitting down to decide what is in the best interest of consumers? Would you want your fate left to their hands as a consumer? Not me.

The study, incidentally, is loaded—the so-called triggers in the study, if you take a look at them. If the bank regulators deem that any of the triggers are met, they have to throw out what the Federal Reserve has done and start over. Well, guess what, the triggers are written in a way that this is a foregone conclusion. These triggers will be met. As each trigger mirrors public statements the public regulators have already made about the Fed's draft rules, this is loaded. There is nothing objective or unbiased about this whatsoever.

The amendment essentially mandates a complete rewrite of the Federal rules by the banking regulators for the banking industry in favor of the banks.

Let me mention something else I think is outrageous about this. What the banks have said is, we don't want to measure the reasonable and proportional cost of a debit transaction to establish the fee we are going to impose. We want to include every variable and incremental cost we can consider. This amendment goes on for more than a page with all the possibilities.

The amendment provides the Fed must rewrite the rules under a very different standard than the law which currently exists. The new standard is one the big banks have been begging for. The Durbin amendment says the fee set by Visa and MasterCard, on behalf of the big issuing banks, has to be reasonable and proportional to the costs incurred that are “specific to a particular electronic debit transaction.” The Tester-Corker amendment would require the Fed to let Visa and MasterCard fix fee rates to cover bank costs that are not specific to any debit transaction. The Tester-Corker amendment requires the Fed to allow interchange fees to cover “all fixed and incremental costs associated with debit card transaction and program operations, including incentives.”

This is a truck-size loophole the banks are begging for, because they know they can get up to 44 cents and beyond if they can add everything in from the cost of an ATM machine to executive compensation and executive bonuses. So honestly, are we going to stand here and say we cannot protect small businesses across America, struggling to survive, from outrageous price-fixing by the credit card companies so we can reward the issuing banks with bonuses? Is that what this is about? If it is, it is a pretty stark choice.

This amendment is a big bank windfall. The amendment has been described as an effort to help small banks, but it would undoubtedly be a windfall for the Nation's largest banks. It would give them a free pass to continue their anticompetitive practices for at least another year, and then it would require the Fed to write rules in a way that would enable big banks to justify the fees they are charging today. It is a no-change amendment.

If you believe, as a Member of the Senate, the current system is fair to businesses across America and we shouldn't change it, then voting for this amendment will guarantee your position will be enshrined in law. This proposed amendment is a gift to the big banks that will keep on giving and deny swipe fee relief to small businesses and consumers who desperately need it.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD these three letters I have received from the Armed Forces Marketing Council, the American Council on Education, and Public Citizen U.S. PIRG.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ARMED FORCES MARKETING COUNCIL,
Manassas, VA, June 7, 2011.

Hon. RICHARD J. DURBIN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DURBIN: On behalf of the member companies of the Armed Forces Marketing Council, I want to offer our sincere appreciation for your efforts to curb the skyrocketing costs to retail business through debit card fees.

Our particular concern about debit card fees is the adverse impact the fees are having on the pocketbooks and the quality of life of military families through the military exchange systems.

As you are aware, the military exchanges provide a non-pay compensation benefit to military families and support military families' financial readiness by offering name brand products at an average savings of over 20%. Additionally, the profits generated by the military exchanges are given back to the military community through dividends that support quality of life programs on military bases, including childcare centers, movie theaters, gyms and swimming pools, to name a few.

Currently, the three military exchange systems—Army-Air Force Exchange System, Navy Exchange Command and the Marine Corps Exchange—are having to pay well over $100 million per year combined in interchange fees and interchange fees are the fastest growing uncontrollable expense to the military exchange systems.

As interchange fees continue to increase, the military exchange systems must either absorb the costs, thus reducing the dividends that support essential military quality of life programs, or they must pass the cost of the fees on to the military family by raising prices. Either way, military families lose because of interchange fees.

The debit card interchange fee restrictions that you authored will help save the military exchange systems tens of millions of dollars per year, reducing the adverse impact that interchange fees are having on the pocketbooks and quality of life of military families.

We are hopeful that you will be successful in maintaining the law that you authored to curb debit card interchange fees and preventing any delays in its implementation.

Sincerely,

TOM GORDY,
President.

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
AMERICAN COUNCIL ON EDUCATION,
Washington, DC, June 7, 2011.

U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR: I write on behalf of the higher education associations listed below to oppose the Tester Amendment, which would significantly delay regulatory implementation of the debit card swipe fee reforms enacted last year in the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act ("Dodd-Frank Act"). We reiterate our support for these needed reforms, which will provide real relief to students, their families and colleges and universities across the country, and urge that they be implemented in a timely manner consistent with the Dodd-Frank Act.

Debit card swipe fees are a hidden expense for students and families paying for college for which they receive no benefit. As a result of the Dodd-Frank Act and the Federal Reserve's proposed rule, we believe colleges and universities will see reduced debit card costs which they will be able to pass on to students through lower costs as well as increased resources for institutional grant aid and student services. In addition, implementing this reform will create an opportunity for institutions to offer discounts to students for payments made with checks and debit cards.

During this time of economic insecurity, steps like those undertaken in swipe fee reform will help students and their families manage the costs of college with increasingly strained budgets.

We urge the Senate to reject the Tester Amendment and stand with students and the colleges and universities that serve them by ensuring that these debit card swipe fee reforms be fully implemented in a timely manner.

Sincerely,

MOLLY CORBETT BROAD,
President.

ERATION OF STATE PIRGS,

Re Opposition to Tester, S. 575, To Delay
Swipe Fee Reform.

DEAR SENATOR: We, the undersigned consumer groups, write to reinforce our continued support for the Durbin amendment to reform debit card swipe fees that passed as part of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act of 2010. The Federal Reserve Board of Governors has conducted enough research and has adequate authority to issue a fair final rule in this matter without the delays that would be imposed by Senator Tester's proposal, S. 575, no matter how it might be modified for the floor.

All consumers, whether they pay with cash or plastic, pay more at the store and more at the pump due to the current non-transparent interchange fee system, which is tantamount to a wealth transfer from the poor to the rich. Recent Federal Reserve research has shown that lower-income cash consumers subsidize the rewards cards of more affluent customers. Yet, retail is a highly-competitive industry where cost savings are routinely passed along to consumers. There is no reason to expect that retailers, in a marketplace where numerous sellers routinely compare and change their prices on a daily basis, would fail to pass along the savings from the unfair anticompetitive interchange system. Yet, as the non-profit and non-partisan American Antitrust Institute said in a recent letter to Congress:

[The Durbin amendment] limits the amount of fees that can be charged through a price-fixing network regime and allows banks to charge unregulated fees if they simply compete on their prices rather than set them centrally. If the limits set by the Fed are low, that aids competition by giving a large incentive for banks to actually compete by lowering their fees. Banks with less than $10 billion in assets would not have to compete, however, because they are exempt. Certainly, banks with more than $10 billion in assets can compete in the free markets by setting their own prices rather than hiding behind the cartel process overseen by Visa or MasterCard. What the Fed is doing is to substitute competition for administered prices. (March 14, 2011)

As Senator Tester's legislation to delay implementation of the Durbin amendment and the final Federal Reserve regulations comes up for a vote on the Senate floor, we urge your opposition to it or other efforts to weaken or delay the Durbin amendment through Congressional action. Thank you for your consideration of our views. If you or any of your staff have any questions, please contact Ed Mierzwinski at U.S. PIRG (202-461-3821 or edm@pirg.org).

Sincerely,

PUBLIC CITIZEN,
U.S. PIRG.

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, the groups that stand behind me on this effort know what we are up against. When we take a look at the most powerful special interest groups in Washington, we have to put the banking industry near the top, if not on the top, of the ladder. Throughout my career I have tackled them on the floor. I can recall many years ago, brandnew to the Senate, when I said we ought to change the banking laws so we would put an end to the so-called subprime mortgages. I was in a debate with Phil Gramm of Texas, who said at that time that if the Durbin amendment passed, it would be the end of the subprime mortgage business. I lost by one vote. If I would have prevailed, history might have been a little different. The subprime mortgage mess created an economic downturn from which we still suffer.

I stood up as well when it came to this foreclosure crisis and said that at some point these banks have to be reasonable. You just can't take homes away from people, board them up, and watch them deteriorate into nothing. You have to give people a fighting chance to stay in their homes. I said at the end the bankruptcy court should have the last word on that. The banking industry, the credit unions, the community banks opposed me. Take a look across America today at the foreclosed homes, in Chicago, in Aurora, in Springfield, all across my State, and across this Nation. The outcome, years after I lost that battle, certainly does not speak to a stronger America because of these foreclosures. The banking industry beat me on that.

Last year, fighting for these small businesses, retailers, I stood up and said: Somebody has to step up here and argue that there ought to be fairness in the fees they charge to businesses and consumers across America. We rallied 64 Senators—a bipartisan group—in support of that.

The banks want a second run at this. They want to take this game into overtime. They want to come back today and count their friends here and hope they can come up with 60 in the hopes that if the big banks and credit card companies can win this battle, we will leave them alone, we will not ask hard questions about the interchange fees that are charged. I am asking my colleagues in the Senate not to give the banks this overtime, extra-time victory. Give the victory to consumers. They have precious few on the floor of the Senate. Stand up for small businesses that do create jobs across America, and give them a chance to create jobs in this country by not being overcharged by the credit card networks and the biggest banks in America.

How many of us have come to the floor and said small business is the key to economic recovery? If you believe it, if you mean it, vote against the Tester-Corker amendment. That amendment is a blow to small and large businesses alike, large retailers and merchants alike, all across America. They stand in support of my effort to have a reasonable interchange fee on debit card transactions and to make sure they have a fighting chance to be profitable, to expand their businesses, and to hire more employees. That would be good for economic recovery. A vote for the Tester-Corker amendment unfortunately would be a win for the banks at the expense of an economy that desperately needs our help and support today.

I yield the floor.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Republican leader is recognized.

Mr. McCONNELL. I am going to proceed on my leader time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has that right.

ENERGY POLICY

Mr. McCONNELL. Madam President, yesterday and the day before, I came to the floor and noted the many troubling signs of a persistently weak economy and how I believe the actions of Democrats here in Washington are seriously undermining the recovery Americans desperately want. I proposed some things that could be done about it right now.

The President says he wakes up every morning asking himself what he can do to create jobs and help businesses succeed. Let me offer a few suggestions. It is not that difficult, really. I am sure the job creators and the workers the President meets with are telling him the same thing they tell all of us every day. Most people think Washington is too intrusive, that it imposes too many job-stifling regulations and sends too many mixed signals today for anybody to plan for tomorrow. We know that many who would hire right now are actually holding back because they do not know what else to expect in terms of regulations, in terms of taxes, in terms of mandates, and in terms of fees. In fact, we just learned that a significant percentage of businesses plan to drop their employee health coverage—something the administration assured us repeatedly people did not have to fear. Unexpected jolts such as these are causing confusion and anxiety, and they are freezing job creators and entrepreneurs in place.

Beyond that, many Americans are also seriously concerned about a government in Washington that spends trillions more than it takes in and a national debt that this year will exceed our entire national economy. Many people are also understandably outraged by the fact that the party that occupies the White House and runs the Senate has not even taken the time to put together a budget or any other kind of plan to get our Nation's fiscal house in order. After all, if the government does not plan ahead, how can job creators? If the White House does not have a plan to pay down the debt or preserve entitlements, why should people have any confidence that something will be done?

None of this is news to the President or to the Democrats in Congress. The fact is, the President and Democrats in Congress know as well as I do what employers and workers need to prosper and to create prosperity and jobs. They just don't seem to want to do it, and that is the problem. To be blunt, people wonder whether the President is really focused on jobs when so many of his policies seem to be aimed at destroying them and where there is so much he can do right now to create tens of thousands of good American jobs.

Yesterday, I spoke about trade and how, even though the President admits that pending trade agreements with South Korea, Panama, and Colombia have the potential to create tens of thousands of new jobs and boost American businesses, he refuses to move on them in an apparent favor to his union allies.

This morning, I would like to focus on the two sides of the President's energy policy in which he publicly claims to support greater domestic production and the jobs that come with it even as he seems to do everything he can behind the scenes to block production and to kill energy-related jobs right here at home.

The President says he is a proponent of domestic energy production, but, let's be honest, he has not shown it. This should not surprise anyone. This is an administration, after all, that appointed an Energy Secretary who, a month after the President's election, said, "Somehow we need to figure out how to boost the price of gasoline to the levels in Europe." Since then, the administration's policies have helped us get there. Not only have gas prices skyrocketed, but the administration's policies are also hindering the creation of thousands of good private sector jobs that so many Americans desperately need. Let's look at just a couple.

Everyone knows that in the aftermath of the oilspill in the gulf last year, the President imposed a 6-month moratorium on new deepwater drilling. We can dispute the wisdom of a temporary ban for purposes of a safety and environmental review. What we cannot dispute is that the impact on jobs and the Nation's economy has been quite severe, nor can we deny that the White House has effectively continued the ban even after its time was up and the review was complete. It was only after the courts got involved and months of political pressure from both Democrats and Republicans that the administration reluctantly began issuing new permits months after the ban was supposedly lifted. And even as gas prices hover around $4 a gallon, permitting is still well below prespill levels and energy production in the gulf is expected to slow.

Senator VITTER tells us that the administration's anemic permitting in the gulf for domestic energy production threatens nearly 100,000 jobs every year in addition to the many thousands of jobs that could be lost every year in industries that are related to or are dependent on energy. Senator VITTER has also told us about one estimate suggesting that 23 wells per month are needed just to maintain current production levels in the shallow waters of the gulf and that even after the moratorium was supposedly lifted, the administration has averaged fewer than 2 per month.

As for deepwater drilling, the administration has issued a grand total of two new deepwater permits—just two. The other 13 have been for work that was already permitted prior to the moratorium.

The administration's lack of support for energy production in deep water has led to five rigs simply pulling up stakes over the past year and moving their tax dollars and their workers elsewhere in the world. This is just one of the ways the administration is holding back job creation in the energy industry. This is to say nothing of the administration's actions with respect to Alaska's Outer Continental Shelf, which, according to one estimate, could create an average of 54,700 new jobs annually for decades, adding billions in pay and tax revenue.

Let's not forget that the administration's impact would be even worse if it had its way and raised taxes on energy producers, which would have only served to strengthen foreign competitors, raise gas prices even more, put energy independence further out of reach, and kill more American jobs. By one estimate, the energy tax Democrats still want to impose on energy producers could cost 154,000 jobs and $68 billion in lost wages.

For 2½ years, Democrats in Washington have paid lipservice to the idea of job creation even as they have pursued an agenda that is radically opposed to it. We can see this when it comes to trade, as I indicated yesterday, and we can see it when it comes to energy, as I have discussed this morning. Unless Democrats change their priorities and their policies, the threats of a downgrade will not go away. The debt will not get any smaller and businesses will not create the kinds of jobs Americans need. The President can talk all he wants about the economy, but it is time he starts looking at the impact of his own policies on the economy.

We need to change course, and a good place to start is with trade and with energy. American businesses want to expand and want to hire. Here are two areas where we can help them do it right now.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. JOHANNIS. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 15 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE EPA

Mr. JOHANNIS. Madam President, I rise today to talk about something that is on the minds of our agricultural producers. In meetings in my home State, across Nebraska, it seems the first question is always going to be or the second question is always going to be something related to the EPA. Most of the time, the question goes like this: What is going on at the EPA? Why are they trying to put me out of business?

In response to this growing concern, which I am confident the EPA has heard, they have taken to the road with a good old-fashioned charm offensive. The problem is, what the EPA is selling publicly to farmers and ranchers—what they are trying to sell—just doesn't match up with reality. They say one thing on the road while the regulatory train just continues to barrel forward, right here in Washington. In fact, the EPA Administrator is touring the country, community after community, saying not to worry; there is no need for "... fear in rural areas that EPA is coming after you." Yet the regulations continue to come after our Nation's farmers, ranchers, and small businesses, and those regulations are coming fast and furious. Even the Regional Administrator with responsibility for Nebraska and Iowa and Kansas and Missouri has joined the charm offensive. In a recent speech to the Agricultural Business Council of Kansas City, he has said that he does not "see where this administration is doing anything new."

But, quite simply, the EPA's charming rhetoric does not match up with its rule-by-rule intent. If I might, let me illustrate what I mean. Let's talk about dust—not the stuff you find on your bookshelf but the stuff a truck kicks up or a tractor kicks up when it is going down a field or farm lane. Earlier this year a bipartisan group of 33 Senators wrote to the EPA. We were worried. We were worried that the EPA had plans to regulate farm dust. Don't get me wrong. Clean air is a good thing. We need clean air, but dust is also unavoidable in farm country. Farming without kicking up dust is like asking a carpenter to cut and frame a house without creating sawdust. Well, it just doesn't happen. The two things do not go together. Not to worry, says the EPA, message No. 1 in the charm offensive; the EPA does not have any plans to do anything as silly as regulating farm dust. In fact, on March 10, Administrator Jackson noted that EPA has, and I am quoting, "no plans to do so." He went on to explain:

EPA staff is conducting meetings to engage with and listen to farmers and ranchers well before we propose any rule.

My goodness, that sounds reasonable. Well, except that the response letter that the 33 Senators received from the EPA contained an entirely different story. That letter, written by Assistant Administrator Gina McCarthy, simply said that the source of the dust does not matter and that EPA cannot consider costs when it sets the standard.

Here is how she put it: National air quality standards "are not focused on any specific category of sources or any activity including activities related to agriculture or rural roads."

McCarthy further noted that "the Agency is prohibited from considering costs." The letter leaves my Nebraska producers and producers all across this great Nation wondering, what happened? What happened to the EPA Administrator saying she wasn't going to regulate farm dust? This letter sends the exact opposite message. The answer is there is a public relations effort, and then there is a whole separate effort called the charm offensive effort, and then there is regulatory reality.

Here are some more examples. On water quality, on April 20, the Des Moines Register headline blared message No. 2 of EPA's charm offensive: "EPA chief has no plans to regulate farm runoff."

Well, EPA was addressing another worry in the farm community that EPA would shift from the current State-based approach to a more heavy-handed "Federal Government knows best" approach. It will be our-way-or-the-highway Federal Government type approach.

So, again, after reading the headline, farmers and ranchers hoped that maybe the EPA was taking a turn for the more reasonable. But a March 16 letter from EPA to their regional offices once again tells a very different story. The letter lays out a very specific framework how EPA wants States to regulate runoff. While the headline says the EPA will not initiate regulation of farm runoff, in reality they are aggressively prodding States to do it for them.

If that weren't enough, the agency is also trying to expand their authority literally to every irrigation ditch, every low-lying area, and they even want to regulate your farm pond. The law is very clear that EPA does not have authority over these waters. After Congress refused to enact this expansion of their authority, the EPA decided, well, let's plow ahead anyway regardless of congressional intent. Does that sound familiar with this administration?

To make matters worse, they are not doing this through a full rulemaking process with those pesky public comments and such. Instead, the EPA sat down with the Corps of Engineers, the Department of Interior, and the U.S. Department of Agriculture, and issued a so-called guidance document. That happened in May. EPA claims this approach includes exemptions for agriculture, but the whole story is not told.

Instead, it says irrigated areas, stock tanks, and low-lying areas are "generally not waters of the U.S." Generally? What do you mean by generally? Well, that word "generally" produces a tremendous amount of uncertainty. It creates fear. It creates confusion and gives farmers and ranchers zero peace of mind. You see, they do not trust the EPA.

Further, the guidance shifts the burden of proving exemption from regulation to our producers. Instead of EPA or State regulators being forced to explain why on Earth agricultural producers should be subjected to such regulations, producers will now have to explain why it is ridiculous to regulate their stock tanks in irrigated areas under runoff regulations. This will result, of course, in increased permitting costs, paperwork, and other redtape, and it is far from farmer friendly.

Yet the FDA exemptions for agriculture do not end there. Let us not forget EPA's backdoor energy tax where EPA is promising farms and ranches an exemption. EPA is once again lulling farmers to complacency by sending this message: do not worry; we are not going to force you to buy permits. To quote the EPA Administrator, "EPA is proposing reducing greenhouse gas emissions in a responsible, careful manner and we have even exempted agricultural sources from regulation."

Producers, quite justifiably, heard the words "exempted agriculture" and may have thought: we are going to be OK here. The reality is far different and very definitely a course has been set that should concern every single farmer, rancher, small business person in this great Nation.

The American Farm Bureau put it best in testimony to the House Energy and Commerce Committee. I am quoting:

Any costs incurred by utilities, refiners, manufacturers to comply with the greenhouse gas regulatory requirements will be passed on to the consumers of these products including farmers and ranchers. As a result, our Nation's farmers and ranchers will have higher input costs—namely fuel and energy costs—to grow food and fiber and fuel for our Nation and the world.

So picture this: A Nebraska farmer gets the electric bill, calls up the power company and says, whoa, wait a minute here. EPA told me its climate change efforts were not going to target me. In fact, they said I was exempted. So why am I paying so much more?

Unfortunately, they are going to have the same conversation with the diesel supplier, their fertilizer retailer, and the local gas station where they fill up the pickup and truck.

The EPA promise of exemption will, unfortunately, meet the reality of dramatic increases in input costs. EPA's reassuring words about an exemption will turn out to be absolutely empty, misleading, and absolutely 100 percent unhelpful when the electricity and diesel bill come due. But the public relations effort and charm offensive marches on. It even includes an Executive order titled "Improving Regulation and Regulatory Review," issued by the President in January. Isn't that enticing?

The directive instructs each Federal agency to consider "how best to promote retrospective analysis of rules that may be outmoded, ineffective, insufficient or excessively burdensome."

According to the order, "our regulatory system must protect public health, welfare, safety and our environment while promoting economic growth, innovation, competitiveness and job creation."

My goodness, that is all of the right words. Once again, it sounded as though we are headed in the right direction. But then, in April, an EPA official stated that the Agency—this is remarkable—the Agency was unaffected by the President's Executive order because they do not propose rules where costs exceed the benefits. However, the same official admitted that the Agency does not consider direct job impacts in its economic analysis. Can anybody figure that out?

These two statements obviously conflict. EPA's actions in drafting several of these costly, excessive burdensome regulations fail to meet the goals of the Executive order issued by the President of the United States, but their public relations campaign speeds forward.

Back home in Nebraska, as in other States in this great country, we make agreements on a handshake, because we believe if you shake somebody's hand, you can trust them. That is the way it works. Unfortunately, within the bureaucratic walls of the EPA, that is not the case. Instead of spouting charming verbiage about the benefits of increased regulation, EPA should be looking for ways to work with farmers and ranchers and small businesses to find solutions to environmental challenges while creating jobs for Americans who are out of work.

After all, the men and women who depend on the land to feed their own families and to feed us are responsible stewards of the environment. Unfortunately, based on what we have seen over the past couple of years, EPA used agricultural producers as offenders, not partners. EPA's shift into campaign mode to appear farmer friendly is disingenuous. They rolled out this charm offensive to make it sound as though they were farmer friendly.

Let me wrap up by saying, why not just do it? Be job friendly, farmer friendly, agriculture friendly.

Thank you, Madam President. I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE. The Senator from Alabama.

THE ECONOMY

Mr. SESSIONS. Madam President, I appreciate my colleague's remarks about the agricultural community. I am certainly hearing that, and one of the very real factors in our inability to create jobs in America is the surging regulations that burden the private sector including the agricultural community. Mr. Bernanke, the Chairman of the Federal Reserve, was asked about that yesterday. He said no study had been done about it, talking about the banking regulation primarily. We need to do more about that and face the reality that that is so. Last week's economic numbers were not good. They were very troubling. We saw an increase in unemployment. We saw a decline in consumer confidence. We saw a decline in manufacturing in the Midwest—a key area of our country for manufacturing. A number of factors were noted during that period which were not good. I guess it is part of an accelerated decline in the stock market, which is down 5 percent, maybe 6 percent, after 5 consecutive weeks of decline, and the Senate has gone 770 days without passing a budget. It is a fundamental responsibility of this body, required by statute, that we pass a budget. The date is April 15—and April 1 to commence hearings in the Senate—and we have not met that responsibility. In fact, we haven't even had a markup in the Budget Committee to commence considering a budget. Our Democratic leader, Senator REID, the majority leader in the Senate, has stated it would be foolish to pass a budget. By that he means politically foolish for the Democrats because they are enjoying trying to attack the House Members who passed a responsible, long-term budget that changes the debt trajectory of America. Instead of trying to do the same thing, they just attack the House budget and produce nothing of their own.

The American people are rightly worried about our debt. They are worried about our economy. They are worried about overregulation. They are worried about the lack of jobs.

This week, Austan Goolsbee, the senior economic adviser to the President, announced he would be resigning his post this summer. His departure is just the latest in a trend of top economic advisers abandoning the administration over the course of the 2-plus years since the passage of the failed $820 billion stimulus package, every penny of which was borrowed. The idea was to send out money and somehow artificially create a stronger economy. It failed, and many predicted it would fail.

The President's first Director of the Office of Management and Budget, Peter Orszag, left in July of last year. Christina Romer, the President's first Chair of the Council of Economic Advisers, left last September. Larry Summers, the former president of Harvard, former Director of the National Economic Council for the President, left last December after less than 2 years.

As a result of the failed stimulus and other debt we have accrued, we are in much deeper debt, but Americans know it has not made them better off. In fact, increased debt has further eroded the economic confidence that is necessary for a spirited recovery and has made our situation worse. Many say we have to borrow money to spend it and that is how we get the economy on a sound footing. Thoughtful economists and others have said that this not so. I believe history has proven them to be correct; that borrowing to spend does not make us better off.

The last deficit before the President took office was $450 billion—far too high. The year before that, the deficit was $162 billion. This year, the deficit will be $1.5 trillion, the third consecutive trillion-dollar deficit. Yet the President and some on his economic team have promised that their spending program would keep unemployment from rising above 8 percent, but more than 2 years later unemployment now stands at 9.1 percent, after having increased again last week.

The economic numbers released Friday show this to be the most disappointing economic recovery in 70 years. Only 54,000 jobs were created in May, marking the worst jobs report in 8 months. The President asserts he is responsible for adding 2 million jobs since he took office. But the percentage of our working age population that is employed—and we have had an increase in the working age population—has declined to 58.4 percent. We have to go back to October of 1983 to find such a low number.

Nearly half the unemployed—45.1 percent—are now classified as long-term unemployed, meaning they have been unemployed for 27 weeks or more. While the official unemployment rate increased from 9 percent to 9.1 percent, adding those who are underemployed—meaning those who can't find full-time work or those who are so discouraged by the job market they have given up trying to find work—would boost the unemployment rate to 16.1 percent.

But perhaps most alarming of all, as pointed out in the June 4 lead editorial by Alan Abelson in Barrons, is that actual private sector employment today is now 2 percent below where it stood 10 years ago. Two percent fewer people are working today than were working 10 years ago.

Citing Philippa Dunne and Doug Henwood of the Liscio Report, Mr. Abelson notes:

Job losses over a 10-year period is unprecedented since the advent of something resembling reliable tallies began in 1890. So far, they point out somewhat grimly—

He is talking about Mr. Dunne and Mr. Henwood—we've regained just 1.8 million jobs lost in the Great Recession and its aftermath, or about one in five.

So the policies we are following are not working. We have to get this economy moving. We added only 54,000 jobs, a net decline in percentage in terms of employment. We have to get jobs created, and 54,000 is way below what we need to have to stay level. About 180,000 a month need to be added.

I would suggest that it is no wonder the President's top economic team is leaving the administration.

But rather than recognizing the need to change course, the President doubled down with the budget he submitted to Congress. He told the American people his budget would “not add to the debt” and that it would allow us to “live within our means.” But the Congressional Budget Office analyzed that budget and found otherwise—dramatically. In fact, CBO said that the budget the President submitted to this Congress in February would double our debt over the next 10 years.

Meanwhile, economists are warning that if we don't change our debt trajectory—and soon—our debt could stifle the very economic recovery that is already moving far too slowly.

This is the important point, and it goes right to the heart of the argument that we have to artificially stimulate this economy by borrowing money from our children so we can spend it today and that this is going to make us more healthy. A study by Carmen Reinhart and Ken Rogoff titled “Growth in a Time of Debt” in American Economy Review (2010) shows that economic growth is 1 percent lower, on average, in countries with gross debt above 90 percent of GDP—90 percent of their economy. It is 1 percent lower. If we want growth, we have to look at how big our debt is. If it gets over 90 percent of GDP, then we show an average of a 1-percent reduction in growth.

When asked about this study while testifying before the Budget Committee earlier this year, Treasury Secretary Geithner called the Reinhart and Rogoff study excellent, adding that “in some ways . . . it understates the risks.” In other words, it creates greater risks of economic and financial spasm that could put us back into a recession. Stephen Roach, chairman at Morgan Stanley and lecturer at Yale, was recently asked on CNBC—yesterday, I believe—about what is happening with the economy, why we see the disappointing results. This is what Mr. Roach, a professional economist and player in the world financial markets, said:

I come down on it as Ken Rogoff and Carmen Reinhart do, in their analysis of post-crisis economies. This is the way it is. When you have such a massive buildup of debt pre-crisis, when you hammer the consumers the way we did in this crisis, the economy is going to sputter.

America's debt stands now at 95 percent of GDP. It is set to exceed the entire economy by the end of this year, and the President's own Treasury Secretary and widely respected economists are saying this could have a negative impact on the economy and jobs. It could cause a 1-percent decrease in economic growth, according to Rogoff and Reinhart.

According to the Council of Economic Advisers, a 1-percent decrease in growth could cost about 1 million jobs—not 54,000 but 1 million. If we had less debt, we would be seeing more than the anemic 1.8-percent growth in the first quarter as we come out of this recession. We would have probably had 2.8 percent growth, if this study, which

Mr. Geithner considers to be excellent, is accurate. Certainly, debt pulls down economic growth. Common sense tells us so. Numerous experts agree this debt is dangerous. It threatens our fragile economic recovery. Growth is what we need for jobs and it brings in more tax revenue and helps us balance our budget.

But in response to the debt threat, what do we see? We got a budget from the President that would double the Nation's Federal debt in 10 years. When that budget was released it received immense criticism, so the President gave us a speech that suggested some changes. He called it a framework. Members of the Budget Committee wrote to the President and said: Well, put this in budget language. Send us a new budget then. If you are changing, if people didn't like your first one, let's see this one in detail. But they refused to do that. Recently, we voted on the President's budget in this Senate. It was brought up and voted on. Not one Senator, Republican or Democratic, voted for that budget. It was utterly rejected.

Meanwhile, our Democratic leadership in the Senate, which has the power to call the committee hearings that would commence a budget markup and eventually pass a budget, hasn't offered a budget this year. Indeed, they haven't passed a budget in the last 770 days. At least one was brought out of committee last year but never brought up by Senator REID on the floor to be voted on, so we didn't have a budget last year. This year, they didn't even bring the budget to committee to be marked up. The majority leader said it would be foolish for us to have a budget. It would be foolish to have a budget in a time of the largest deficit the Nation has ever incurred, which will occur this year—approximately $1.5 trillion in deficits. We bring in $2.2 trillion, and we are spending $3.7 trillion this year. Forty cents of every $1 we spend is borrowed, and we don't even have a budget. What do we do? The majority leader calls up the House budget, a responsible, historic alteration of the unacceptable debt path we are on, putting us on the right path.

You can argue about some of the things that are in it, fine. But it courageously and honestly changed the trajectory of America's debt path and was widely praised in that regard. The majority leader brought it up so he could vote it down and attack it, producing nothing on his own. So I brought up the President's budget. It got zero votes.

The failure of this body to produce a spending plan to tackle our Nation's debt only creates more uncertainty in the economy. Doubt and fear are driving away jobs, stifling growth and investment. That is a fact.

For nearly 3 years, the White House has been seduced by the vision of growth through artificial means, including trillions in fiscal stimulus spending and so-called investments. Indeed, in a time of dramatic fiscal irresponsibility, the budget the President submitted to us called for a 10-percent increase in the Department of Education, a 10-percent increase in the Department of Energy, a 10.5-percent increase in the State Department, and a 60-percent increase in rail and transportation spending. We do not have the money.

That budget reflected utter confusion and a detachment from reality.

Are our cities, are our counties, are our States increasing spending by 10.5 percent? Aren't most of them actually reducing spending? That is reality. That is what is happening in the rest of the world. The British reduced some of their spending recently—far more than we have. Some people there did not like it, and they complained that it was too difficult and too tough. But the International Monetary Fund, in a recent report, said: Stand to your guns. Get your debt under control. In the long run, the International Monetary Fund said, this is the way to build a strong economy, and we have been going in the other direction.

The Keynesian siren call to spend did not lead us to prosperity. We have restored only one-fifth of the jobs lost in the recession. As a percentage of our population fewer are working today than during the so-called worst period of this recession, and we are experiencing the weakest recovery in modern history. Unemployment is back up again, and the housing market is back down. Bad housing numbers came in last week also.

Our fast-rising debt and our unwillingness to adopt a credible budget plan—and we can do that—is shattering economic confidence and jeopardizing our future. But our Democratic leadership in this Senate refuses to put forward a budget plan to confront the debt that they have themselves increased so greatly.

We are told the President has not involved himself personally in discussions over the debt limit. That has been turned over to the Vice President. One report says he no longer receives daily economic briefings. What signals do these actions send to our out-of-work Americans, to struggling industries and businesses, and the anxious financial markets throughout the world?

Instead of stonewalling a budget, the Senate should be working together, Republicans and Democrats, to produce a budget that puts us on a sound path and makes our economy as robust and as dynamic as possible. That is so basic. Blocking a budget under these economic circumstances is simply unthinkable. There is no quick fix, no accounting gimmick, no political trick that will solve these problems. We have a potentially healthy, growing economy. Our American businesses have never been leaner or more efficient, as the Dallas Federal Reserve Governor, Mr. Fisher, said the other day on one of these interview programs. We have never had a more efficient, competitive business environment in America.

But in the long run—and that is what we must focus on—sound principles, common sense, spending restraint, less regulation, and more commitment to the free markets will, if allowed, lift us out of this malaise in which we find ourselves. To put America back to work, the Senate needs to get back to work.

I thank the Acting President pro tempore and yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TESTER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT REVITALIZATION ACT OF 2011

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of S. 782, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 782) to amend the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965 to reauthorize that Act, and for other purposes.

Pending:

Tester amendment No. 392, to improve the regulatory structure for electronic debit card transactions.

Durbin amendment No. 393 (to amendment No. 392), to address the time period for consideration of the smaller issuer exemption.

AMENDMENT NO. 392

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the time until 2 p.m. will be equally divided between the proponents and opponents of amendment No. 392 offered by the Senator from Montana, Mr. TESTER.

The Senator from Montana.

Mr. TESTER. Madam President, I will yield to the Senator from Rhode Island, and then I will make my statement.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. REED. Madam President, I thank the Senator from Montana for yielding and also for bringing this issue before the Senate. I am reluctantly opposing my dear friend but doing so on the principles that are inherent in what we have tried to accomplish in the Dodd-Frank legislation; that is, to provide for transparency in the pricing of financial products. With that as a starting point, I will begin.

One aspect I think we have to consider is not just this specific amendment but the growing attempt to undermine the ability to implement the reforms incorporated in the Dodd-Frank legislation, which are actually critical not just to protecting consumers but also to providing a foundation for an effective financial system in the United States, which is the foundation, I believe, of a growing and thriving economy.

So this debate is not just about interchange fees; it is about comprehensively dealing with the problems we saw manifest themselves in the financial crisis of 2008 and 2009, where market discipline collapsed, where some great institutions failed and some were on the verge of failure. If they had failed, then the ramifications would not be simply restricted to Wall Street; they would have been felt on Main Street, and we would be in a worse financial position than we are today.

But this specific amendment deals with the interchange fees or swipe fees. The first issue I think we have to recognize is these are hidden fees. They are charged in each transaction a consumer makes using a debit card. Every time you swipe the card—which serves as an electronic check—there is a fee. But the consumers do not see this fee. So basically you have a disguised price. If the price is disguised, then the consumer does not have a real indication of the cost. If he does not know the cost, then that affects the rational economic decisions we assume consumers are making every time they make an economic decision.

But at the end of the day, despite the fact that the consumer is unaware of these fees, he or she ends up paying them in higher prices for gas, for milk; in fact, they have been paying these higher prices for the privilege of using a debit card for years and years and years.

Debit cards are used more than checks today, more than credit cards to pay for everyday purchases. These secret fees—in a sense, you might even describe them as hidden taxes on consumers—add up to billions of dollars a month. The Durbin interchange provision of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street reform law sought to make these interchange fees transparent and public for the very first time. It requires that for transactions involving debit cards issued by banks with assets over $10 billion—the largest banks, not the community banks, not the credit unions but the largest banks—that these interchange fees set by a card network on behalf of its issuing banks must be reasonable and proportional to the amount it costs the issuer to conduct the transaction.

This is the law of the land. The Federal Reserve was given the responsibility of implementing the law through regulations, and they are on the verge of publishing those regulations.

Senator DURBIN proposed this provision because businesses such as, in my home State of Rhode Island, Cumberland Farms—the old convenience store chain that I grew up with and the quintessential small business, a family-owned business—pays almost as much in these hidden fees as it earns each year in profits. These fees roughly equal their profit.

Interchange fees are Cumberland Farms' second largest expense. It is not the milk. It is not the gasoline. It is not a lot of things. It is their second largest expense. For example, despite the fact that the total number of gallons of gasoline they have sold has remained flat, the interchange fees have increased 270 percent, from $13 million in 2003 to a projected $48 million this year. Again, the number of gallons of gasoline they have sold has remained flat, but their interchange fees have gone up almost 270 percent.

Cumberland Farms' CEO calls this increase a "runaway train." When gasoline was $2 per gallon, interchange fees were about 3 cents per gallon. Now that gas prices are about $4 per gallon, interchange fees have increased to 5 cents a gallon. So for the same 15-gallon fill-up, the hidden fees increased 63 percent. So the motorists, the local Rhode Islanders filling up at the local corner gas station, are paying for greater interchange fees, on top of the increase in the price of gasoline.

The actual debit card services have not changed. But because the price of gas increased, the fees almost doubled. That is a pretty good deal for Visa and MasterCard and the banks. Unfortunately, as these fees continue to increase, they increase gas prices, they prevent investment, and they preclude new hiring. Indeed, the convenience store industry reports that, overall, it pays more in these fees than it is earning in profits. That is overall across the board and across the country.

There is another example, a very local company, a very small business: Chocolate Delicacy in East Greenwich, RI. It pays a swipe fee on every piece of chocolate sold when paid by a debit or gift card, which amounts to 60 percent of their purchases. The owner, Marie Schaller, told me she feels like she has no choice but to pay the fee. "If I don't, I would lose over half of my sales." The growing swipe fees have meant a cutback in hiring for Marie.

At the Beehive Café, located in Bristol, RI, a cup of coffee costs $1.75. The swipe fee is 15 cents. Because card fees are hidden and there is no ability to negotiate them, owner Jennifer Cavallaro said:

Visa and MasterCard have inserted themselves into every single transaction that takes place—equating to a tax on commerce. This is not free enterprise; the small business person is trapped.

When consumers pay for some drinks with debit cards, 7–11 owners in Rhode Island told me they lose money on every transaction. So why don't supermarkets, drug stores, and other merchants negotiate to pay less? Well, they can't. The fees are set by Visa and MasterCard and the card networks. They have no bargaining power.

Most merchants in America are left with no choice but to accept the cards. They cannot play if they do not pay. In July 2010, we passed an interchange provision so the Federal Reserve could study the fees and decide whether they are reasonable. In fact, the Federal Reserve found that they were not reasonable nor proportional.

The Federal Reserve found that the average swipe fee was 44 cents for every purchase, but the processing costs were less than about 12 cents per purchase, giving them a 30-percent margin on their actual cost.

In December of last year, the Federal Reserve proposed rules to limit the fee to reasonable rates. The Federal Reserve's top economists are reviewing and considering over 11,000 comments on their current reasonable fee proposal.

Chairman Bernanke has said they are committed to issuing a final rule by July 21 of this year. I believe they should be given the chance to study all the comments and complete the rule. Only by letting them do their work instead of disrupting it are we going to be able to see if the new reasonable fee structure can open up this system and make these fees more reasonable and transparent.

Banks and card issuers that receive the fees have been vocal about their objections, preferring to keep the fees hidden and ever rising beyond the current 44 cents. With such a large profit margin in this line of business most of us can understand why. MasterCard said in its Annual Report to Shareholders:

We are devoting substantial management and financial resources to the defense of interchange fees.

Visa told its shareholders that the rules "may give retailers greater ability to route debit transactions onto competitive networks which can reduce the processing fees we currently earn."

So the credit card companies are very much aware that there could be a better competitive environment for merchants and consumers if this legislation goes through. That is what they told their shareholders.

Small banks, under $10 billion in assets, are exempt from the rules. A survey conducted by the American Banker found that an overwhelming majority believe the law actually helps small banks. Small banks will have a competitive advantage since their fees are not limited by the rule.

The United States is not alone in closely examining these fees. The European Union, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Israel, Spain, South Africa, and Switzerland already regulate swipe fees. In addition to the ever-increasing swipe fees merchants are forced to pay for, merchants also bear the brunt of the cost of fraud, contrary to some of the assertions the industry has made.

It is my understanding that after fraud claims, networks typically raise interchange fees of the company that has been subject to the fraud and often engage in litigation against merchants to recoup fraud losses. Of course, all of these costs—the merchant's costs and, I think, also the interchange costs—are passed on to consumers.

Here are some examples: When criminals installed scanners to obtain customer account information at Michael's, a craft store, it was only the latest theft of such consumer data. Community banks were quick to respond and immediately issued new cards and returned stolen money. However, despite paying millions in interchange fees in the recent past, Michael's may have to reimburse Visa and MasterCard and the banks for these replacement costs.

In another example, in December 2006, T.J.Maxx discovered that computer hackers had broken into their computer network and had stolen customer payment card data. In March of last year, a Federal judge sentenced one of the computer hackers responsible to 20 years in Federal prison.

Since 2006, T.J.Maxx has spent about $170 million in costs related to this incident, including nearly $65 million to Visa and MasterCard to compensate banks for the cost of the fraud.

This, of course, is in addition to continuing to pay their interchange fees. The same hacker who hacked T.J.Maxx also hacked Heartland Payment Systems. That attack cost Heartland over $140 million, the majority of which was paid to Visa and MasterCard and other banks to compensate for the cost of the fraud. Heartland Payment Systems had to pay the banks and Visa and MasterCard for the computer fraud committed.

So the consumer pays for the data breaches, the consumer pays for the debit card fraud, and the consumer pays more and more for interchange fees. I think any further delay in the rules to require reasonable swipe fees only harms small businesses and, in the end, the consumers.

The amendment before us provides for at least a 12-month delay in the rule, in addition to a 6-month study, and effectively a completely new version of the proposed rule. I think it is unreasonable. There is no reason for delay. The Federal Reserve has what Chairman Bernanke characterized as, in his words, plenty of information from over 11,000 comments to the Federal Reserve's December 2010 rule proposal.

In addition, the Federal Reserve has done an enormous amount of surveying of the industry, again in the words of Chairman Bernanke. I think the proposal before us provides the banks another way to avoid transparency in their operations.

The Federal Reserve should be allowed to finish their rules to establish a reasonable fee for debit card services. Then we can work with the banking regulators to make sure their rules do in fact work, and do in fact provide for a more transparent, competitive marketplace to the benefit of merchants and consumers.

Our market system only works well if merchants and consumers have the information they need to make informed choices, and that was what was at the heart of this provision in the Dodd-Frank Act. I believe that is what is at the heart of the Dodd-Frank proposal overall, which is to provide better information, more transparency, whether it is credit cards or debit cards or complicated derivatives, because armed with better information individual consumers and individual merchants can make better choices about economic decisions that will accrue to the benefit of all of us.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. TESTER. Madam President, well, I want to thank Senator REED for his comments. Senator REED is one of the leaders on the Banking Committee. I appreciate his comments.

I do want to set the record straight on a couple of things though. It is not a 12-month delay plus a 6-month study. It is a 6-month study and then implementation of the rules.

The Senator said Chairman Bernanke had plenty of information. The problem is he does not have much information from community banks and credit unions, and that is what this amendment is about.

The exemption that is in the amendment that we passed last year, called the Durbin amendment, every regulator at the Federal and State level has said they cannot make the exemption work because market forces will determine where the customers flow.

I am glad we are here to vote on the amendment that Senator CORKER and Senator HAGAN, Senator CRAPO, Senator BENNET, and I have worked so hard on. This afternoon we are finally going to have an opportunity to vote for an amendment that has been crafted in the right way.

Senators HAGAN and CRAPO and BENNET came to Senator CORKER and I about a month ago to share their interests in fixing the unintended consequences of that amendment that was passed in the Senate about a year ago. The amendment directed the Federal Reserve to issue regulations limiting the cost that banks can charge retailers when consumers use their debit cards to buy things. Based on the law, the Fed intends to limit those costs to 12 cents, even though the actual costs of these transactions may be higher.

The big Wall Street banks can handle that. They are not happy about it, but they can live with it. They have plenty of tools that will help them make up the difference. The Main Street community banks and credit unions are a different story. These small guys, who had nothing to do with the financial crisis, do not have that same flexibility the Wall Street banks have. These are the banks in Montana. These are the folks I want to make sure have a fair shake. So folks from both parties came together and said: How can I fix this to make this protect the local banks and credit unions since the original amendment does not?

Senator CORKER and I suggested initially a 2-year delay, a study, and then more legislating to fix any problems that were identified in the study. The Senators who are here today with me thought we could do better, and we could, and we did. After talking with our colleagues, we worked together to reduce the study period down to, as I said earlier, 6 months.

At that point the Fed and other regulators will decide if the rules can adequately prevent the small banks from getting hurt. I do not know what the study is going to find, and I do not think anybody knows. If the agencies find that the rules consider all costs, that consumers would not be harmed, and that the small issuer exemption—those that apply to credit unions and community banks—if that exemption will work, then the pending rules would move forward as passed. I would be the first person in line to tell Senator DURBIN that he was right about the two-tiered system.

But if the Fed and the other regulators find that the changes must be made to ensure that current rules do not include all costs or that small banks and credit unions and consumers might be harmed, then they will have to issue new rules within 6 months, and every 2 years the Fed would have to tell us in Congress whether these rules are still working for the small banks and credit unions.

That is all we are asking. Before the Fed's new rules get implemented, let's make sure we have them correct. Yesterday the good Senator from Illinois said this was not truly a compromise. But when you sit down with folks who think you are on the wrong track and you work together to find the middle ground, well, to me that is the definition of compromise.

Some other charges have been made about this amendment, and I would like to take a moment to discuss those. Some say it is a favor to the big banks. Well, it is not. In fact, this amendment corrects a very big problem that only affects the community banks and credit unions. The good Senator from Illinois said yesterday that he crafted this amendment with awareness that a major reduction in interchange fees would kill small banks and credit unions.

No one denies that small banks and credit unions would be deeply harmed if they are forced into a system where they can only charge 12 cents per transaction. No one denies that. This is why Senator DURBIN tried to establish a two-tiered system. Under his proposal, big banks, the Wall Street banks, could charge one rate, 12 cents per transaction.

The small banks, the community banks, credit unions, could continue to charge a percentage of a transaction, 44 cents on average. But there is a big flaw in the plan. The two-tiered system simply will not work. Let me repeat that. The two-tiered system simply will not work. I did not make that up. Here is what the Chairman of the Federal Reserve said:

It is possible that the merchants will reject the more expensive cards from smaller institutions, or because networks will not be willing to differentiate the interchange fee for issuers of different size. It is possible that the exemption will not be effective in the marketplace.

That was Ben Bernanke saying that. He went on to say that because the exemption will not be effective, small banks could be hurt or even fail. Here is what the head of the FDIC said:

The likelihood of this hurting community banks and requiring them to increase the fees that they charge for accounts is much greater than any tiny benefit that the retail customer may get.

Again, everyone agrees if the Fed's rules go into effect, the small banks and credit unions will suffer because the exemption simply will not work. So today we can stop and doublecheck to make sure that does not happen or we can just flip a coin and hope for the best and watch as more small banks and credit unions fail, reducing consumer choice and reducing banking options, especially as they currently exist in rural America.

These small banks and credit unions are the ones that make the loans to small businesses in rural America. They are in places where folks are still willing to put their money. They are the ones that folks in Montana still trust. They do not trust the big Wall Street banks. We probably will not lose too many banks in Washington, DC, or Chicago, IL, but we will in rural America. I do not want to see that happen.

Another good one that I have heard this week is the argument that the amendment will allow banks and credit unions to factor executive compensation into the cost of interchange fees.

It will not. In fact, the amendment specifically states that the Federal Reserve and other banking regulators must look at the costs associated with debit card transactions and program operations.

We also know how dangerous it is to set a price for a product without understanding all of the costs that go into that product.

Home Depot would never allow the Federal Government to set the price of garden hoses simply by looking at the cost of manufacturing a garden hose.

No, Home Depot charges us for the cost of manufacturing it, shipping it, keeping it in stock, having someone tell you what aisle it is in, and on and on.

Likewise, if we are going to be regulating debit interchange fees, we need to understand all of the costs associated with debit transactions and debit programs.

When we voted on this amendment last year, we thought we were voting to allow the Federal Reserve to consider all costs. However, the reality is that last year's interchange amendment limited the costs that could be included. Some fraud costs were allowed to be included but not others. Some technology costs were included but not others. If we are going to be regulating this market, we need to be fair about it.

So the amendment directs the Fed to determine what is "reasonable and proportional" but it gives the Fed the discretion to look at all of the costs associated with debit transactions.

That does not mean executive pay. That does not mean a special rewards program.

All costs will still need to be justified, and if they cannot be justified they will not be considered. The Fed has been very clear with me—no executive pay, no bells and whistles.

But the decisions about the cost of routing networks, the costs of fraud and other technical details are much better left to the Fed than decided by the U.S. Senate.

Finally, Madam President, some have said that this amendment hurts consumers. It does not.

As someone who voted against the Wall Street bailout, who wrote part of the credit card reform act, and who voted for the Wall Street reform bill, I can tell you that if this amendment was somehow bad for consumers, I would not offer it.

In fact, the amendment requires the regulators to certify that the Fed's rules address consumer concerns.

The current law does not require anyone to look at the impact of interchange fee regulation on consumers. They are out of the picture.

I am not aware of any specific plans by any retailers to lower prices or provide customer rebates if interchange fees are lowered. I know that one large big box store held an earnings call at the beginning of the year where a company executive called the proposal to lower interchange fees a "$35 million windfall."

If I were a shareholder, that would have sounded pretty good to me. But as a customer, it is not clear how I benefit.

I understand that there are some folks who wish the amendment could go further to include additional consumer-oriented agencies such as the Federal Trade Commission as agencies that will conduct the study.

I would be happy to work with those Senators to see how we best protect consumers in this process. But the only way to make that happen is to get this amendment adopted; otherwise, the Fed's rules go into effect on July 21 regardless of what any consumers think.

I am looking forward to today's debate because we have an opportunity to address the unintended consequences of the Durbin amendment. Make no mistake, those unintended consequences will be felt all over rural America—and not for the better.

For the folks who think the two-tiered system will work, there is not a regulator out there who will tell you that it will. Some folks will tell you the Durbin amendment has an exemption for community banks under $10 billion and for credit unions under $10 billion. If they think that will work, there is not a regulator out there who will tell you that they can implement it and it will work because the free market system will drive it to the lower price. That is the way it is.

I am saying, let's slow down a little bit and make sure we get it right.

If we are going to create regulations, we are doing it in a way that is fair and consistent with the intent. Let's not try to solve one problem and create three others.

And let's not take shots at the folks in my neck of the woods who were not part of the financial meltdown.

That's all I am asking, and I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

I yield the floor and ask unanimous consent that the time during the quorum calls until the vote be divided equally.

With that, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ENZI. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ENZI. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to speak as one of the opponents of the amendment.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. ENZI. Madam President, I rise today to express my strong opposition to the Tester-Corker amendment No. 392 to the Economic Development Revitalization Act.

The interchange fee debate is not a new one for the Senate. This is an old discussion with both sides—financial institutions and retailers—bringing their perspectives to the table.

I should note that I am a former small businessman and retailer. My wife and I owned and operated Enzi Shoes, a family retail shoestore in Wyoming and Montana, for over 25 years.

Retail stores have been clamoring for a change for years and have always felt ignored by the credit card and the big bank card companies. Stores with small-priced items are forced to allow a sale to be put on a debit or credit card. While some stores post signs requiring a minimum purchase, they are violating their service contract. If the fees were merely a percentage of the sale rather than a minimum amount or a percentage, whichever is larger, much of the argument would be gone. Without the percentage fees, small businesses have no leverage for negotiation.

Soon vending machines will allow you to kind of point your cell phone at the vending machine and click, and you will get your snack or your soda, and it will be billed to your debit card. But if the cost of making that purchase eats up the profits on the sale plus some money out of the vending machine owner's own pocket every time someone buys a soda or snack, will the machines be available? No. You can't be in business if you lose money on every sale.

Now, the vender has an option: They can charge as though every sale is a debit card sale and increase the cost of the item to cover whatever cost the debit card company puts on your purchase. What you have right now is this hidden fee that goes to a card company. The card company shares that fee with participating banks. Banks are now saying that if they lose that fee, they will have to charge their customers in other ways. I am told the average bank will have to make up about $150,000 in hidden fees they are now receiving that customers have been paying on their purchases and don't know about them. Are hidden fees fair? I fight them every chance I get.

According to the Wyoming Retail Federation, retail stores, hotels, restaurants, and small businesses in Wyoming consistently report that credit-debit card fees have tripled in the last 10 years. These fees have become a major cost, now surpassing other traditional costs of doing business. This is a small business issue and small businesses particularly because they do not have the leverage to do any negotiating. Incidentally, in this case, neither do the big companies. But the small businesses are paying two or three or four times, and sometimes more, for credit and debit charges.

When I recently traveled to Wyoming, a businessman compared his expenses in the last 5 years to explain the effects of interchange fees on his business. Gross sales between 2005 and 2010 were $5 million and $5.5 million a year. Percentage of sales made on credit-debit cards was 15 percent in 2005 and 37 percent in 2010. Sales in the last 5 years increased 10 percent and credit card fees increased over 100 percent. Credit and debit card fees as a percentage of total sales were three-tenths of 1 percent in 2005 and 1 percent in 2010. So the fees tripled in just 5 years. The retailer has no control over that. It is a monopoly. When the bank raises fees, if you know about it, you can change banks. The debit card business is like a monopoly, so when the debit card companies increase their fees, the only alternative is not to accept the cards as payment. But the cards have become a way of life, and the companies know it.

The profit margin of business is too narrow to sustain these increases. This is why defeating the Tester-Corker amendment means saving jobs in my home State of Wyoming and around the Nation. I believe increases in interchange fees are cutting into the resources that could be used to provide more jobs.

During the financial regulatory reform debate last year, Senator DURBIN offered an amendment that tasked the Federal Reserve—the Fed—with studying the actual cost of debit card interchange costs versus fees being charged. I voted in favor of the Durbin amendment, hoping it would create a dialog and a commonsense compromise on this issue. I was trying to force this dialog clear back in my shoe-selling days. Card companies didn't pay any attention. I have tried ever since becoming a Senator. I have been ignored.

The Durbin amendment is the only thing that has gotten the debit card-big banks' attention. But did they try to resolve it with the stores—the stores that were generating the sales and therefore collecting their revenue? Again, a resounding no. They haven't met with them at all. They have spent a fortune trying to convince the public that their monopoly is OK and they shouldn't have to do anything about it; that they have always been right, they are still right, they are going to be right, and they do not have to talk to their customers, which are the stores.

I encouraged the banks to listen and to negotiate, but they chose to advertise and message to make stores look like the bad guys. They have spent a small fortune advertising and messaging. One day, on my way to work, I came by a place where they were giving out insulated coffee cups to give this message that the big banks were going to be put out of business by this amendment.

As we all know too well, dialog is occurring in the Halls of Congress, but that isn't going to rectify the problem. I agree that government should not determine a set price on fees. I will say that again. I agree the government should not determine a set price on fees. But if a huge segment of the economy makes a case for redress, then it will likely fall under what I call the probable legislation rule No. 3: If it is worth reacting to, it is worth overreacting. It is not a good way to legislate, but unfortunately it happens a lot in Washington, and it may have happened in this case. I have worked for years to bring retailers and the big banks to the table to discuss and negotiate interchange fees and make the system work better for both parties. It hasn't happened, and that is when we get to this reaction time.

Since passage of the bill last July, there has been ample time for the banks and retailers to work out a solution. Dialog between the financial institutions and the retailers has to occur in order to find an immediate and a real solution to this problem.

The interchange fee provision is an important issue that deserves the full attention and consideration of both intended and unintended consequences, but our Nation's retailers and small businesses can't afford continued delays and studies because this kicking the can down the road is to keep things the way they were, and it is what we will be getting today if the amendment passes. Oh yes, it looks as though there is going to be some interaction there. If the big banks win today, the customers of stores lose.

Following the passage of the Durbin amendment, S. 575 was introduced this year by Senators TESTER and CORKER as a stand-alone bill to delay implementation of the Federal Reserve rules until the impact of those fees could be studied for another 2 years. That is the original bill where this amendment comes from. A similar House bill proposed to delay-study the debit card interchange fee rule for 1 year. Now, searching for votes, Senators TESTER and CORKER have changed their amendment, so what we will be voting on today is a study and a year of kicking the can down the road. But even though it has been changed, it is still wrong.

My colleagues knew I was not willing to support the original 2-year delay which would effectively bury progress made on the issue. A 2-year study was not just kicking the can down the road; it was making an indefinite delay on any changes and prohibiting dialog between parties.

I commend Senators TESTER, CORKER, CRAPO, and others for working to decrease the study timeline from 2 years to 12 months. As you have heard during this debate, the Tester-Corker amendment would allow for 6 months of studying the interchange fees, plus an additional 6 months for the Treasury and Federal Reserve to draft a final rule. While this is a step forward in the resolution, more needs to be done to accelerate this process. Another full year without a solution is too long for merchants and retailers.

There is another problem too. That is the Fed will still be making the rule. We have to realize that banks work with the Fed all the time, so banks understand the Fed and the Fed understands the banks. Retailers don't work with the Fed. The Fed does not check on the retailers. So how do you think the rule the Fed will write will come out if we kick the can down the road another year? I think the banks will have a big advantage.

What we need is for the banks to listen to their customers, the retailers, and come up with a workable solution. The Fed isn't the right place for that decision. The Fed just made a decision that the banks decided they didn't like. Quite frankly, for some of the small banks, there is a problem too because what was allowed for small banks to give them an edge isn't ever going to happen. People will shop where it is cheapest, which will be the big banks. So I think the Fed did get it wrong, and I don't think the banks will get it right unless there is something that is real to them.

On July 21, the current rule will go into effect. On July 21, they will finally feel that it is real, and they ought to sit down with their customers, the retailers, and get it figured out. I don't think it is that tough. I know where the changes were that I would have liked to have seen, and I didn't represent the whole gamut, but there are a few associations that would be viable to work this out. It doesn't need to be done through legislation. But if today we pass the Tester-Corker amendment, there won't be any incentive for them to do anything for at least another year because the problem still won't be real.

The banks don't think there is a problem. The retailers know there is a problem, and the retailers' customers are beginning to understand there is a problem. I just saw a survey from Montana, and 75 percent of the people are opposed to the swipe fees that are currently in place—75 percent. America is figuring things out faster than Congress is, and we have to be with the people. We have to take care of the problems they see, especially when it is that huge a majority. I don't like doing things based on polls, but I do like polls to give me an indication.

I go back to Wyoming almost every weekend, and I travel to a different part of the State every weekend and talk to the real people; I just don't read it in the papers or read the studies. I can tell you that 75 percent is probably just about right. I think it might be just slightly higher than that in Wyoming.

The banks and the retailers should get together and come up with a rule that will work for both of them but not one that maintains a monopoly. When you sign on to one of these credit card agreements—and you have to do one of those in order to be able to accept them and have the money work through the system back to you—you are not given any options. There isn't anything you can shop around for because all the agreements are the same. If you sign one of those agreements, you have to be willing to accept it no matter what the size of the purchase.

Now, if you are selling a soda for $1 and you are paying 44 cents, you know the soda company isn't making enough to cover the 44 cents, so they have to raise their price, which gets passed on to the customer. They have to raise the price so that it covers the credit card, but it also has to cover the other sales because there is no way for them to distinguish one from the other. They can't charge more for a credit card sale than a debit card sale, and they shouldn't. So they build in a hidden fee that you don't know you are paying. That fee is a huge fee, and it takes away some of the profits on the small sales. That is one of the primary areas that is driving this whole issue. There are other areas, too, but that is the simplest one that could be figured out.

Both sides on this issue need to have a hand in the negotiating. Defeating this amendment gives them both a hand, and that is why I strongly believe two things need to occur to fix this problem. No. 1, any study should not be longer than 6 months total study time and drafting of the rule and, No. 2, banks and credit unions must come to the table with retailers and merchants to define some middle ground. It would be more workable if bankers and retailers sat down and negotiated an agreement. They don't need a study. The retailers know what the problem is. The banks know the problem better than the retailers. So all they have to do is skip the study, sit down, and work it out. I think it could be worked out before July 21, although a deadline is always good. So we really need to defeat that.

It is a tough issue for small business owners, merchants, and retailers because many of our community lenders have come to rely on this interchange income. No good comes from pitting small businesses against lenders in Wyoming or otherwise, especially not in this economy. Bankers already know what changes need to be made. If they had put more effort into forcing bank card fees to be more reasonable, the situation could have been solved years ago. Clearly, it could have been when I was back in the shoe business. I can tell you, I am pretty discouraged that now that I am in the Senate they still are not listening.

This bill has made them listen. So no more delays should occur. Interchange fee reform was overwhelmingly approved by Congress last year. U.S. consumers do not need additional studies to tell them they already pay the highest swipe fees in the world. Delaying these reforms will delay urgently needed relief for American businesses and consumers, relief that cannot wait longer during this fragile economic recovery.

Today I ask my colleagues to side with the stores and their customers; otherwise, we will have just done another bailout for big banks.

I yield the floor and reserve the remainder of the time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, I thank my colleague from Wyoming. Our relationship and friendship has been growing over the years. I respect him so much as one of the real voices of retailers and small business. I had an opportunity to spend some time visiting China with him and his wife. We got to sit down and talk about their lives and what they have been through.

My colleague knows the small business side of this world better than anybody who sits in this Chamber. As I listened to him talking about the solution to this problem, I could not help but nod affirmatively. There is no reason we should have had to vote a year ago to establish this interchange fee. It reflected the fact that retailers, small businesses, merchants, hotels, restaurants, and shopkeepers across the board were literally given no seat at the table to discuss the fairness and propriety of these interchange fees. The point he made drives it home. The credit card networks, working through the banks, are charging our businesses in America the highest interchange fees—that is the fee charged every time someone swipes that plastic debit card—of any country in the world. The interchange fee in Canada is zero; in the United States, 44 cents on average on every transaction.

I could not agree with the Senator more. If the banks would come down out of their ivory towers on Wall Street and other places and sit down, roll up their sleeves with the folks running shoe stores and grocery stores and hotels and restaurants, and say all right, we are going to come up with a fairer system—if it is zero in Canada and it is 44 cents here, there is a number in between that can make sense to both sides. If that were the case, the Senator and I would be working on some other issues rather than this one.

But my colleague is so right. Today we have to defeat the Tester-Corker amendment; otherwise, we are sending a massive subsidy to the biggest banks on Wall Street, up to $8 billion a year that they collect in these debit card interchange fees at the expense of small businesses and consumers all across America.

I thank the Senator for his support. I know later this afternoon at 2 o'clock when we face this vote it is an important vote for every small business in his home State and mine as well. I thank the Senator for taking the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CORKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRANKEN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CORKER. Mr. President, I rise to talk about the Tester-Corker vote which will take place at 2 o'clock today. I know there has been a lot of discussion about the Durbin amendment which occurred during Dodd-Frank and where we are today.

I wish to spend a moment clarifying the fact that the Tester-Corker amendment does not do away with the Durbin amendment. The Durbin amendment will still be the law of the land and a huge victory during the Dodd-Frank regulation—something I did not support but a huge victory for the retail industry, in that for the first time in the history of our country, per the law that was passed, debit cards are going to be a regulated industry.

There is nothing about the Tester-Corker amendment that in any way changes the fact that it is going to be a regulated industry. That is going to occur. What Tester-Corker does is to try to bring back into balance how we look at this particular transaction. We are going through this period of time in our country's history where people have been very upset with financial institutions at many levels. It is almost as if the Durbin language is an attempt to basically punish, be punitive, to community banks, rural banks, credit unions, mega banks all across our country for things that happened in the past.

There is no question many financial institutions made mistakes. There is no question that government made mistakes. There is no question that Congress has made mistakes. There is no question that consumers across our country, in many cases, have made a lot of mistakes. But we are at a place in our country's evolution where what we need to do is reinforce economic growth in this country and make sure that regulation has the right balance.

I feel the pushback against Tester-Corker is an attempt to continue to try to punish, stick a stick in the eye of, do whatever, to get back at the financial industry. Again, I think there has been a tremendous win by the proponents of the Durbin amendment. You have a debit card industry that is going to be regulated.

The question is, What is the fair way to regulate them as it relates to what are the allocated costs. So the Federal Reserve has told us the language that exists in the Durbin amendment, which only allows incremental costs, is inappropriate. They are very uncomfortable with it. They are uncomfortable with what that is going to do to community banks, rural banks, smaller banks all across our country.

The FDIC has said they are very concerned about the language because the cost of the transaction is not going to be appropriately assessed. They have shared that in public testimony. The OCC has done exactly the same. State bank commissioners across this country have done the same.

I know the Presiding Officer is from Minnesota. I know he flies to Washington probably each week. The way the language is now written, it would be as if the Presiding Officer got on a flight in Minneapolis to fly to Washington, the seats were mostly full, but a standby passenger got on the plane at the last minute, sat down in an empty seat, and the airline was forced to charge everybody who flew on their airline only the cost of what that one additional passenger—already the trip was going to take place—what that one additional passenger cost the airline to travel from Minneapolis to Washington.

Obviously, that cost is almost negligible because all the reservations, the flight has been fueled, the flight attendants are there, the pilots are there. All those costs are already there.

That is the way the Durbin amendment now reads. That is the way the law now is; that the Federal Reserve can only take into account, as they regulate the debit card industry, what that incremental cost is, what adding one transaction to the system would cost.

Everybody knows—the retailers that are opposing our amendment know—there is no way any of them could survive in the retail industry if their costs were only allocated to them on an incremental basis. So everybody knows this is flawed. I do not think there is any debate about the fact that the way we are looking at regulating the debit card industry is flawed.

But what people are doing—it is almost sort of a Venezuelan approach. We are angry at these folks, so even though we know that assessing the cost of debit cards and only allowing incremental costs, even though we know that is inappropriate and that no business in America can survive, we are still going to do it because the banks were involved in TARP or the banks did this or the banks were involved in mortgages.

It is a policy that does not make sense. It is not an appropriate way, in my humble opinion, for a body such as ours—that hopefully stands above grudges, stands above trying to punish people but is here to put policies in place that will make our country stronger. So what we have added—and I see the Senator from North Carolina who has been highly involved in reaching the place we are—what we have said is: Look, Durbin should stand. Durbin should stand as it is. We should regulate the debit industry. OK. We understand that is going to happen. But let's make sure that when the regulators look at regulating the debit card industry, they are able to also look at the fixed costs, those costs that should be appropriately considered in setting the rates.

My guess is the Presiding Officer has some regulatory boards in the State of Minnesota. Maybe they regulate electricity. Maybe they regulate water. Maybe they regulate natural gas. I do not know. We have similar types of things in Tennessee. When they look at regulating those industries, they take into account those costs that are appropriate in regulating the industry.

I have not heard anybody debate, negatively, that it is inappropriate—that it is inappropriate—to allocate costs the way Senator HAGAN, the way myself, the way others have talked about doing. It has all been about the emotion of trying to do damage to financial institutions because people are upset with them. That is what their argument has been about. It has been an emotional argument about saying: These institutions did some very bad things, and therefore we want to punish them, even though we know the cost allocation is inappropriate.

We all know that what is going to happen is, not only are we going to do damage to our community banks, our credit unions, our rural banks all across this country, but in the process of allowing the rules to stand as they are and the direction we give to the Fed to stand as it is, what is going to happen is we are going to have a constriction of credit.

I mean right now in our country, we are watching a pause, a pause taking place in economic growth. One of the driving factors—there is no question—is our financial institutions are out there. They are seeing in every way their ability to lend to be clamped down on. Capital requirements are changing. Some of these things were good things that needed to happen, but this is just one more of those.

Lots of people have been involved in making this so we get back to the middle of the road, that when we regulate debit cards, we do so truly looking at the cost of the card itself.

If this amendment is defeated, it is just one more blow against our economy as we continue to constrict lending in our financial institutions to communities and citizens all across our country. Somebody had a chart up yesterday looking at Canada and looking at Europe. One little detail—and they were talking about the lack of debit charges or, in some cases, the fees were less than they are in our country.

One of the details they left out is, they do not have community banks. In Canada, you have a handful of highly regulated almost utilities that are banks—under five. That is a very different scenario than we have, where we have community banks all across the country that are out there lending to innovators, banks all across this country lending to innovators, a very different environment.

So, in Canada, they are able to actually generate fees in other ways. Of course, they do not have the community banking system and credit union system that we have across our country. To me, what I hope will happen at 2 o'clock—I know this has been a contentious issue, a vote that candidly a lot of people would just as soon have go away because people have friends who are retailers, people have friends who are bankers, and they hate to “choose between their friends.”

But I hope what will happen at 2 o'clock is that when people come down in the well to vote, they will look at the policies, and they will say: You are right. The financial industry has been involved in some excesses. You are right. We heavily regulated the financial industry 1 year ago when Dodd-Frank was passed, and you are right; if we are going to set rates on debit cards, let's at least allow the Fed to consider all the appropriate costs—they do not have to take all the costs—but, look, if a bank is offering bonus awards for people, that should not be included. We understand that.

But the Fed ought to be able to look at all those costs that are fair. I hope Members of this body will rise above the emotional aspect of this vote. I hope they will rise above the rhetoric. This is anything but another bank bailout. What this is allowing is the Fed to rightfully, as they have requested of the Senate, to rightfully be able to look at all the appropriate costs that go into a debit transaction.

Again, if Tester-Corker passes, if Tester-Corker-Hagan-Crapo passes, if it passes, it is a tremendous win for the retailers. They have a regulated debit card industry, something they wanted for a long time. But it also strikes the balance of appropriateness as it relates to us as we look to move ahead with appropriate regulation of our financial industry.

I know we are on the cusp. I know this is going to be a very close vote. I do hope our colleagues will look at the policy. If they have not spent time yet with their staffers, look at the language. Durbin still stands if Tester-

Corker passes. Durbin stands. All it does is allow the regulators to appropriately—just as happens in every State around this country that regulates industries—allows the Fed to appropriately look at those costs that ought to be associated with a debit card.

I urge my colleagues to vote in support of Tester-Corker.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mrs. HAGAN. Mr. President, I, too, come to the floor in support of the amendment by Senator TESTER and Senator CORKER from Tennessee.

Let me tell you, I threw myself into these negotiations many weeks ago when I saw the great bipartisan work of my colleagues from Montana and from Tennessee. You just heard the Senator from Tennessee talking about this. They have worked tirelessly on this issue. They have shown great leadership in their willingness to modify their approach.

What we have now is a bipartisan, balanced compromise amendment that is going to address the concerns raised by the regulators, small debit card issuers, and many Senators, about the Federal Reserve's approach toward a regulated interchange fee market.

The amendment does not repeal the debit interchange amendment championed by Senator DURBIN last year. As the Senator from Tennessee just said, it does not repeal that. In fact, a number of Senators who supported Senator DURBIN's amendment, also support this compromise amendment. It is moderate. It is bipartisan. It is balanced. It now gives the regulators the time and the tools they need to get this rule right.

This is the type of commonsense compromise that Senators on both sides of the aisle can support. This bipartisan, balanced approach is how the Senate should operate.

When the Senate added section 1075 to the Dodd-Frank Act last year, it required that interchange transactions fees charged by issuers be reasonable and proportional.

Importantly, the amendment also exempted banks with fewer than $10 billion in assets. During the rule writing process, this exemption has been characterized as ineffective.

In February, during testimony before the Senate Banking Committee, Federal Reserve Chairman Bernanke, the person ultimately responsible for writing these rules said that, "it is possible that that exemption will not be effective in the marketplace" and that "it is possible that, in practice, community banks would not be exempt from the lower interchange fee."

FDIC Chairwoman Bair and the Conference of State Bank Supervisors echoed those concerns.

These are the people responsible for monitoring the safety and soundness of our community banks and credit unions and they have expressed serious doubts about the practical effectiveness of the small issuer exemption.

This is extremely concerning to me, a Senator from North Carolina, which has a strong presence of community banks and credit unions that serve my constituents across the State.

This legislation helps get the small issuer exemption right. It provides two levels of protection for small banks and credit unions.

First, it considers the impact on small issuers up front as part of a short 6-month study.

It directs the banking and credit union regulators to carefully review the effectiveness of the small issuer exemption, which will be going to the community banks and credit unions.

And it directs the regulators to look at the exemption from a safety and soundness perspective. This is of particular importance at a time when community banks around the country are struggling to provide credit to Main Street businesses.

Then, once the final rules are in place, it would require a review of the effect of the rule on the market.

This approach gives regulators the time to look at small banks and credit unions up front and an opportunity to point out any problems that may occur in the future.

This is a sensible, balanced approach. It is a bipartisan approach. It is one that I would urge my colleagues to support.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. UDALL of New Mexico). The Senator from Oregon is recognized.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I want to take a few minutes to discuss the underlying legislation, the Economic Development Administration bill, because I think, with the new numbers about the American economy—the joblessness and the trends—we are all looking for ways to encourage investment in the United States, and we are looking for ways to promote new industries that will create family wage jobs.

The Economic Development Administration has helped to do that in my home State and in other parts of the country. I want to take a few minutes and discuss that. I see the chairman of the Finance Committee. We may have gotten a little backed up, and I am anxious to hear from the chairman of the Finance Committee.

The area I want to talk about with respect to the Economic Development Administration involves nanotechnology. This is, in effect, the science of small stuff. We are seeing it pay off big in a whole host of energy-related applications, and in health care particularly, in terms of drugs and new medical devices. It has made a big difference at the Pentagon in terms of their looking at and adding carbon nanotubes to a number of the products we need to protect our warfighters.

The fact is, when we talk about this agency, we are seeing that a small public investment can leverage very substantial private sector investment in a way that is going to encourage jobs in the United States, and particularly in what I call the sunrise industries. It is sure making a difference.

For example, Wired magazine recently talked about growth in a number of key sectors. They said nanotechnology, between 2006 and 2010, grew more than 18 percent—one of our leading growth industries with jobs in the United States.

I, for one, thought we were going to see growth in a number of instances. We have seen bipartisan support for congressional efforts. The 21st century nanotechnology legislation in particular, signed by George W. Bush, is one piece of legislation I was especially proud of being part of because it encouraged research in this exciting field and had bipartisan support. It laid the groundwork for the next steps.

The next steps in particular involve using at EDA some modest public investments to leverage very substantial private investments in innovation. In my State, ONAMI, the Oregon Nanoscience and Microtechnologies Institute, is on the cutting edge of nanotechnology research and application. It has been helped by the EDA agency.

Participants in ONAMI include Oregon's four largest public research universities, the National Science Foundation, the Departments of Defense, Energy, Commerce, and major corporations as well. What we have sought to do is to make sure in this extraordinarily exciting field we don't fall behind China and other global competitors. So there is huge potential. Federal efforts can support private sector initiatives in the nanotechnology field and together leverage U.S. advantages in innovation and technology and particularly facilitate job growth.

The Chair knows of Intel, which is a large employer in his State as in mine. That is the kind of company we are looking at for the future, where they pay good wages. We are seeing substantial growth, and they are looking to try to target nanotechnology in particular as a sunrise industry, as an area that is going to facilitate an opportunity for our country to lead.

America is in a fight for the future of nanotechnology. We are seeing China and a lot of our global competitors making major investments in this area. Our private sector is stepping up, but we ought to have the government partner as well. That is why EDA's support of nanotechnology and the innovation economy is so critical. They have partnered with the National Science Foundation and the National Institutes of Health to promote innovative approaches in health and science.

I am proud to say, as part of a major economic challenge grant, the Oregon Innovation Cluster, of which ONAMI is a part, was one of the award winners. My State is not the only place where nanotechnology investments are being made. The Economic Development Administration has invested in nanotechnology throughout the country—in Colorado, the Mid-Atlantic Nanotechnology Alliance; in Tennessee and in South Carolina with the Clemson University Research Foundation. These are just a few examples, from Oregon all the way to the east coast of the United States, where the Economic Development Administration has helped entrepreneurs work to create jobs in exciting fields such as nanotechnology and helped us commercialize leading-edge technologies.

I hope my colleagues will support this bill. I particularly commend the chairman of the committee, Senator BOXER. Nanotechnology and EDA are a partnership where high-tech industries can help create good, high-paying jobs in America. I hope we will support this particular legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is recognized.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise to express my strong support for S. 782, the 5-year reauthorization of the Economic Development Administration, which I am proud to have cowritten.

Abraham Lincoln said:

The legitimate object of government is to do for a community of people whatever they need to have done but cannot do at all, or cannot so well do for themselves, in their separate and individual capacities.

That is what the Economic Development Revitalization Act of 2011 will do. It authorizes and funds the EDA, a Department of Commerce agency, in order to help Americans achieve what they “cannot so well do for themselves.”

EDA is the only Federal agency charged solely with job creation. Each dollar of EDA funding leverages nearly $7 in private sector investment.

From 2005 to 2010, during the administrations of Presidents from each political party, EDA awarded $1.2 billion in construction-related and revolving loan fund projects. According to estimates, more than 314,000 jobs resulted from those investments.

EDA programs are critical to my home State of Montana, a State with lower per capita income but great 21st century potential. When the timber industry in the western part of the State suffered setbacks, we paired Federal EDA funding from the 2009 Recovery Act with State dollars to create an $11.7 million revolving loan fund. We enabled 34 companies to continue operating and supported nearly 2,000 jobs despite the economic downturn.

In the eastern part of the State, we experience outmigration where the problem is both people and jobs leaving the area altogether, which EDA can help us address in a new provision under this bill.

A key feature of this bill is the increased Federal share for areas that demonstrate unusually severe economic distress and unique circumstances.

For instance, in the event of a federally declared disaster, the Federal share is to be increased for 18 months. This applies to a nonweather event such as the September 11 attacks or a natural disaster such as we have experienced in Montana where we currently face severe flooding conditions.

Areas like Roundup, Lodge Grass, Harlem, Fort Peck, Rocky Boy's, Lewistown and elsewhere are confronted with a crisis of biblical proportions. I was in Montana last week witnessing the challenges that confront us. And I am working very hard to ensure that Federal resources will be available for those most in need, which is a legitimate object of government, as Lincoln observed. This Federal share provision is one more way to do that.

Also, we have established a minimum 75 percent Federal share under this bill to help Indian tribes lacking sufficient resources to provide the typical matching share—as is often the case in my home State of Montana.

I want to thank Chairman BOXER and Ranking Member INHOFE for their leadership and for working with me on this bill. I also commend and thank EDA Administrator John Fernandez for coming to Montana to meet with my constituents in Missoula and Butte last September to discuss opportunities that would help our State and the country.

In closing, this is a good bill with backing from both sides of the aisle. I urge my colleagues to support it. We talk a lot about helping job growth. Here is an opportunity to do so.

I yield the floor.

Mr. COONS. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

I was an original cosponsor of Senator TESTER's bill, which forms the basis for this amendment, because I am concerned about consumers, credit unions, and the financial sector in Delaware. The Federal Reserve's proposed rule on interchange regulation does not guarantee consumers will benefit from reduced rates, and inadvertently creates a mechanism that could destabilize some of our small, community banking institutions. Because of these unintended consequences, I believe the Fed should go back to the drawing board and rethink the way it is going about setting interchange fees.

I know my friend, the Senator from Illinois, worked hard last Congress, bearing in mind the interests of all parties involved, to authorize the Fed to make such a rule on regulating these fees. The Durbin amendment included a well-intentioned provision to protect small banks by creating a carve-out exemption from certain interchange fee caps.

Unfortunately, I believe the Fed issued its proposed rule in haste, and it is becoming clear that this carve-out exemption threatens the competitiveness of smaller banks, community banks, and credit unions. A belief in the viability of this exemption was crucial in securing the votes necessary to include Senator DURBIN's amendment in the Dodd-Frank reform package.

When the Senator from Illinois wrote his amendment last year, I know he had the best of intentions when he directed the Fed to establish a debit rate that is “reasonable and proportional” to the “incremental” cost of an individual transaction. These criteria, however, have tied the Fed's hands and, essentially, prohibit the Fed from considering all costs associated with debit operations when regulating debit interchange fees.

Additionally, the two-tiered interchange system proposed by DURBIN's small bank exemption may be considered unworkable in practice and subject to market forces. The Chairman of the Federal Reserve, Ben Bernanke, admitted as much when he appeared before the Senate Banking Committee in February. He noted that “there is a possibility . . . that, either because merchants wouldn't accept the more expensive cards or because networks would not be willing to have a two-tier pricing system, it's possible that in practice they would not be exempt from a lower interchange fee.”

I have met in recent months with a broad range of large and small banks, credit unions, card networks, retailers, merchants, and other concerned parties from Delaware and other States about the Fed's proposed rule. With their helpful input, and with our continued economic recovery foremost in mind, I have joined with a bipartisan group of Senators in support of this amendment, which would direct the Fed to study this issue further and come up with a rule that does not risk harming the small banks and credit unions that play such an important role in our communities.

At a time when large banks have been reluctant to lend capital, more and more new businesses and ventures are being started through loans from smaller community banks and credit unions. We cannot afford to undercut their lending ability through the losses they are likely to incur if the Fed's proposed rule becomes final. The effect that would have on our recovery could be harmful.

At a hearing held by the Banking Committee on May 12, Chairman Bernanke was asked what the effect of the small bank exemption would be if the proposed rule were implemented. He answered: “It's going to affect the revenues of the small issuers, and it could result in some smaller banks being less profitable, or even failing."

Furthermore, at the same hearing, Sheila Bair, Chairman of the FDIC, stated: "I do think this is going to reduce revenues at a number of smaller banks, and they will have to pass that on to customers in terms of higher fees."

Above all, we must not do harm to consumers—especially when so many have had to tighten their belts during the recession and are just starting to get back on their feet. The same goes for proprietors of small businesses. Delaware is home to so many hard-working small business owners, merchants who rely on the acceptance of debit card payments for daily transactions. I believe the Fed needs to create a rule that strikes a balance between supporting robust commercial activity for small businesses and their consumers and safeguarding the viability of small banks and credit unions.

Senator TESTER's amendment does just that. It calls on the Fed, the FDIC, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the National Credit Union Administration to make a determination whether a proposed rule does not include all fixed and incremental costs, whether it might adversely affect debit card consumers, or whether the small bank carve-out would be impractical.

This issue requires a closer and more careful look. Chairman Bair stated at the hearing in February that "it was done very quickly," and "who's paying for what, who's going to pay more, and who's getting to pay less under this is something that maybe wasn't dealt with as thoroughly as it might have been."

This is why I am a cosponsor of Senator TESTER's amendment and why I will continue to work for interchange rules that are fair and do not harm a vital sector of our economy during these difficult economic times. We must continue to be relentless in our focus on economic recovery and job growth, and the Tester amendment does just that.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise today in opposition to Senator TESTER's amendment on debit card swipe fees.

Like many of my colleagues, I have received countless letters on this issue, from consumers, financial institutions, retailers, labor unions, and other interested parties. As a Member of the Senate, I take very seriously our duty to ensure that the Nation's financial system functions fairly.

I am deeply concerned about protecting consumers and small banks from financial harm. This is a tough economy. I know that. I will do everything I can to make sure they are protected.

But my position on this issue has been unchanged from the beginning.

The Federal Reserve issued a proposed rule last December, and is in the process of considering over 11,000 comments submitted on that rule. Chairman Bernanke has said those comments have been informative, and the Federal Reserve will soon issue a final rule that should take into account concerns some have raised.

My position for a long time has been that we should not jump in the middle of that process. We should wait to see what the professionals at the Federal Reserve come out with, and then evaluate whether or not the final rule is fair and equitable for merchants, banks, and especially consumers.

It would be bad precedent for Congress to start cutting off that process in the middle. We don't want to go down that road.

The Federal Reserve is devoting substantial resources to this issue and are giving the comments careful consideration. We should let them finish their work.

Senator TESTER's legislation also is flawed in other respects.

The study it proposes only involves banking agencies. It excludes consumer protection agencies, like the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau and the Federal Trade Commission.

The intent of existing law is to benefit consumers. If the law is going to be studied, consumer agencies should be involved too. We need to make sure consumers' interests are protected.

Senator TESTER's legislation also requires that regulators evaluate whether the proposed rule meets certain tests. As I see it, the tests are so easily met that the final rule is almost guaranteed to be thrown out without being considered.

This is a problem for me.

If a study is to be done, it should be fair, impartial, and consider the interests of all affected parties.

The bottom line is that we don't know what the final rule issued by the Fed will be. I have heard a lot of conjecture from both sides on this issue, but no one has been able to convey any certainty.

I have heard from a number of constituents and national groups on this issue. They have expressed their views passionately, and I am grateful for their participation in this process.

I remain deeply committed to ensuring that small banks and consumers are protected. When the final rule is released, we should look at it carefully. And we should conduct a fair study of the rule if we need to do so.

But until that rule is released, we should allow the experts at the Federal Reserve to complete their work before we take any action.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I want to express my support for the amendment by Senator TESTER.

Last year when Congress passed the debit interchange fee provision, I opposed the measure.

I was not convinced that the provision would work for small banks and credit unions, and I was not convinced that the benefits would be passed on to consumers.

My thinking has not changed.

Throughout this debate many studies have been cited, but none of those studies looked at the questions we have before us today—will a two-tier system work for small banks, credit unions, retailers and consumers, and what will the impact be on debit card users?

I remain concerned about the debit interchange provision. As I suspected last year, finding a workable solution is not easily or quickly accomplished.

As the Fed has worked on this issue and released its rule for public comment, it has become clear that there are many concerns about the rule's impact on consumers, small banks and credit unions. Chairman Bernanke and other regulators have voiced these concerns several times in recent months at hearings before the Banking Committee, which I chair.

While there may be a need for debit interchange reform, it should be done right. This amendment by Senator TESTER will give the Fed and other agencies more time to study this issue to find a workable solution, especially the small bank exemption that is intended to allow the community banks and credit unions to continue to serve consumers all across America. Let's be clear, the Tester amendment does not repeal the debit interchange provision, it simply asks for more time to study and get it right.

I thank Senator TESTER for his efforts to help produce a bipartisan compromise that works for our community banks and credit unions. Just like in his home State of Montana, the community banks and credit unions are important to my constituents in South Dakota.

As we saw in the last Congress, Senator TESTER is an effective legislator who does a great job building bipartisan consensus, and this latest effort of his is another commonsense proposal that bridges the gap on a complicated financial issue.

Debit cards are important to consumers and to the retail industry. This is not about picking sides—this is about creating a functioning payment system that works for all stakeholders. And I believe Senator TESTER's amendment will help us accomplish the goal of getting this right. I encourage my colleagues to support Senator TESTER's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Montana is recognized.

Mr. TESTER. Mr. President, let me take a moment here to clarify for my colleagues the intent of this amendment. Not surprisingly, a number of groups have made a number of claims about what this amendment "is" and "is not."

In drafting any regulations required by the amendment, any agencies involved are required to not only abide by the letter of the law but also the congressional intent of its authors.

Let me take a minute to try to make crystal clear what exactly the intent of this amendment is.

First of all, let me address some of the claims that have been made about the implementation date of debit interchange regulations. My amendment would direct the Fed to implement these provisions on a date of their determination.

Why was this language included in this way? The intent of this language is to provide the Fed with the discretion to implement these regulations as quickly as is practically possible for merchants, issuers and networks to prepare for such new regulations.

The hope with this language would be to avoid the situation we are in right now where parties impacted by these changes would likely have less than a month to implement significant changes to the debit interchange system.

To be clear, the Fed may not disregard implementation of debit interchange regulation, as some have articulated. They also may not arbitrarily decide to implement these rules 5 years from now. Any delay in implementation beyond a reasonable timeline of a few months would need to be justified by the Fed.

Let me also take a minute to address concerns that have been raised about the language we have used to describe what considerations the Federal Reserve must make if a determination is made in this amendment and the Federal Reserve is directed to rewrite the debit interchange rules.

The language states that the Federal Reserve shall "consider"—again, shall "consider"—all fixed and incremental costs in determining what is a reasonable and proportional interchange fee. Let me say this again. The Fed shall "consider"—not include, not calculate, but shall consider—all fixed and incremental costs. That word is important because "consider" provides the Fed with the discretion to consider and determine, using their judgment, what is reasonable and proportional, meaning any costs considered would need to be justified to the Fed.

To further clarify, the language directs the Fed to consider "all fixed and incremental costs associated with debit card transactions and program operations and allow incentives for a more innovative, efficient and secure payment card network."

Why did we include all fixed and incremental costs? That is because the original statute limited the costs the Federal Reserve could consider to only those costs associated with the "authorization, clearance or settlement of a particular electronic debit transaction." This language severely limits the costs to issuers that the Fed may consider in calculating reasonable and proportional rates and is in large measure why the Federal Reserve's proposed rule is currently at 12 cents.

There are a number of fixed costs associated with debit transactions, chief among them fraud costs, which are also arbitrarily limited in the original statute. The fraud language states that the Federal Reserve may—not must but may—allow for a fraud adjustment for costs associated with fraud prevention. Now, the Federal Reserve draft proposal did not include any fraud adjustment, and we have no idea what an adjustment might look like or whether the final rule would include one. But if it did, it could only include an adjustment related to fraud prevention but not the actual costs or losses associated with fraud.

Take for example the recent data breach by Michaels stores—a breach, by the way, which was the fault of the retailer, which had their debit kiosks compromised. What were the costs to the issuer of the cards that were compromised? They were significant.

First of all, it was a community bank in Illinois that had a fraud-monitoring program that identified the threat and alerted the retailer their kiosks had been compromised. Then there were the costs to these issuers of making their customers whole again for the losses they sustained by criminals removing funds directly from their bank accounts—$500 at a time. Additionally, issuers had to foot the costs associated with reissuing the cards and opening new accounts for customers with compromised accounts. But none of those costs—those associated with fraud and losses assumed by the issuers—could be calculated in the fraud adjustment under the current statute. That is why we included language directing the Federal Reserve to consider all fixed and incremental costs associated with debit card transactions and program operations to capture those costs. Fraud losses in monitoring programs are not associated with individual transactions, nor is the creation or reissuance of physical cards, account maintenance, or cardholder servicing.

Let me also say what we do not believe is included in any reasonable and proportional fixed and incremental costs associated with program operations. As a result of our conversations and consultation with the Feds, we do not believe rewards programs or miles would be nor should be considered as permissible costs, nor would or should any executive compensation, nor should the costs of maintaining ATM machines.

Why did we include the language allowing the Federal Reserve, in setting reasonable and proportional rates, to "allow incentives for a more innovative, efficient and secure payment card network"? We added it because, in conversations with the Federal Reserve about what sorts of costs would be included in reasonable and proportional costs, they indicated that right now they do not have the ability to incentivize savings by issuers to make processing more efficient or secure. It seemed like a pretty good idea to Senator CORKER and me that we should give the Federal Reserve this kind of discretion and that issuers should be incentivized to lower costs below whatever the Federal Reserve determines to be reasonable and proportional; otherwise, the fee would likely stay the same for years to come as there would be no incentive to lower costs.

In addition to the flexibility provided to the Federal Reserve to set the rates, the amendment also intends to provide discretion to the Federal Reserve to include additional factors in the study, such as the overall impact of regulating interchange fees on small businesses and the economy, as well as discretion in the agencies the Federal Reserve may consult when drafting the study.

In addition, it is intended that the findings must be made public and that the Federal Reserve is not required to start from square one. The intent is for the Federal Reserve to be able to build upon the information and insights which they have gathered already and which are a part of the current record.

Finally, this amendment doesn't undermine or inhibit the Federal Reserve's ability to implement the routing and network exclusivity provisions in the underlying statute. In fact, it does quite the opposite. We sought to preserve this language and these provisions as they were originally included in the statute.

In the last couple of days, several Senators have suggested additional changes that would improve the consumer-related aspects of the study proposed by my amendment. I very much appreciate their concerns and their interest on this critically important point, and the changes they have suggested are certainly ones I and other cosponsors are open to. Unfortunately, the Senator from Illinois filed a second-degree amendment which essentially closed off any chance to make additional changes to the amendment once it was filed.

I am more than willing to work with my colleagues to find ways to continue to improve this amendment and to ensure that consumers, small businesses, small banks, and credit unions get a fair deal as we move to a regulated interchange marketplace. And that is what we will get out of this amendment—the same idea of regulation that 64 Members of this body supported last year.

The difference between my amendment and the current law is that we will ensure that the Fed's regulations do not set the price below the cost of doing business. The current law prevented the Fed from looking at any number of elements of the cost of interchange. Some fraud costs were allowed to be included but not others. Some technology costs were included but not others. Why? Because the Senate made those arbitrary decisions. The result is a proposed Fed rule that sets the debit interchange rate at 7 or 12 cents for all transactions—a level most folks agree is too low. Let's allow the Fed to find the actual correct number. As a farmer, I can tell you that if it costs me $3 to produce a bushel of wheat, it won't matter if I sell it for $2 or $1 or 50 cents, I will still go out of business because it is below my cost of doing business. And that is precisely what will happen to our smaller banks and credit unions.

With that, Mr. President, I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I have high regard for the Senator from Montana. He is my friend, and he will be my friend whatever the outcome of the vote happens to be, which will happen in about 40 minutes. But I do disagree with him on this issue.

I would like to make it clear from the start that the law on the books today specifically exempts community banks and credit unions—specifically those valued at $10 billion or less. That means 100 banks out of 7,000 in America are affected by this new law and 3 credit unions in all of America.

Now, the banks and credit unions have come here and said: Not enough protection because we can't be sure you will protect us from the credit card companies coming back on us and hurting us. OK, we can write in more protection, if necessary. But to argue that we are trying to save mom-and-pop banks here—from whom? We are trying to save them from the credit card giants that have created this price-fixing mess.

If you are an autograph seeker and you happen to want to meet CEOs of major corporations, you hit it rich today. Get over here and walk the halls of the Senate office buildings, and you will meet the CEOs of the biggest companies and banks in America. Why are they here today? Because of this 2 p.m. vote. Why is this 2 p.m. vote important to the three biggest banks in America—Chase, Bank of America, and Wells Fargo? Because right now what is at stake with the Tester-Corker amendment is $8 billion in fees they want to collect from consumers and businesses all across America—$8 billion.

When we got into the business of TARP—remember those days when the banks had messed up the economy so badly that we had to come to their rescue with taxpayer money, and the average family across America watched the taxes they were paying this government going to the biggest banks on Wall Street? That was about $800 billion. The three biggest banks that will profit the most here from this amendment—Chase, Bank of America, and Wells Fargo—each was a beneficiary of that TARP money, that bailout money. Chase received $25 billion, $45 billion went to Bank of America, and $25 billion went to Wells Fargo. They did quite well. When we rescued them, they sent us a little thank-you card. Do you know what it was? It was a notice that they were giving their chief executives bonuses out of the tax money we were sending.

So the question is not whether we are going to do another TARP today but whether we are going to do a baby TARP. It is only $8 billion for these three big banks this time, but I think it is an outrage. It is an outrage to make consumers across America pay this. They pay it every time they use their debit cards, and the merchants and retailers that collect it have no voice in this process.

I wish some of the people who come to this floor and shed copious tears over community banks and credit unions that are already protected in this law would shed a few tears for the people who run the shops and businesses across America, the restaurants and the hotels. These are the people who are being hit by these debit card fees every single day. Where is the sympathy for small business on this floor? They are all over Illinois, they are all over America.

If we really believe the key to economic recovery is the strength of small business creating and expanding jobs across America, for goodness' sake, let's stand up for them. You can't vote at 2 p.m. for this pending amendment and say you are a friend of small business. No, you can't. Small business is lined up across America saying: For once, give us a break against these credit card companies and the big banks on Wall Street. Give us a break. Are we going to do it? I am afraid not, if we pass this amendment.

I look at this amendment and I think to myself, Why did the banks write it the way they did? They wrote it so they could include more costs into their calculation of the fee they charge on an interchange transaction with debit cards. I will tell you this: Based on the language that was just read to us, they will easily justify the 44 cents they are currently charging and more.

I respect my colleague from Montana when he says on the floor that he didn't mean to include certain things. I wish he had been specific. I think the language of this amendment is broad enough and wide enough to drive a truck through. The banks are going to come out quite well, thank you, at the end of the day. But don't they always? When it is all said and done, aren't they usually the winners around here?

Today, we have a chance to turn the tables, to really make the winners small businesses and consumers across America. That is why consumer groups support keeping the law as it is. That is why, when the banks wrote this, they said the four agencies that would decide what the fee was going to be would be four bank regulators. I am searching—searching, searching—for any reference to consumers or small businesses. Sorry, the banks couldn't include those people. They couldn't include those people in that calculation.

To say "We are for the little guy, and that is why we need to vote for this amendment" is to ignore the amendment's wording as written. If you are for the small businesspeople across America, there is only one vote, and it is a "no" vote.

Let the Federal Reserve issue this rule. Don't let the banks stop them in their tracks. That is exactly what they want to do. Let them issue this rule. If more needs to be done, I am on board. But the notion that we cannot even trust the Federal Reserve to come up with a rule on this that may protect small businesses and consumers across America is just plain unfair. It is wrong and we ought to know better.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is recognized.

Mr. TESTER. Mr. President, I too echo the thoughts of the good Senator from Illinois. Senator DURBIN and I are friends. We may not sound like it today, but we are. We just happen to disagree on this particular piece of policy.

There is one premise that I think is being taken as a given that is not a given at all. It was in the original Durbin amendment. It said we were going to exempt banks of $10 billion and less and credit unions of $10 billion and less—so we are going to do that. A lot of folks voted for this amendment because they knew the small banks couldn't distribute their costs, and it would have undue harmful effects on the small banks, small credit unions, and community banks.

But the facts have borne out something different since the last year. They have not been borne out by stuff that I have made up. It comes from the regulators themselves.

I have said many times on this floor that every regulator I have talked to, State or Federal, has said the exemption for small banks and credit unions will not work. It will not work. We voted on something 1 year ago that we thought we had and it does not work. Let me read the quotes:

Fed Chairman Ben Bernanke:

We're still not sure whether it will work. There are market forces that would work against the exemption.

He said it May 12 of this year.

Another quote by Chairman Bernanke:

It is going to affect the revenues of small issuers and could result in some of the smaller banks being less profitable or even failing.

Once again, in the banking area, by FDIC Chairwoman Bair:

I do think this is going to reduce the revenues.

Let me say that again:

I do think this is going to reduce the revenues at a number of smaller banks and they will have to pass it on to their customers in terms of higher fees.

What does that mean? Checking, time getting the loan, fees, all that stuff. Money doesn't grow out of air. You have to have it, and if you don't have it and you are doing business, under the cost of doing business you have to make it up somewhere.

Another quote from Ben Bernanke, and it is about the two-tiered system that is unlikely to maintain—to protect smaller institutions. This is a quote:

A number of networks have expressed their interest or willingness to maintain a tiered interchange fee system, but of course it is not required.

Chairwoman Bair again:

If the Federal Reserve's view is there is no legal authority to require that, it does become more problematic.

The fact is, the two-tiered system is not going to work. Every regulator said it is not going to work. Its impacts are going to be on small community banks, not the Wall Street boys. They are fine. We agree on that. But the community banks and credit unions are going to have incredible impacts on our small businesses that we are trying to help get us out of this recession we are in.

This is not a bailout. This will ensure a regulated debit interchange system. By the way, I do not believe in bailouts. I didn't believe in the TARP bailout. I voted against it. I voted against the auto dealers' bailout. Right or wrong or indifferent, I do not believe in bailouts. I would not be supporting this if there were a bailout. I would not be offering it.

Wall Street banks are going to be just fine regardless of what happens, but the fact is, the exemption for banks under $10 billion will not work. That is why I am here. It is as simple as that.

I wish to close for now with a statement made by the "Frank" in Dodd-Frank, whom this bill is named after, BARNEY FRANK, who worked with Chris Dodd to craft this bill in the House and Senate. Here is what BARNEY FRANK says. Is today the 8th, by the way? He said it today, the 8th of June, speaking of the Tester-Corker-Hagan-Crapo-Bennet amendment, this amendment:

This is a good, balanced, compromised approach. I support it and I hope it will pass.

The author of this bill from the House thinks this is a good policy change to make Dodd-Frank better.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware is recognized.

Mr. CARPER. Mr. President, good to be with you again. I spent most of the morning with you and now part of the afternoon.

This is a difficult issue for a number of us in the Senate because we have friends on both sides of this issue. It is also a difficult issue for a lot of people because we do not want to be unmindful of the concerns raised legitimately by merchants for a number of years about debit charges they have had to pay, and we don't want to be unmindful of the concerns raised by banks, whether they be big or little, or by credit unions.

I was talking to one of my colleagues who said: I don't want to vote on this again. We had to vote on this once. I don't want to vote on this again. As one guy said: I certainly don't want to have to vote on it twice.

Another colleague said to me: I don't like the idea of just kicking the can down the road, having a 24-month pause and then maybe a new Congress and new administration and maybe it will all go away. That is not what I am interested in doing.

Another of my colleagues said to me: Why don't we fix this problem? Rather than kick the can down the road for 24 months, why don't we say: Let's fix this problem. As it turns out, four of our colleagues who voted with the Senator from Illinois, the author of the Durbin amendment, voted with Durbin originally when the amendment was first offered. They actually sat down, two Democrats and two Republicans, they and their staffs, hammered it out, worked with Senator TESTER and they worked with Senator CORKER as well and that is who wrote the bill. Did they get input from the merchants? I am sure they did. Did they get input from the banks? I am sure they did. I would hope so. That is the way this place ought to work, where Democrats and Republicans actually work together on legislation, and we seek input from not just banks, not just credit unions, not just merchants, but consumers as well.

I think back on the life I have been privileged to lead. I spent a lot of years in the Navy and had the privilege to serve my State as Governor and now in the Senate with my colleagues. I know any number of times in my life I have done things I was sure were the right thing to do but had an unintended consequence. I was sure I did the right thing, but as things turned out, there were consequences I didn't anticipate, and what I had to do was go back and help be part of the solution in addressing those unintended consequences.

Senator DURBIN put his finger on a big problem, and the problem he put his finger on is—actually, more than 1 year ago but a number of years ago—we have a situation with the use of debit cards where merchants are disadvantaged. They don't have a lot of options, and they end up having to pay large fees to banks—sometimes big banks but sometimes small banks—and they don't have that much choice. They don't like that. They would like to see us do something about it. So what Senator DURBIN proposed is a way to deal with that.

He intended in his legislation not only to try to help consumers and merchants, but he also tried to protect small banks, those with under $10 billion in assets, and to protect credit unions and their members.

I wish to see if we have a quote here. These banks have different regulators, credit unions have different regulators. I don't have quotes from all of them, but here is a quote Senator TESTER shared with us. Ben Bernanke, Chairman of the Federal Reserve, when he was talking about the unintended consequences. Here is what Sheila Bair of the FDIC said. She is talking about institutions, community banks, smaller ones, under $10 billion of assets.

We are concerned that these institutions may not actually receive the benefit of the interchange fee limit exemption explicitly provided by Congress, resulting in a loss of income for community banks and ultimately higher banking costs for their consumers.

She said that in her testimony before the House.

John Walsh is the Comptroller of the Currency. He said:

We believe the proposal takes an unnecessarily narrow approach to recovery of costs that would be allowable under the law and that are recognized and indisputably part of conducting a debit card business. This has long-term safety and soundness consequences—for banks of all sizes.

That is what they said. They think we have a problem. Their job is not to be the lapdog for financial institutions. Their job is to regulate financial institutions.

I tried to think about some times where we have abuses to clean up and how we go about doing it. This sounds strange for a guy from Delaware to say this. We had big abuses in credit cards. It was pretty much impossible for most people to get a credit card application in their mailbox, look at that application—maybe they got six of them that same week—and decide which of those four, five or six were actually in their best interest to fill out and submit. We had credit card banks taking advantage of people in ways that were untoward, I think unethical. What we did in the Banking Committee, where I served, is we held not just a hearing, we held extensive hearings for months—for months. We did the same thing in the House, and we asked the Government Accountability Office to help us with an in-depth study of the credit card industry to try to decide what changes were needed. There are watchdog agencies. They came back and said these are our recommendations. Out of all those hearings came a lot of ideas too.

The Senate passed legislation. They passed legislation in the House. The banking industry didn't like it much. They complained about it. We went to conference with the House and the Senate and worked out a compromise. The banking industry didn't like it much. The regulators of the banks were required to help us implement the legislation and they had to write regulations. They had to write regulations that were true and consistent with the underlying law and they did and the banks didn't like it much. They were promulgated, some immediately, some over several months, and eventually they got the job done. I think consumers are better off. Did banks make as much as they did on credit cards? No. We know that personally in our State. But are consumers treated fairly? Yes; they are. Part of what happened was extensive hearings involving GAO, getting input from a lot of folks with different views on this, and then acting in light of the process.

I think what is different in this case, I don't believe the Banking Committee—I can't speak for other committees in the last Congress, but I don't believe the Banking Committee or other committees in the House or Senate actually had the opportunity to hold hearings and bring people in, in the last Congress, and say this is what is good about the amendment proposed by our friend from Illinois and this is what is bad. I don't think we had GAO—GAO did not have the opportunity to come in and say we were never invited to come in. We never invited them to come in on the debit card side and, therefore, their voices were not available to us, and that is unfortunate.

Here is what happened. Legislation was passed. Senator DURBIN offered it with the best of intentions. He said: We have a problem. We should fix it. Here is my suggestion. He essentially said we should regulate the marketplace. We should regulate the marketplace for debit cards. The free marketers said: No; we ought to let market solutions work, harness market forces—something I generally agree with—but in this case they were not working so he came up with an alternative and said let's see if there is another way to do this. Unfortunately, with the best of intentions, we have these unintended consequences. The question is, What do we do about it?

We have a situation where I am not sure consumers are going to be advantagued by the current law as it reads. Big banks, they will be OK. They can take care of themselves. But a lot of smaller banks, the people squawking the loudest, the folks from the community banks, they have been beating on my doors and other doors, and the folks from the credit unions, they are less able, frankly, to look out for themselves, and that is despite the intent, the explicit effort by the author of the amendment, to provide them exemption. The regulators say, frankly: Sorry. It does not work.

That suggests to me that we hit a pause button, we hit a pause button not for 2 years but at least for the next as much as 6 months and say to the regulators: OK. Do now what we should have done a year or two ago. Complete an in-depth study, look at the concerns of the merchants, look at the concerns of the consumers, look at the concerns of big banks, middle-size banks, small banks and credit unions, and come back to us with what you think to be a fair approach. You have 6 months to do it. If you can do it in less time, let's do that.

If they come back to us and say: Look, the legislation as written, current law, is fine for consumers, it is fine for institutions of all sizes and is fair to the merchants—if they come back and say this, basically, the Durbin language in the law prevails. If they say that is it, the regulators have spoken and we are done.

If they come back and say we have a problem here, these outfits, the regulators, have a period—I think it is up to 6 months—to figure out regulations that can then be implemented after the 6 months to fix the problem. Some will say how do we know they will do anything for consumers? They just did it for credit cards 2 years ago, and the bankers did not like it. They still do not like it. We have the pain in my State in the employment numbers to reflect that they didn't like it. We still live with that pain and discomfort, but who is better off? Consumers are better off. They are better off because Congress did its job. We were deliberate about it. We sought input from all sides. The regulators did their job, and it has been implemented in a prompt way.

I wish to close maybe with this thought.

There is an outfit called Michaels. We have a Michaels store not far, actually, from where my family and I live in Wilmington. They sell art supplies. It is a national chain and a pretty successful company. They were in the news big time recently—not because of a good story but because of a data breach story. A lot of folks who had accounts with them, their customer information was disclosed. There was great concern on the part of the consumers, the customers, that there had been this data breach and some of their sensitive information was going to be at risk. It involved hundreds of thousands, maybe millions of customers.

To whom did they turn to fix this problem? Did they turn to Michaels and say: You fix this problem. No, as it turns out, they didn't. Some probably did, but most probably didn't. Do you know to whom they turned? They turned to their banks. They turned to the issuers of the credit cards and said: You fix this problem. You issue a new credit card for us, and you cover this for us. And the banks did that. They were beholden to do that.

Finally, I am not here to carry the water for the banks. I think we are all here to do what we think is right. To my colleagues who are undecided on how to vote—I know some are. They don't want to choose between their two favorite children, whether it is the merchants on the one hand or the financial institutions, credit unions on the other hand. They don't have to choose between two children. They can ask themselves: What is the right thing to do? Try to understand what is in this amendment, a bipartisan amendment prepared by some of the people I most respect here in this body, and drill down on that. Listen to guys like BARNEY FRANK who don't have a dog in this fight but have a lot of knowledge, and try to make the decision they think is the right decision.

Thank you very much.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. DURBIN. How much time is remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is 13 minutes 52 seconds.

Mr. DURBIN. Is there any time remaining on the other side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Zero.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, if Senator TESTER returns to the floor and wants to speak before the vote, I will ask unanimous consent to each have 2 minutes for that purpose. Perhaps he is not going to, but I want to make this a matter of record here because I want to give him a chance to close.

Let me try to get down to basics. Have my colleagues ever pulled out one of these cards to pay for something? If you are my age, you don't pull it out as often as younger people. This morning, I was down in the carryout here, and a young woman who is a Capitol police officer bought a pack of chewing gum for $1.20 and handed over her debit card. The debit card was swiped. She took the chewing gum and walked away. The average amount that is charged by the issuing bank of her debit card is 44 cents for each transaction. How much money do we think the owner of the carryout made on that pack of gum this morning? The answer is nothing. Now repeat that over and over again across America.

What is happening is that the banks issuing these debit cards are imposing interchange fees, swipe fees, on these transactions, and the merchants and the retailers have no voice in the amount of that fee, no voice whatsoever.

The Federal Reserve did a study and asked: Well, how much does it actually cost them to process that debit transaction? The answer was 12 cents, in the range of 12 cents. The charge is 44 cents; the cost is 12 cents. Is there something wrong with this picture? It means every person buying goods at stores across America pays more to pay for this fee.

We have heard the plaintive cries of those offering this amendment of how we have to have some sympathy for these banks—these poor banks, struggling to survive. If they can't collect the maximum on their debit fee interchange fee, the swipe fee, what is going to happen to them? Well, we have already exempted, incidentally, all banks with values of $10 billion and less, so we are talking about the big boys, the big banks.

So let's ask a few basic questions.

How does the debit card interchange fee in America compare to other countries? Visa and MasterCard do business all around the world. Banks issue these all around the world. So how do we stack up? Where is the good old U.S. of A? Well, I will tell my colleagues where we stack up. We have the highest interchange fees charged by Visa and MasterCard anywhere in the world—the highest. Thank you. Can America express its gratitude any greater than to say thank you to the banks for charging us the most for using plastic?

So what do they charge in other countries? Debit interchange fees in the European Union are less than one-fifth the charge in the United States. So let's do the math: 9 cents a transaction in Europe, 44 cents here. We want to give a big, sloppy kiss to these big banks at 2 o'clock for the way they are going to treat us. But it gets better. When we go to Canada, the Visa and MasterCard debit interchange fee in Canada is zero. There is no interchange fee. Now we have people on the floor begging us to show some sympathy for these banks and give them an interchange fee, and they charge nothing in Canada—zero. That is the reality.

The biggest banks make the biggest money on this process, far and away—Chase, Bank of America, and Wells Fargo—to the tune of almost $8 billion a year. How long did they want to study interchange fees? If one is making $1.3 billion a month, one wants the study to go on for months, if not years. Get back to you later, we say to the banks. Yes, that is exactly what they want. At 2 o'clock, we will decide as a Senate whether we are going to give it to them.

This amendment, drawn up by the banks, compromises between the banks, gives to the banks exactly what they are looking for—a huge loophole to assess their interchange fees to justify what they are charging today and charge more. There is nothing in here—nothing—to protect consumers and businesses across America.

I got started in politics with a fellow named Paul Douglas. This goes back a few years. I was a college student. Douglas was a Ph.D. in economics—much smarter than I, for sure. He spent his whole life trying to pass something called truth in lending. All he wanted the banks to do was to tell their customers how much they were charging them and what interest rates. He spent 18 years battling that, and he left the Senate without getting it done. He couldn't finish it. Bill Proxmire of Wisconsin took up the battle and passed it. Paul Douglas fought those banks for 18 years.

It is a battle that has been going on a long time around here because, you see, there is a lot of power in this banking community, these financial institutions. When they come to the floor and say they want something, Congress decides, we better start talking. Rarely do they ever lose.

I guess we could say the Wall Street reform bill was a loss for them, but they deserved it. Look at the god-awful mess they put America into with their rotten practices, their stupidity and reckless conduct. We are still paying for that. We still have a lot of people out of work and businesses that failed. Many of the savings accounts of families across America are still suffering because those banks made those mistakes. And in the free market system, did they pay for their mistakes? No. The American taxpayers paid for their mistakes.

Giving credit where it is due to Senator GINGRICH, he voted against the TARP bill. He said it, and I want it to be on the record. I voted for it. I did because I was told by Ben Bernanke of the Federal Reserve and Hank Paulson of the Department of the Treasury: If you don't help these banks and they fail, you will see a worse depression than 1929. I bought it. I voted for it. Almost $800 billion in bailouts to these banks. I was seething to think we were going to spend taxpayers' money to help these banks be rescued from their own stupidity and their own greed. We did it.

The three biggest banks involved here—some $95 billion we sent to them. Well, they are back. They are looking for the second installment on their payment, this time not from the taxpayers, this time from consumers and businesses across America. What they are asking us for, the biggest banks, the three biggest ones, is almost $8 billion a year in these interchange fees.

We have a chance now to try to bring some balance to this conversation. We have a chance to finally stand up for small businesses and merchants and consumers across America who have been victimized by the credit card companies and the big banks for too long. Can this Senate stand up once a year, once a decade for consumers across America against these financial institutions? That is what is at stake with this amendment. I know it is going to be a heated vote because my poor colleagues have been beaten to a pulp by both sides by those who feel very intensely about this issue.

I wish to credit my colleague from Montana because he told me at the outside—when I said, JON, please don't do this, he said, I believe it. And, JON, I admire you for doing it. I still do. Even though I disagree with you, I admire you for doing it. You are a man of conviction and principle and a great Senator.

But this is a historic moment in the Senate. It is a moment where we will decide whether for once the big banks are going to lose and the consumers are going to win; whether we are going to reduce the cost of these transactions and help consumers across America and small businesses across America make the profit they need.

Some people say: Well, this hasn't been studied enough. For 11 months now, the Federal Reserve has been studying this, the best economists, the best minds there. They have entertained 11,000 comments. They have heard everything under the Sun. They have heard it all. In a matter of days, they are set to issue a rule—a rule which no one has seen, a rule which the banks don't want anyone to see. They don't want this rule to see the light of day, and that is why they are here today—to stop the Federal Reserve from issuing a rule that may cost them in terms of their bottom line.

It is our choice now. It is our choice whether these banks are going to prevail. History will record the strength of consumers and small businesses across America against the Wall Street banks that take away more than half of the interchange fees on debit cards that are collected across America.

I hope my colleagues will stand by the decision we made a year ago. I hope they will give each of us an opportunity to see this rule come into effect and from that build on it a stronger, growing economy, one that is fair—an economy where interchange fees have been dictated by the big banks and credit card companies for too long.

I reserve the remainder of my time. How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARDIN). The remaining time is 3 minutes 55 seconds.

Mr. DURBIN. I mentioned on the floor earlier that I would like to give to my colleague 2 minutes, and then I will take 2 minutes, and that will be it. So I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TESTER. Mr. President, just to clarify, I have 2 minutes, Senator DURBIN has 2 minutes, and then we vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. That was the order just entered.

Mr. TESTER. God bless the U.S.A.

Mr. President, let me say this, first of all, to the folks in the gallery and the Members who are still in their offices. Look at me. Do I look like a banker? Senator CORKER and I drew up this amendment. The banks did not draw up this amendment. We drew it up with the help of Senators HAGAN, CRAPO, and BENNET.

As is usual, Senator DURBIN and I agree on 90 percent, and there is 10 percent on which we disagree. Do I think swipe fees need to be regulated? Of course. But the problem with his amendment is that the exemption on community banks and credit unions under $10 billion does not work. It doesn't work. I have read all the quotes from Bernanke and Bair and the head of the OCC and the NCUA and all of them. They have said that they don't know how to make a two-tiered system work because the free market system will overrule it, and that is the way it ought to be in this country.

So the bottom line is, I look at this from a rural perspective and the impact the Federal Government has on rural America, and while we are trying to solve one problem, we are creating two or three others. I could care less about the Wall Street banks. They are going to do fine. But I will tell my colleagues, if we lose the banks in our small towns in Montana or Wyoming or Tennessee, then we can put another nail in the coffin of rural America.

With that, I yield the floor to the good Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. CORKER. Mr. President, I couldn't agree more. It is amazing that we passed this 2,400-page bill a year ago, and on all the tough decisions, we deferred to the regulators. The regulators are now creating all kinds of rules because we knew they had some wisdom we didn't have. Yet, in this case, every single regulator involved is telling us that the way the Durbin amendment was written, we are going to damage the community banks and credit unions and that it won't work.

So it is amazing that in this case where the very people who regulate tell us to please change this, it won't work, we are saying no, we are not going to; this is going to benefit Wall Street. That is not the case. This amendment puts the Durbin amendment in the middle of the road where it needs to be, and I hope everyone will support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I understand I have 2 minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 2 minutes.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, if my colleagues are interested in smalltown America, they should be interested in the businesses that operate in smalltown America, and they are begging us to vote no on the Tester-Corker amendment.

I happen to live in a town of 120,000 people. It is a little bit larger than my colleague's hometown in Montana, but I can tell you what the businesses there are saying. I can tell you what Wendy Chronister is saying, who owns the Qik-n-EZ gas stations. She is saying to me: Give me a break. They are hitting us so hard with these debit interchange fees.

We have letters put in the RECORD from military base exchanges which say this is the fastest growing, uncontrollable cost they are facing. This is a problem which the credit card companies and the banks have wanted to ignore and now this amendment wants to delay for 6 months, a year, or longer.

In terms of trusting the regulators, I am afraid the banking interests that wrote this amendment did not trust them to even issue the rule. You had to call this debate before they issued the rule. You do not know what the number is going to be on the interchange fee, but you had to stop them in their tracks.

If you will go look in the corridors and rooms around Capitol Hill, you will not find a lot of small town bankers. You will find the biggest banks in America waiting in the wings, praying, putting in a billion dollars' worth of prayers that this amendment is going to pass.

I do not question the intentions or motives of Senators TESTER or CORKER. I never will. But I can tell you, the effect of this amendment is going to be giving to those big banks and those credit card companies a windfall of profit they do not deserve.

If the interchange fee is zero in Canada, why is it 44 cents here? Can we stand up, representing the people of this country, and say that is fundamentally unfair; you have to treat our consumers and merchants fairly? If we cannot stand up and do that, why are we here? To do the bidding of the banks and the credit card companies? I hope not. I hope we are here to stand up for economic fairness and for consumers and small businesses across America begging us to defeat this amendment.

I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CORKER. Mr. President, I would like to ask unanimous consent to—

Mr. DURBIN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The bill clerk continued with the call of the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Republican leader is recognized.

(Purpose: To reform the regulatory process to ensure that small businesses are free to compete and to create jobs, and for other purposes)

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, on behalf of Senators SNOWE and COBURN, I ask unanimous consent to temporarily set aside the pending amendment so I may call up my amendment No. 390, which is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The assistant bill clerk read as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The amendment is printed in the RECORD of June 7, 2011, under "Text of Amendments.")

AMENDMENT NO. 392

Mr. REID. Mr. President, it is my understanding the order before the Senate is that we are going to vote on the Tester amendment; is that right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TESTER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have already been ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 393 WITHDRAWN

NOT VOTING—1

Lieberman

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 54, the nays are 45. Under the previous order requiring 60 votes for the adoption of this amendment, the amendment is rejected.

Under the previous order, the motion to reconsider is considered made and laid upon the table.

• Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I regret that for personal reasons I could not be present in the Senate for the vote on the Tester amendment No. 392 to the Economic Development Revitalization Act, S. 782. If I had been present, I would have voted in favor of the Tester amendment. •

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DEMINT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mrs. BOXER. I Object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The legislative clerk continued calling the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I have spoken with the chairman, Senator BOXER, and a number of other Senators, including Senator SNOWE, who has offered her amendment on this bill. She has not determined yet how much time she wants. We will work with her to make sure she has some time to speak on it.

Senator DEMINT has indicated that he has an amendment he wants to offer. Senator PAUL has indicated that he has an amendment he wants to offer. And Senator BOXER will give a statement for however long she feels is appropriate, as soon as the amendments are offered by Senators DEMINT and PAUL. They will debate those at a later time.

We also have people on our side who want to offer amendments. To keep this fairly orderly, we will have two amendments on our side to be offered, and then we will sit down and talk about it. At that time, there will be five amendments pending. We are trying to move forward with this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator DEMINT be recognized to offer an amendment, and then that Senator PAUL be recognized to offer an amendment, and then Senator BOXER be recognized to speak for whatever time she feels is appropriate, and we will have a couple offered on the Democratic side, and then we will reassess where we are after that.

The only thing is, so that we know where we start on this, we want to make sure the amendments offered by our Republican colleagues and our Democratic colleagues initially be not divisible. I ask unanimous consent that that be the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 394

Mr. DEMINT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to set aside the pending amendment and call up amendment No. 394, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DEMINT] proposes an amendment numbered 394.

Mr. DEMINT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To repeal the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act)

At the end, add the following:

SEC. 21. REPEAL OF THE DODD-FRANK WALL STREET REFORM AND CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT.

The Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act (Public Law 111-203) is repealed, and the provisions of law amended by such Act are revived or restored as if such Act had not been enacted.

Mr. DEMINT. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

AMENDMENT NO. 414

Mr. PAUL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to set aside the pending amendment and call up amendment No. 414.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows: The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAUL] proposes an amendment numbered 414.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To implement the President's request to increase the statutory limit on the public debt)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. ____ . INCREASE IN STATUTORY LIMIT ON THE PUBLIC DEBT.

(a) FINDING.—The Congress finds that the President's budget proposal, Budget of the United States Government, Fiscal Year 2012, necessitates an increase in the statutory debt limit of $2,406,000,000,000.

(b) INCREASE.—Subsection (b) of section 3101 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by striking out the dollar limitation contained in such subsection and inserting in lieu thereof “$16,700,000,000,000”.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. President, this amendment will raise the debt ceiling by $2.4 trillion. This will comply with the President's budget. Many on the other side asked for a clean vote on raising the debt ceiling. Because I really want to get along and go along, I want to make this vote available for those who wish to raise the debt ceiling.

I will vote “no,” but I wanted this to be under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, let the games begin. That is what is going on here. I have full respect for my colleague, but you can tell from his tone and tenor that Senator PAUL finds it amusing he is offering a clean debt ceiling increase that he is voting against. He is offering an amendment he is voting against, when we know we are in discussions with the President, and with the Vice President, and discussions with the Gang of Six to try to figure out a way that we can come together, not have “gotcha” votes on the Senate floor. It is outrageous.

I will tell you why it is outrageous. We have an underlying bill here that you have been very helpful with, Mr. President—S. 782—the Economic Development Revitalization Act of 2011, which will reauthorize a very important program that has been in place in this great Nation since 1965. It was last passed when George W. Bush was President. It passed this Senate unanimously, without all these amendments that are going nowhere.

There are 27 amendments as of last night—actually, it is probably many more now. We know this game because we played it before, when Senator LANDRIEU stood where I am and tried to get a small business bill through here, which would have created thousands of jobs in this Nation.

Well, here we are. We have a bill that came out of the Environment and Public Works Committee with a strong vote. We had one dissent. Senator INHOFE is my primary cosponsor. For 50 years, this EDA program, the Economic Development Administration, has created jobs and spurred growth in economically hard-hit communities.

We know the struggle we are having in coming out of the greatest recession since the Great Depression. I remind the people within the sound of my voice that when President Obama took over, this country was bleeding almost a million jobs a month. We are getting back on our feet. We got the auto industry back on its feet. We are getting manufacturing back on its feet, but it is too slow. We have to do more. Once in a while, we get an opportunity to work with small businesses, the private sector, local government, and attract funds from nonprofit organizations and bring jobs and important work to our communities. This is one way.

An arm of the Chamber of Commerce wrote me a letter yesterday saying how important this work is. The Business Civic Leadership Center said:

EDA has served as a valuable partner in many communities that we have worked in including San Jose, California; Seattle, Washington; Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Mobile, Alabama; New Orleans, Louisiana; Atlanta, Georgia; Boca Raton, Florida; Minneapolis, Minnesota; Newark, New Jersey, and many others.

It was signed by Stephen Jordan, executive director of the Business Civic Leadership Center of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

This is a bill everybody wants, but games are being played in the Senate—I guess just for the fun of it, to stop us from doing our job. What is our No. 1 job? To create jobs. What does the AFL-CIO say? You have business and labor. They say:

EDA has established an admirable track record in assisting economically troubled low-income communities with limited job opportunities by putting their investments to good use in promoting needed job creation and industrial and commercial development.

That is signed by William Samuel, director, Government Affairs Department, AFL-CIO, and that is dated yesterday.

Why is business and labor supporting this bill? Why do they want us to stop the games and pass this bill? Because they want jobs for businesses, and businesses want the work.

Now let's take a look at other people who were supportive in addition to the Chamber of Commerce and AFL-CIO: U.S. Conference of Mayors, American Public Works Association, National Association of Counties—I was a county supervisor and belonged to that organization many years ago. If you want bipartisanship, go to the National Association of Counties. There are Democrats, Republicans, Independents—people of every stripe, liberal, moderate, conservative. They all come together. Why? Because business and labor are together, and everybody wants jobs.

Why do we have to face an amendment by my friend Senator OLYMPIA SNOWE on deregulation—a bill that hasn't had one hearing in any committee and will, in many ways, eviscerate the important rules and regulations that protect public health and the environment? We should have a hearing on that bill. I am sure we can work together and make it a wonderful bill. Instead, it is offered on this bill.

Mr. PAUL. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mrs. BOXER. Not at this time, but I will yield when I conclude.

We have a bill that will create tens of thousands of jobs, and we have the first amendment offered by my good friend, which has not had one hearing, and it repeals all kinds of protections for the public health.

I don't get it. There is only one thing that I can get, with all these amendments, we have amendments on the debt ceiling that have nothing to do with this bill. This bill will create income for taxpayers, because when jobs are created and people work, they pay their fair share of taxes. This bill does not deserve to be treated this way when it passed almost unanimously out of the committee and it is totally bipartisan and has been in place for almost 50 years. Yet that is where we are.

Every Senator has the right to do what he or she wants. They can play games. They can have fun. But I care about the people I represent, and they need jobs. I care about them whether they are in Kentucky, California, or Maryland—any State in this Union. We are United States Senators. We should care about the people, not get up here and play games.

EDA uses limited Federal dollars to leverage large amounts of private sector investment. It is the little spark that creates economic activity in areas that are distressed, and it creates these jobs all across the country. Every dollar of EDA investment attracts nearly $7.

Let me show some other charts. When we vote for this bill—and this is an authorization, by the way, not an appropriation. We have authorized it at $500 million. Historically, in the last couple of years, it has been funded at about $300 million, $250 million. But every dollar attracts $7 from the private sector, and that is a fact. It was documented in congressional testimony made on March 3, 2011. So that is the history of this EDA.

People say, well, how much, Senator, do these jobs cost—each job? Well, here is what we know. One job is created for every $2,000 to $4,000 invested. So it is an average of somewhere around $3,000 a job. That is a good return on our investment. We know that between 220 and 500 jobs are created for every $1 million of EDA investment.

Here is what we know. Between 2005 and 2010, 450,000 jobs were created by these investments and 85,000 jobs were saved. Everybody in this Senate, I think—though I could be wrong—if asked what is the most important thing we have to do today, would answer it is to help spur job creation in the private sector. Most of these are in cooperation with the private sector. Sometimes they are sewer projects or water projects that are needed by the private sector.

Let me cite some examples of that. Since we are authorizing this, at this stage, at $500 million, one might ask, how many jobs would be created each year. It looks as if it would create nearly 200,000 jobs per year and between 430,000 and 1 million jobs over the life of the bill.

But let me use some examples, because this isn't rhetoric. This is a program that has been in place since 1965. The city of Dixon, in my home State, got $3 million for a water system that will increase the city's water supply and their storage capacity, which will eliminate a major impediment to planned development and expansion of the city's commercial industrial areas. When you don't have enough water, you can't expand. I learned that when I was a county supervisor. You need to make sure there is adequate water, adequate electricity, and adequate sewerage. You have to make sure there are adequate roads. All these things are necessary for development and job creation.

This project is expected to create 1,000 jobs and leverage $40 million in private investment. So we have a $3 million investment to improve the water system and it is going to leverage $40 million. I call that a good deal for our taxpayers and a great deal for the American people to see jobs created. So we have 1,000 jobs—good jobs—created. That means 1,000 dads and moms bringing home paychecks for their families.

But what do we have here? The same thing Senator LANDRIEU had to put up with—amendment after amendment after amendment that has nothing to do with this bill. We even had an amendment from a Republican friend that would do away with this entire agency. Unbelievable.

The city of Shafter in my State, $2 million for sewer and water improvements to serve the East Shafter Logistical Center, which will allow development of an additional 600 acres to enable continued growth of the center and support a multimodal transportation hub. This project is expected to create 1,400 jobs and leverage $200 million in private investment. So that is a $2 million investment that is going to be leveraged, leveraged, leveraged.

We are going through a time when we have to cut spending, and I love when the Republicans lecture Democrats about that. Wait till you hear what goes on here. Guess which party was the only party that balanced the budget and created a surplus in recent memory. The Democrats, with Bill Clinton. So don't lecture us about how to balance budgets. We know how to do it. And guess what. We know how to do it while creating 23 million jobs. So I don't need to hear the lectures, because they are misplaced. Talk to yourself. You are the ones who didn't say a word when George Bush did a tax cut for billionaires and put it all on the credit card. Now you still want to extend those tax cuts and bleed the revenues.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mrs. BOXER. I will not yield. I have stated that before, but thank you for asking.

Here is where we are. I have to reiterate so I don't lose my place. Under Bill Clinton, the Democrats balanced the budget, created surpluses and 23 million jobs. George Bush came in and he held a press conference—I saw a rerun of it last night—and said, we don't need surpluses. This money belongs to the American people. Well, he didn't say what he meant. He meant it belongs to rich people—superrich people who earn over a billion and over a million dollars. He gave away the store. Then he went to war—two wars—and put that on the credit card. My friends on the other side never once said, Gee, I can't raise the debt ceiling to pay the debt. They all voted to pay. Almost to a person, they all voted to raise the debt ceiling, and it was doubled from when Bill Clinton was in office. But now, after George Bush left a mess—a god-awful mess in the debt and the deficit, and he handed President Obama a $1.2 trillion deficit—all of a sudden they blame President Obama for all of this.

The American people get it. They do not buy that. They understand this. They are not happy where we are, and they shouldn't be, but they know where the problem started. You know why. Because you can't rewrite history. You could try, but those deficits and those debts—those numbers—are in the books. Unless you erase them, they will remain in the books. I don't care whether it is talking about Paul Revere's ride or the deficits, that is history.

Let me show the deficits we had when we were in control. We got it down to zero, and we got surpluses and created 23 million jobs. That all was erased when we entered a situation in the last couple of years of the Bush administration, where jobs were bleeding at 800,000 a month, 700,000 a month, credit was frozen, and the automobile industry was in the tank. President Obama took action, but this recovery is tough. It has been the worst recession since the Great Depression.

This is what I know. We can do this if we work together, dare I say it? We can adopt a framework that understands billionaires and millionaires don't need their tax cuts now. We can get some more revenues in here and cut the fat and cut the duplication and go after the people who don't pay the taxes they owe. We can end the war in Afghanistan and save $1 trillion over 10 years. I can come up with $4 trillion easily. Allow Medicare to negotiate with the drug companies for lower prices. How is that—$200 billion?

But, no, instead, there is demagoguery and there are attempts to bring down bills such as this—clean, nice bills that will do everything we know we need to do now—leverage our spare dollars, attract public investment, create jobs and create jobs. But, no, we are facing a host of amendments, and I don't find it funny. I find it sad that we cannot come together.

I have a city in California, a very fast-growing city in the Silicon Valley—San Jose. We got them, through this program, $3 million for the renovation and expansion of the Center for Employment Training. What do they do there? They teach skills so when there are certain job losses going on, we have people with these new skills. We increased that center's capacity by 860 students. We expanded access to a GED, so people who didn't finish high school could get their diploma. We taught them how to speak better, how to read better, and we taught them small business entrepreneurship. This is what we are expanding to new people.

This project is going to create 4,900 jobs and leverage $3 million in private investment. This project was one to one. It was $3 million in public investment, $3 million in private investment, with 4,900 new jobs predicted.

By the way, these are not earmarks. We have six regional offices and there are applications made for these grants. They are made by the EDA and it is under the Commerce Department.

On the west coast, in 2003—to prove some points here—EDA invested $1.8 million in the construction of a water and energy technology incubator in the Central Valley of California. For those who don't know the Central Valley, it is where you get a lot of your fruits and vegetables. They are struggling in this downturn. In 2003, according to EDA, the incubator has housed more than 15 entrepreneurs since it opened, and those entrepreneurs have obtained over $17 million in private capital and created jobs for the Central Valley. So a $1.8 million investment in the construction of a more than 2,300 square foot incubator for a water and energy technology business, and look what happened. From that small investment, it attracted $17 million. That is a huge leverage—a huge leverage.

You all know Boeing Company. In order to help mitigate the Boeing Company's decision to reduce manufacturing jobs in Renton, WA, EDA invested $2 million in 2006 to help build infrastructure to serve the commercial redevelopment of a 42-acre former aircraft manufacturing site. The redevelopment has created a mixed-use campus used by businesses focusing on commercial services, high-tech and life sciences, and helped create 2,500 jobs.

In the Midwest—I talked about this yesterday—in the city of Duluth, MN, they did something terrific there. They gave a grant of $3.5 million, matched by a city grant of $2.3 million, and they set up this aviation business—the Duluth Aviation Business Incubator at the Duluth Airport. This investment helped a company named Cirrus Aircraft grow from a handful of employees to a thousand employees by 2008. This incubator is now leased to Cirrus Design Corporation, which has the largest share of the worldwide general aviation market.

What we are talking about here is planting a seed of economic development, and that seed attracts more seeds from the private sector, from the local people, from the nonprofits. At the end of the day, what have we done by that little seed? It has grown. And this has been happening since 1965 when this program was created.

By the way, you will be shocked to know it was authorized at the same amount of money in 1965—$500 million. So the fact is this isn't a program that has grown and grown; it has stayed the same. That means, if you put inflation into the equation, it has been dramatically cut to a tiny part of what it once was for the country, but it is a beautiful part of our economic growth.

What do we need today? Jobs. What is the second thing we need? Jobs. And what is the third thing we need? Jobs. I am not amused by 27, 28, 29, 30 amendments, some of which have nothing to do with what we are talking about.

One of my friends on the other side of the aisle has an amendment that is pending to repeal banking reform—everything we did and worked on. I guess he wants to go back to the days when the banks got bigger, bigger, gambled with our money, and we almost lost capitalism in this country. OK, that is his right. Why is he doing it on this bill, without a hearing?

Another colleague has an amendment to end the regulations, I say to my friend, that protect the health and safety of the people. Not one hearing on it.

I think the American people have to wake up, so I am saying: Wake up, America, today. Wake up and pay attention to what is happening.

We have a bill on the Senate floor that is meant to do one thing—create jobs in areas that have been hard hit by this bad economy. Why are the Republicans stalling it, hurting it, putting forward amendments that have nothing to do with it? We have to ask that question. They voted for it under George Bush unanimously, the same program. They voted for it nearly unanimously out of our committee, I say to my friend who is a senior member and a great chairman of the subcommittee on our committee—they voted for it. Now they are delaying it and offering all these poison pill amendments to it.

This is the second time they have done it. America, you have to wake up. It is the second time they have done it. They did it to the small business bill. They hurt small business. They are doing it to this bill. They are hurting job creation, and they are hurting small business again, and they are hurting big business. I said before, one of the provisions helped Boeing.

Maytag, there is another company you know the name of. In 2007 the Maytag plant, headquartered in Newton, IA, which employed 1,800 factory workers, was closed. By 2008 the city identified two new manufacturing operations that could be located on the old site: TPI Composites, a wind turbine blade manufacturer, and Trinity Structural Towers, a manufacturer of massive steel towers for windmills.

Can I ask my friend if he would like some time on this? I am going to continue telling the Maytag story. When I finish, I am going to turn to a very important member of the committee, Senator CARDIN, for some remarks.

EDA invested $580,000 in 2008 for grading, site preparation, and surfacing for a wind tower storage facility that was leased to Trinity. That $580,000 attracted $21 million in public investment. That same year we saw other investments in Iowa.

I am going to stop and yield the floor so my friend can ask unanimous consent that he be recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MERKLEY). The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. President, I believe we are on the pending amendment?

Mrs. BOXER. Right now we are on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. CARDIN. Let me compliment Senator BOXER for her leadership on this bill. She pointed out this EDA bill brought forward is about jobs. It is about offering jobs in underserved areas. These are areas in which it is difficult to create jobs in good times, but in hard times they get hit even harder. The EDA program leverages a small amount of public support for private sector investment that creates jobs in underserved areas.

In my State of Maryland, EDA projects have been very successful in bringing jobs to the rural parts of Maryland—to western Maryland and to our eastern shore. They have leveraged private sector investment, and we maintained and created jobs.

Yesterday on the Senate floor I gave specific examples of EDA projects in western Maryland and on the eastern shore of Maryland. I talked about an old manufacturing plant that was saved under an EDA grant, leveraged 10 to 1 with private sector investment, saving over 100 jobs and creating another 20. These are jobs that are important for economic growth in our community.

We all understand this recovery has been a very difficult one for us to get moving at the pace of job growth that we know we need for this Nation. We all talk about what we can do for our budget deficit, but I hope we all would agree the most important thing we can do would be to create more jobs.

The majority leader has brought forward three major bills now to create jobs. We would like to have a little cooperation from the other side of the aisle so we can get these bills to the President for signature. The FAA bill, which deals with the modernizing of our air system, which will create jobs and will make air transportation safer, is caught up in conference. Let's get it done and bring it to the President. We had the SBIR bill before us that will help small businesses that are in innovation as far as job growth. We had so many nongermane amendments offered to it we could not get it to the floor of the Senate.

Now we have an EDA bill that came out of the Environment and Public Works Committee by a near unanimous vote, that over the history of the EDA has not been controversial in its reauthorization, and now it looks as if we are going to see numerous nongermane amendments offered in an effort, basically, to just ignore the importance of the underlying bill that can create jobs for our communities.

I urge my colleagues to, yes, come forward with their amendments. Let's debate them. If they are not relevant to creating jobs under the EDA bill, then let's be reasonable. Let's not have a whole series of amendments that are totally beyond the scope of this bill, such as the debt limit issue or repeal of our financial reform of last year. I don't mind debating those issues, but they should not be debated at this particular moment.

I do hope we will be able to get to the reauthorization bill. I pointed out yesterday that one of the highest priorities, from our local people in Maryland, on need was additional help from the Federal Government for planning dollars. Planning dollars allow local communities to develop a strategy that can help them with economic growth in a community.

I can tell you, having recently been out to Cumberland, MD—a great and beautiful part of our State of Maryland—they used to have a lot of manufacturing jobs. Many of those jobs have moved on. They do have a strategy, but they need the planning help to put that together so they can come forward with a game plan, attracting more private sector interest in order to create more job opportunities for families to stay in the western part of our State. It is that type of assistance that is critically important to America.

I come back to the point Senator BOXER raised. The purpose of this bill is to create jobs—save jobs and create jobs. We need to get on with that business in the Senate. That is why I am proud to have worked on the Environment and Public Works Committee to bring this bill forward. I hope my colleagues will be judicious with their amendments so we can get this bill through the Senate, to the House, so we will have an opportunity to get this to the President in the very near future.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. BOXER). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. CARDIN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 407

Mr. CARDIN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside so I can offer amendment No. 407.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. CARDIN] proposes an amendment numbered 407.

Mr. CARDIN. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To require the FHA to equitably treat homebuyers who have repaid in full their FHA-insured mortgages)

At the end, add the following:

SEC. 22. PROHIBITION ON INTEREST CHARGES FOR ON-TIME PRINCIPAL PAYMENTS.

Section 203 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1709) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(z) PROHIBITION ON INTEREST CHARGES FOR ON-TIME PRINCIPAL PAYMENTS.—Each mortgagee (or servicer) with respect to a mortgage under this section may not impose, nor may the Secretary require the imposition of, any interest charge on such a mortgage as a result of the loss of any time period provided by the mortgagee (or servicer) within which the mortgagor may fully repay the principal balance amount of the mortgage, with respect to—

“(1) any days in the billing cycle that precedes the most recent billing cycle in which such amounts were repaid; or

“(2) any amounts repaid in the current billing cycle that were repaid within such time period.”.

Mr. CARDIN. Madam President, I will speak at a different point about this amendment, but it is an equitable amendment dealing with the interest charges on government loans that are paid off in the middle of the month to prorate the interest. It is a consumer issue. I think it will help American families. I will explain it in more detail in a later part of the proceedings.

With that, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant editor of the Daily Digest proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MERKLEY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 428

Mr. MERKLEY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to set aside the pending amendment so I may call up amendment No. 428, which is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The assistant editor of the Daily Digest read as follows:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MERKLEY], for himself and Ms. SNOWE, proposes an amendment numbered 428.

Mr. MERKLEY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To establish clear regulatory standards for mortgage servicers, and for other purposes)

At the end, add the following:

Mr. MERKLEY. Madam President, I wish to speak to the bill before us on the Economic Development Administration.

I rise specifically to talk about the issue that is on the minds of all Americans; that is, the topic of jobs. Unemployment is far too high. My home State unemployment is very high, and that is before we count all the folks who are underemployed—those who have found some type of part-time work, but it is not enough to support their families.

We all know how worried Americans are about this. It goes to the heart of their financial foundations, the success of their families, and it should be our top focus.

The good news is that the bill before us creates jobs and stimulates the economy in our towns and regions that need help the most. Economic Development Administration assistance is targeted to both rural and urban areas experiencing high unemployment, low income, a natural disaster or other severe economic distress. It does this at a low cost and gets the most bang for our buck.

The bill encourages private sector investment. Indeed, for every $1 the government spends on these projects, we leverage $7 in private investment. That is terrific leverage for our national investment.

With national unemployment still above 9 percent and with extreme storms causing destruction around the Nation, our support in these regions matters now more than ever. Whether a town is recovering from a plant closure or a flood, it is critical that the community invest in planning for their new economic future. The kind of assistance provided by the Economic Development Administration is critical to promoting economic growth and job creation, particularly in small communities.

I wish to share an example from my home State in the town of Vernonia, OR. It is a small community in the northern part of our State that was devastated by heavy flooding in 2007. Similar to many of the rural communities that are helped by these grants, Vernonia is too small to have dedicated staff to help them rebuild the local economy, and that is where the EDA has a great role to play. Through two EDA programs, the Federal Government was able to step in and help by partnering with local governments and private business, and today Vernonia is doing much better. As the executive director of that area's economic development district said: "We would be lost without the EDA."

Take another example regarding the timber industry in Oregon, hit hard by declining demand because the housing market is in the ditch. The timber companies and their workers are struggling, but they have two things on their side: great workers and great natural resources. With the help of grants from the EDA, one of those lumber mills on the Klamath Reservation has been turned into a new biomass plant, producing green energy for the region, bringing new economic activity to the Klamath Reservation and creating and saving jobs for Oregonians.

Furthermore, the EDA can continue to help our timber companies and other similar businesses plan for the future and play a key role in helping communities by coordinating between private companies and the Forest Service. The EDA can help these companies project what timber contracts are likely to come down the road and how they can tailor their business model to grow accordingly.

EDA investments are a proven path to retaining or creating new private sector job opportunities and helping small businesses diversify or expand. In fact, from 2005 to 2010, EDA projects led directly to the creation of more than 300,000 jobs—and this doesn't even count the many thousands more jobs that were created by those seven private dollars for every public dollar.

Without question, the EDA represents an efficient and cost-effective way to help distressed regions overcome the challenges they are facing and build a new foundation for job growth in our communities.

I urge my colleagues to pass this bill and to put our country back on the path to creating jobs.

Mr. CARDIN. Madam President, earlier today, I voted against the interchange fee amendment, Senate amendment No. 392 offered by the junior Senator from Montana and I would like to explain why. Before I do that, I would like to acknowledge two important points about Senator TESTER. First, I appreciate the fact that he made significant changes to his amendment in an attempt to reach a middle ground on this issue. And the concern he has for small community banks and credit unions is beyond question. Having said that, I did not reach the same conclusion he reached that we should delay the regulatory process with regard to interchange fees.

Most of the concern raised has been expressed against the Federal Reserve's December 2010 draft interchange fee rulemaking. It was a draft proposal. Let me repeat that: it was a draft proposal. The Federal Reserve received 11,000 comments on the draft rulemaking. The final rulemaking, due any day and scheduled to take effect in July, will reflect those comments and suggestions. We need to let the regulatory process work. If the final rule doesn't work as Congress intended, we have a number of options to fix it, up to and including a congressional resolution of disapproval. If the Senate had approved the Tester amendment, it may have been "fixing" a problem that doesn't exist.

The Federal Reserve's rulemaking was required by a provision contained in the Wall Street reform bill Congress passed last year. The senior Senator from Illinois was the author of that provision. He modified it to exempt smaller banks and credit unions with assets under $10 billion. Now we are being told the exemption is unworkable. Again, we haven't seen the final rule yet but I don't agree with the premise.

Andrew Kahr is a leading financial services expert. He was the founder and chief executive officer of First Deposit Corp, which later became Provident. He recently laid out the following arguments, which I find cogent, on the American Banker Web site:

One argument is that the clearing networks, of which there are only four that matter, will not support the "two-tier" interchange system . . . Ridiculous. Visa is the largest of the networks. It's already announced that it will implement Durbin. (Maybe this is an object lesson as to why Visa remains No. 1.)

For the small banks, MasterCard is the only other significant player. If MasterCard finds it politic not to add one more wrinkle to a skein of interchange levels that is already of Byzantine complexity, then let the small banks gravitate to Visa in order to benefit from Durbin.

A second argument of the big-bank lobbyists is that merchants will reject the debit cards of small banks if these carry a 1 percent interchange cost, versus 0.3 percent for the large banks. Really? Then why don't these merchants reject all credit cards, with interchange of 2 percent or more, if the customer could instead use a debit card? When is the last time a merchant politely asked you whether you could pay with a debit card instead of a credit card?

Mr. Kahr concludes that if interchange fee revenue for the big banks drops but stays the same for the small banks and credit unions, the small banks will reap a competitive advantage. They will be able to impose lower fees, pay more interest, and give greater rewards to depositors. As he put it, "anything that reduces revenue for big banks but not for small ones should help the latter compete more effectively against the former."

Here is why I supported Senator DURBIN's amendment to the Wall Street reform bill to regulate these fees in the first place. Banks do not compete with each other on the fees that merchants pay them for debit card use. Instead, Visa and MasterCard fix fee rates on behalf of all banks. There is no naturally occurring market force that keeps interchange fees at reasonable levels. The Visa and MasterCard duopoly is so dominant that merchants cannot refuse to accept their cards. Consequently, Visa and MasterCard don't lower interchange fees—they raise them, to entice banks to issue more of their cards. Retail merchants have no leverage to stop this escalation. As a result, the U.S. has the highest debit interchange fees in the world, averaging 1.14 percent of each transaction and amounting to over $16 billion per year. These fees affect merchants, universities, charities, government agencies, and everyone else who accepts debit cards as payment. The fees end up getting passed on to consumers in the form of higher retail prices for everything from groceries to gas to textbooks.

The Durbin provision stipulated that fees set by Visa and MasterCard on behalf of big issuing banks must be reasonable and proportional to costs incurred by the issuer that are "specific to a particular electronic debit transaction." Some argue this is too narrow. The problem with the Tester amendment, well-intentioned as it may have been, is that it was too broad. It directed the Federal Reserve to let Visa and MasterCard set fee rates to "all fixed and incremental costs associated with debit card transactions and program operations." The term "program operations" wasn't further defined and could have created a potentially enormous loophole. Rates could actually go higher under this standard.

I appreciate the hard work the junior senator from Montana put into his amendment. If the Federal Reserve's final rule truly presents problems for community banks and credit unions, I will join him in the effort to fix it. For the time being, I think we should let the regulatory process proceed and that's why I opposed the amendment. We helped out the banks; now it is time to help out consumers and America's small businesses.

Thank you, Madam President, and I note the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant editor of the Daily Digest proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MERKLEY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The remarks of Mr. WEBB and Mr. CORKER pertaining to the introduction of S.J. Res. 18 are printed in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

Mr. CORKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CORKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CORKER. Mr. President, noticing that there is nothing happening on the floor, I want to come down and talk a little bit about the vote that just occurred on the Tester-Corker amendment.

Obviously, I was on the losing side of this debate, but as we went back to our office, I did want to say that one of the folks I have worked with a long time noted that this may be the first time in a long time in the Senate where we had a real bipartisan debate, where we had people on both sides of the aisle, on both sides of the issue in large numbers. While we came up short from my standpoint on the vote—the other side obviously did not come up short—I want to say that I see a glimmer of hope in that regardless of how the outcome may have been on this particular vote—and again, I worked hard to try to pass an amendment that I thought was good policy—the fact is, if you really look at the vote count, I cannot remember in a long time a vote on a contentious piece of legislation such as this where there were so many people in the majority and minority, on both sides of the issue, just evaluating the policy on the grounds on which it was coming forward. So for what is it worth, I thought that was an interesting observation.

I want to say to those people who supported the Tester-Corker amendment that I thank them very much for listening and working with us to try to pass the legislation. And for those people who voted against it, I thank them for the way in which this debate was conducted. Again, it has been a long time since I remember something like this on the floor where you had such a split vote on both sides of the aisle. I think that is progress. I just wanted to note that.

Certainly to all of those who were actively engaged in this debate on both sides of it, I think that in itself, while we did not prevail in the legislation itself, from the standpoint of the Senate, not myself, I think that is an accomplishment worth noting.

I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. HAGAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, our economic situation grows more dire by the day. Our unemployment rate has gone back up to 9.1 percent. Last month, only 54,000 jobs were created. You have to create over 125,000 to stay even. Housing prices remain in free fall. Since 2007, home values declined by more than they did during the Great Depression. In large part due to QE2, Americans are facing higher gas prices and higher food prices that are cutting into their family budgets. Now there is increasing pressure for a QE3, which would only accelerate commodity inflation.

Looming over all of this is our national debt. We have a national debt of nearly $14.5 trillion. That actually understates things. This is how USA Today calculated it earlier this week. This chart says it all. Let me read that: "U.S. owes $62 trillion."

Let me read that again so it sinks in: "U.S. owes $62 trillion."

Numbers such as this are frightening to the American people. They are numbers fit for a banana republic, not the great United States of America, and they are numbers that demand a balanced budget amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

I do not say this lightly. Our Constitution has served us well, working over more than two centuries to guarantee and extend liberty and equal rights of American citizens. But from time to time it has become apparent that the Constitution needs to be amended. The Founders themselves contemplated this eventuality, giving to the people's representatives in Congress and the people in the various States the opportunity to amend the Constitution. It has become so clear that our spending situation is so grim, and the President and some members of his party are so unwilling to rectify it, that a constitutional amendment is in order.

The bottom line is that Federal spending has become a threat to liberty. The inability to rein in Federal spending is effectively undermining the promises of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution's preamble. Federal spending is a threat to this Nation's free men and women, slowly turning our fellow citizens into servants and stewards.

To restore the promise of the Constitution and the classical liberty the Founders sought to secure, we must amend the Constitution and we must do it now. We must amend the Constitution by voting on S. J. Res. 10, passing it and sending it to the people of the States for ratification. The people I serve in Utah are demanding this action and I know the citizens across this country are demanding it as well. They see the problems looming before them.

One of the first things I did at the beginning of this Congress was introduce S. J. Res. 3, a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. It received the support of 32 Members of the Senate at that time. We didn't have time to get to the rest of them. But what is remarkable is what happened a few weeks later. All 47 members of the Republican caucus unified behind a single balanced budget amendment, S. J. Res. 10. I was proud to work with my colleagues of varied political beliefs from across the country to draft this amendment that announced loudly and clearly where the Senate Republican caucus stands on this issue.

When I introduced this amendment at the end of March, I was honored to stand beside MITCH MCCONNELL and my colleague from Utah, MIKE LEE, as well as my colleagues Senators CORNYN, TOOMEY, DEMINT, RUBIO, and many others who took a stand for putting Federal restraints on Federal spending and restoring the Constitution's original checks and balances.

I was honored by the support this amendment received from groups committed to taxpayers and limited government. Here is a list of some of the groups supporting S. J. Res. 10: 60 Plus, Americans for Tax Reform, Americans for Prosperity, Club for Growth, FreedomWorks, Americans for Limited Government, the National Taxpayers Union, the Council for Citizens Against Government Waste, the Pass the BBA Coalition, the National Taxpayer Limitation Committee, the American Council for Health Reform, Grassroot Voices, and Ending Spending. But most of all I was honored to be serving my constituents in Utah who told me this was a fight worth having.

I am under no illusions that this is going to be an easy fight. The bottom line is that some Members of Congress and certainly President Obama cannot be trusted to control Federal spending in the long term. Consider the issue of entitlement spending. Medicare and Social Security are bankrupt. The failure to put forward a plan that would address their permanent spending shortfalls is quite simply a plan for the destruction of Medicare and Social Security. The Democrats' commitment to the entitlement status quo is the commitment to national bankruptcy.

Don't take my word for it. Listen to what the Social Security and Medicare trustees had to say about those programs. In 2010, Social Security ran a $49 billion cash deficit. It is now permanently in the red, with the Federal Government forced to use general revenues to make up for these shortfalls. The trust fund will be completely exhausted in 2036, and we all know there is no real trust fund, just IOUs issued by the government. But even that will be exhausted in 2036.

What about Medicare? Not to be outdone, Medicare's trust fund is now permanently in the red as well, and will be completely depleted in 2024, if not before; that date keeps moving up because of the profligacy of people here in the Congress and the lack of leadership in the White House. These numbers are jarring. They demand a serious and an adult response.

But what is the reaction of our colleagues on the other side to these numbers, at least some of them? For too many, the strategy is one of deny and smear—deny there is a problem and smear those who attempt to fix this spending crisis.

The President's budget was a joke. His do-over budget was nothing more than a speech with some vague details. Before Memorial Day the Senate's Democratic leadership busied itself attacking Chairman PAUL RYAN's budget rather than offering up one of their own. Just before Memorial Day, that is what they did. At a time when leadership is called for, President Obama is missing in action and complicit in the demagoguery of his surrogates at the Democratic National Committee.

There is a reason the Democrats are reluctant to offer any way forward out of this mess. It is quite simple—they refuse to cut spending and reform entitlements. But they also refuse to tell the truth about the tax increases that would be necessary to balance the budget their way. The entitlements, of course, are Social Security, Medicaid, and Medicare, to mention a few.

The Democrats are content to be the tax collectors for the welfare state but they will not acknowledge what this entails—massive tax increases on America's families and on America's small businesses.

In his original budget, President Obama proposed $1.6 trillion in tax increases on all segments of our economy. In spite of these tax increases, his budget got nowhere close to balance. Before Memorial Day, Democrats attacked Chairman RYAN's budget and offered up as an alternative roughly $21 billion in tax increases on oil companies. To borrow from John McEnroe: They cannot be serious; $21 billion in tax increases when we have $62 billion in unfunded obligations. The United States owes $62 trillion. What a joke.

The experience of the last few decades and last few weeks demonstrates the need for a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. Our spending is simply out of control, and President Obama and many of his allies refuse to address this spending in a meaningful way. All they have in their bag of tricks are tax increases, but the tax increases that would be necessary to fill this deficit hole would crush the liberty and the livelihoods of the American people.

Rather than doing serious work and making the tough decisions necessary to right our fiscal ship—rather than engaging in true leadership—the President seems content to focus on the next election and leave the hard decisions for a later day. That is the best-case scenario. The worst-case scenario is that certain liberals are content to force a full-blown fiscal crisis—one that would make the economic collapse of 2008 and 2009 look like the minor leagues—and then hope all the pressure will be to institute a value-added tax that will be a permanently open spigot, filling the coffers of the bloated Federal Government. Neither of these scenarios is unacceptable.

The fact is, we are running out of time. The country needs to act now. Fortunately, in the absence of Presidential leadership, the constitution provides an opportunity for Congress, along with the people of the States, to amend the Constitution and solve our country's systemic fiscal imbalance, even when the President refuses to do so.

Getting a balanced budget amendment passed is going to be an uphill climb. We all know that. I know all too well the Democrats' calculated resistance to serious efforts to reduce Federal spending. In 1997, a balanced budget amendment I introduced and fought for fell short by just one vote in the Senate. We had 66 votes. We actually had 67 that morning, but one of our Senators was threatened by the unions and flipped and we lost by 1 vote. Fourteen years later, our national debt stands at $14 trillion, threatening our economic future, reducing our global competitiveness, and jeopardizing our national security. Can we imagine where we would be had we been successful in passing that amendment and had one more vote to do it back in 1997? We wouldn't be in the colossal mess we are in today. Yet the resistance to a balanced budget amendment is probably even stronger among Democrats now than it was in 1997.

Nonetheless, I am hopeful that if the citizens and taxpayers of Utah are in any way representative of the people in the rest of the country—and I think they are—it is clear they have had enough. The people of this country are not going to stand by any longer and wait for Congress to fix this situation. They understand the Constitution must be amended in order to revive the Founders' original limits on the size of the Federal Government. Passing a balanced budget amendment is not just a constitutional imperative, it is essential to the long-term fiscal health of this country.

In the coming weeks, the fight over the debt limit is going to come to a head. It is going to be a long, hot summer. But I, as will a lot of others who care for this country, will be itching for a fight, and I will go to bat for this balanced budget amendment. In this country, the people are sovereign, and it is well past the time we give them a balanced budget amendment to ratify.

I urge my colleagues who have not done so already to support S.J. Res. 10. I look forward to debating and voting on this resolution—and passing it—later this summer.

I believe the leadership on the other side should bring up the balanced budget amendment and have a full-scale debate before we lift the debt ceiling—if the debt ceiling is to be lifted—and I am not so sure it should be lifted without a balanced budget amendment. On the other hand, the very least that has to happen is to bring up this balanced budget amendment before we actually get into the fight over the debt ceiling. It would be very good for this whole body to have to defend itself and to have to make arguments, pro and con, with regard to a balanced budget constitutional amendment.

I believe when the American people see what terrible shape we are in—caused by terrible profligacy, caused by terrible spending by the Congress of the United States—when people start to understand this, they are going to get tremendously angry, and I think in every respect they are going to start saying we have had enough. We have had enough. It is time for you folks in the Congress to stand and pass a balanced budget amendment that we will have to live with in order to save this country and save it from the free fall we are in. I hope we can get our colleagues on both sides—we do have all 47 Republicans—I hope we can get our colleagues on the other side to think and look clearly toward a balanced budget constitutional amendment, S.J. Res. 10. I look forward to debating and voting on this amendment and passing it later this summer.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARKIN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EDUCATION

Mr. HARKIN. Madam President, I wish to take a few moments to talk about the Republican budget, the so-called Ryan budget in the House. This has been widely condemned, of course, for its plan to end Medicare and for its radical cuts to Medicaid. But I have come to the floor to highlight yet another extreme element of that Republican budget—its unprecedented assault on education funding and the grave threat this poses to school reform efforts across the United States.

This Republican budget would slash funding for education by 15 percent next year—2012. Even more drastic cuts to education funding would come in each of the years to follow.

These Draconian cuts to education could not come at a worse time for America's public schools. The final budget agreement for the current fiscal year reduced education funding by $1.3 billion. It zeroed out, for example, the successful Striving Readers Initiative, the only comprehensive Federal program to help struggling adolescent readers. I might just add, that budget ended all literacy programs for kids in America funded by the Federal Government. The Federal Government now does not fund one literacy program in America. That is how bad it has gotten. Meanwhile, cash-strapped State and local governments are slashing school budgets and firing tens of thousands of teachers. In Texas, Gov. Rick Perry has called for a $10 billion cut in education funding. In New York City, the mayor, Mike Bloomberg, has proposed laying off 6,000 teachers.

I have an unusual perspective, as both the chair of the appropriations subcommittee that funds our Federal education programs as well as the chair of the authorizing committee, the Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee, which authorizes education programs.

There is no question in my mind that combined Federal, State, and local budget cuts pose a grave threat to education reform efforts across the country, just as these efforts are reaching a critical mass. Here is why. Forty-eight States and the District of Columbia have collaborated to create high-quality common education standards for the first time. The Obama administration's Race to the Top Initiative has jump-started ambitious State-level reforms ranging from expanded charter schools to stricter teacher and prep school accountability. In the HELP Committee, Senator ENZI and I together are working on a bipartisan effort to reauthorize the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

However, it is wishful thinking to expect improvements in school quality at a time when we are laying off teachers, increasing class sizes, and reducing instructional time. I am struck by the fact that the Republican budget's assault on education comes at a time when America's competitors are surging forward. For example, China has tripled its investment in education and is building hundreds of new universities. Even in times of austerity and shrinking budgets, smart countries don't just turn a chainsaw on themselves, they continue to invest in the future and, above all, they continue to boost investments in education.

So as we go forward with education reform in the United States, we are building on strength. Most kids in affluent communities already attend high-quality public schools and go on to higher education. Our challenge is to ensure that all American students have this opportunity, including the nearly 20 percent of children who live in poverty.

Again, certainly money is not the only factor in creating high-performing schools, but it does take money to modernize school facilities, to hire highly qualified teachers, to create effective assessment systems, and to provide appropriate instructions for students with special needs. To demand reform without resources is to set up students and teachers to fail. Let me repeat that. To demand reform without resources is to set up the students and the teachers to fail.

In the months ahead, Congress will be focused on reducing the deficit and trying to prevent a default on America's debt obligations. Of course, this is appropriate. But it must not preclude sustained, strong investments in education for our young people. We need to invest more, not less, in helping States and districts to close the gap between world-class schools that are in the affluent suburbs and the struggling schools in poor, urban, and rural communities. We need to provide resources to ensure that the goal of graduating students who are college and career ready applies equally to all students, including kids with disabilities, including English language learners. In the face of steadily rising college tuition, we must maintain the maximum Pell grant so kids from low-income families can achieve the American dream and get a college education.

Pundits have attributed the GOP loss in the special election in New York's 26th congressional district to voter anxiety because of the plan the Republicans have to end Medicare. So a lot of the pundits have said: Well, this recent election in New York's 26th congressional district is the result of that. But public dissatisfaction with the Republican budget goes way beyond Medicare. Americans see this budget as unbalanced and unfair, especially when it comes to education.

The American people are asking: Why do the Republicans insist that trillions of dollars are available for new tax cuts, mainly for big businesses and the wealthy, but supposedly we cannot afford to sustain funding for public education? This is a classic case of eating your seed corn. It is an approach that does not remotely reflect the priorities and values of the American people.

The Republican budget, as I have said before, is premised on the idea that America is poor and broke, that our best days are behind us, and that we have no choice but to slash investment required in order to keep our middle class strong. I totally disagree. Many Americans are hurting because of the struggling economy, but the United States overall remains a tremendously wealthy and resourceful nation. Quite frankly, we are the richest Nation on the face of the Earth. Even further, we are the richest Nation in human history. We have the highest per capita income in America of any major nation. So one has to ask the question, if we are so rich, why are we so poor? The question is not the lack of money. It is not the lack of wealth. It is because the system is broken. We have a system malfunction in this country, and we have to right that system. Because we are an optimistic, forward-looking people, we can do it. We can work together, and we can meet any challenge.

But we expect the government to be on our side—not holding us back, not dragging us down, not shorting our futures, not telling people who are low income or recent immigrants to this country or kids who do not have a good start in life that, sorry, we cannot give you a world-class quality education, we cannot afford to have the best teachers, we cannot afford to have good schools for you.

If you happen to be wealthy and live in a wealthy area that has high property taxes and you have a good school and you have good teachers, good for you. But if by happenstance of birth you are born to a family who does not have any money and maybe your parents never went to college—maybe, as I said, they are new immigrants to this country; maybe they do not speak English that well—if you are in a poor urban area or a poor rural area and you have low-quality schools, low-quality teachers, chances are you never had any early learning available to you. So when you started kindergarten, you were already way behind those kids in that affluent school in high-income areas.

Is that what we are about? Is that what we are trying to say, that we are going to have this kind of almost class warfare, that if you are born wealthy and stuff, you have it made but if you are born poor, forget about it when it comes to education? That is what the Republican budget says. We are not going to have quality public education for our kids.

As I said, this does not reflect the values of the American people. We want to make sure our public education system is good for all children, that they all have the best qualified teachers, that they have good schools, good facilities, the latest technology, that they are challenged to do their best, and that they know if they do their best and if they study hard and they get good grades, they will be able to go to college and not have a mountain of debt hanging over their heads when they graduate.

We have done great things as a society, things we have had to do together, which we could not do as individuals, such as building an interstate highway system, a rail system, mapping the human genome, and, again, creating world-class universities. We have done this. We have done this working together, as something we can do together as government that we cannot do as individuals.

Through our government, we come together to provide a ladder of opportunity to give every citizen a shot at the American dream—a ladder of opportunity that includes Pell grants, the GI bill, job training, early learning, and, yes, world-class schools.

I am convinced the great majority of Americans share this positive vision. Again, we are determined to bring deficits under control. But we cannot eat our seed corn. We have to make smart investments in education, and we refuse to be dragged backward into a winner-take-all society, where the privileged and the powerful seize an even greater share of the wealth, even as our schools are crumbling and our middle class is struggling and declining.

For nearly half a century, robust Federal investments in quality public schools and access to higher education have been a critical pillar undergirding the American middle class. The Republican budget will take a jack hammer to that pillar. This, I believe, is a grave mistake. The middle class is the backbone of our Nation. It is time our leaders show the backbone to defend it.

AMENDMENT NO. 390

Madam President, I would like to take this opportunity also to strongly oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine. If passed, the amendment would impose severe and unnecessary burdens on agencies charged with protecting the American people and would severely weaken our vital health and safety protections.

My Republican colleagues have tried hard to make the word "regulation" into a bad word. They have created an absurd caricature: the nameless bureaucrat arbitrarily imposing random rules and regulations on businesses, and their sole purpose is making sure the business fails. That is ridiculous.

Most Americans understand this is grossly distorted. The truth is, the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine, Ms. SNOWE, is not about the government working more efficiently—a goal we all share—it is about using the sort of feel-good slogan of "regulatory reform" as cover for an effort to paralyze the ability of the government to enforce vital health and safety protections.

In effect, the Snowe amendment ought to be called the "buyer beware" amendment. Go back to the days when the snake oil salesman could sell you anything and you took it at your own risk, where we did not have safe drug laws and food safety laws and things such as that to protect people. It was just a buyer beware society. Do we want to go back to that?

I believe the American people want clean air and clean water and to know they are not adulterated. The Snowe amendment would weaken environmental protection.

I believe the American people want to make sure their children's toys are safe, that they are not loaded with mercury and other elements that will destroy their health. The Snowe amendment would mean weaker protection of toys and other consumer products.

I believe the American people want workers to come home safely at the end of the day. The Snowe amendment would mean more injuries and deaths in mines and other hazardous workplaces.

I believe the American people want the food they eat to be safe and untainted. The Snowe amendment could mean we cannot enact implementing regulations for our recent bipartisan food safety bill, which we just passed last year—bipartisan. But when you pass a bill, obviously, the Food and Drug Administration is going to have to issue regulations. Well, the Snowe amendment would severely restrict that. Again, you would be playing Russian roulette with the food you eat.

Maybe it is safe; maybe it is not—buyer beware.

I believe, in the wake of the financial meltdown of 2008, which almost caused another Great Depression, the American people want oversight and regulation of banks and other financial institutions. The Snowe amendment, again, could mean banks would remain free to do the same reckless, predatory practices that nearly wrecked our economy.

There are already important checks on regulatory authority. The law already requires agencies to perform comprehensive assessments of the impact of regulations on businesses and local government. There is an extensive notice and comment period under the Administrative Procedures Act, where those impacted by potential rules—including small businesses—are given an important say in regulation. Agencies already engage in regulatory flexibility analysis to ensure that their oversight does not needlessly overburden small businesses.

In contrast, the aim of the Snowe amendment is to impose additional hurdles to dramatically slow down the issuance of critically needed rules and, in many cases, stop the rulemaking process altogether. For example, the Snowe amendment would require an analysis of “indirect” impact on small businesses—“indirect” impact, whatever that means. Well, let me cite perhaps an example.

Instead of the Mine Safety Health Administration spending its resources protecting our miners, the amendment could require the agency to determine whether a new mine safety standard indirectly harms, say, a small paper company that supplies paper to the mine’s corporate offices. This is a ridiculous waste of resources and time. So we do not even know what the “indirect” impact means. That could mean almost anything.

Likewise, the amendment would permit businesses to sue to block a rule even before it is finalized. In other words, businesses could seek to litigate a proposed rule. I often hear my Republican colleagues speak against activist judges. I can think of few things more activist than for unelected judges to review a rule even prior to the agency performing the lengthy notice and comment process to finalize a rule. It already takes years for agencies to promulgate health and safety rules. This amendment would exacerbate the problem and further clog up the court system. Think about all the court cases that would be filed just on a proposed rule, before it even goes to the comment period, before it is even finalized.

Moreover, the bill requires an agency to review the impact of all—all—its current rules on small businesses to determine if a rule must be modified, rescinded or continued unchanged. In other words, rather than addressing new problems and implementing new acts of Congress, an agency would need to spend all its time reviewing past, settled regulations, some of which may have been in effect for the last 50 years.

To its credit, the Obama administration already is conducting a comprehensive, rigorous review of all rules in order to see which ones should be repealed, modified or kept in place. We should let this careful review take place before implementing severe constraints on agency rulemaking.

So the Snowe amendment would make government less responsive. It seeks to cripple the government’s ability to make sensible lifesaving regulations.

Again, it ought to be titled the “buyer beware” amendment. If you like living in that kind of a society, I suggest you go to some Third World country, where you do not know what you eat or what you drink or whether the air you breathe and the water you consume is safe and healthy. If that is the kind of America you want, you should support the Snowe amendment. But if you want an America where our kids are safe from dangerous toys, where you know the food you eat is going to be safe and the water you drink and the air you breathe, where you know there are safety rules in place so you are not going to get unduly injured or harmed at the workplace, if you believe this is the kind of America that operates better and is more functionally productive than a buyer beware kind of society, then I suggest you should oppose the Snowe amendment.

Again, I urge my colleagues to oppose the Snowe amendment as ill-advised. Again, it is a part of a bill that has never gone through the committee hearing process. If nothing else, it ought to go through committee, have hearings, and let’s see if it has any support at all out there before we bring it to the floor of the Senate. I urge my colleagues to defeat the Snowe amendment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WHITEHOUSE). The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, with all due respect, I plan to support the amendment that has been addressed by my good friend from Iowa. Having come from the small business world, I am fully aware of the cost of these things, and tomorrow I will be introducing an amendment that is going to address something different, but really something with higher figures on it; that is, the cost of the EPA regulations.

This is something that is a little bit different than what my friend from Iowa has been talking about. When we stop and think about the regulatory things that are going on right now with the Clean Water Act and the Solid Waste Disposal Act—we are talking about greenhouse gas regulations, things that should be addressed by legislation but are not, so they are trying to do it through regulation: boiler MACT, that is the maximum-achievable technology; utility MACT; ozone, actually the changing of the ozone standards when they are not using—as the law requires—the newer, updated information; and particulate matter and coal ash and some of the rest.

But I am saving that for tomorrow. I am only saying that now because there is a cost to overregulation. That is what I know my friend, Senator SNOWE, is trying to get at. It is my understanding—correct me if I am wrong—that we are not trying to get recognized and move current amendments aside. Is that correct now? I will not try to do that.

However, I do want to mention that probably the most significant single amendment we are going to have on the EDA reauthorization bill would be the one to take down the maximum amount from $500 million to $300 million. It is kind of interesting because this program in my State of Oklahoma has been very successful. Believe it, time and time again, we have been able to do things, attract businesses and industry.

Down in a little town called Elgin, OK, adjacent to the Ft. Sill live range, we have been able to put together something that is going to attract about a 150,000-square-foot building, all of that with a very small initial grant. So it has worked well.

I understand some of the critics of this program. In some areas maybe it has not worked that well, if it has. However, I have noticed this, and since some of this jurisdiction is in the committee of which I am the ranking member, the Environment and Public Works Committee, it is important to look at these things.

In these difficult times, I think it is important not to authorize more than we could anticipate would be very prudently appropriated. Since we have been authorizing $400 million in the past, and the total amount is something less than $300 million, I am going to have an amendment that would take down the existing limit on this, which is $500 million, down to $300 million. That will be amendment No. 430. It is already submitted.

Interestingly enough, while I do not agree with President Obama on many things, he seems to agree on this, and I am going to read a statement he made: “The Administration supports the passage of S. 782.” But down here it says:

However, the bill would authorize spending levels higher than those requested by the President’s budget, and the administration believes that the need for smart investment to help Americans win the future must be balanced with the need to control spending and to reduce the deficit. The administration looks forward to working with Congress in reducing the limits of this bill.

So I am going to make it easy for the administration and introduce this amendment No. 430. It is submitted right now. We are hoping to be able, at some point, to start setting aside and getting up these amendments for votes. That is one of the major reasons, as one of the sponsors of this bill, we have a lot of things we need to be talking about on the Senate floor.

We have done nothing around here. We have not done appropriations. We have not done anything except a handful of noncontroversial judges—and some controversial, I might add. But, nonetheless, we should be talking about these things. There are a lot of things we want to get done, and certainly this is one of them.

The other amendment, though, that is a little less understandable because it involves something that I throw in the category of being just not believable. We have a critter in Oklahoma and it is also around other parts of the country. It is called a Lesser Prairie Chicken. Going all of the way back to my days in the State legislature—I am talking about a long time ago, before a lot of you guys were born—people were concerned about the Lesser Prairie Chicken and were always trying to protect it. Yet our farmers and ranchers had a problem with that because they burrow down and make holes and our cows and our horses will break legs and all of that kind of thing.

That has nothing to do with what is happening today except they are talking about having that—right now it is actually a candidate for an endangered species, and the reason is because they are claiming that, of course, the population is dwindling. Well, it is not. The problem is, we have too many of them. This is kind of interesting. The State—for those of you whose geography is not too good—immediately north of my State of Oklahoma is Kansas. In Kansas they have a hunting season for the Lesser Prairie Chicken, but you can go a mile south across the Oklahoma border and it would be protected. It is ludicrous that they would do that.

Here is another reason—a problem. First of all, federally mandated uses of alternative energy such as wind and all of that I think is inappropriate. We have all the resources we need in fossil fuels to run this country. We have the resources, in terms of oil, gas, and coal. We have enough to run this country for 100 years without being dependent on the Middle East.

These are things we should be doing. Well, when you have these mandated percentages, that means you have to go into other forms of energy where the technology is not quite there. Now, wind technology is there, although a lot has to happen before it is going to be in a competitive match and not have to be subsidized. Nonetheless, Oklahoma happens to be in the wind belt. You go through Oklahoma, you can see in northern Texas all the way through Oklahoma and southern Kansas, we are in the wind belt. The problem we have—I have airplanes. I have many vices; flying airplanes is one of them. So I am over the western part of Oklahoma almost every weekend.

When I take people who have not been there, they are amazed at the numbers of windmills. At any one place out there you can see 200 or 300. So it represents a huge investment. A lot of stakeholders are involved in it and they have said that certain things are going to happen. But wait a minute. If they end up listing the Lesser Prairie Chicken, that is going to all of a sudden put Fish and Wildlife in a position where they can stop this wind energy that is taking place right now. The reason they can, and it will not be their fault—they will say, well, it is a habitat. It is threatened because there are towers, and predators are on these towers and looking down. Then they would have to stop that from taking place.

They could conceivably have to take down millions of dollars' worth of investments that are there right now. So I have an amendment to this bill that is going to preclude them from being able to list it.

By the way, I have had a visit with the candidate who has been nominated to be Director of Fish and Wildlife, Dan Ashe. I had him, along with Secretary Ken Salazar, Secretary of the Interior, in my office. We talked at some length about some of these things, and he has made a commitment to come out to Oklahoma and to see what a hardship this would be.

So I think it would be an excellent idea to find some vehicle—and this vehicle seems to be the one that is being used right now to put such legislation on—that would preclude them from listing the Lesser Prairie Chicken.

The private investment in Oklahoma wind power is, of course—we are one of the top States—we are at No. 13 of all 50 States in terms of wind. It could be significantly curtailed. State Senator Bryce Marlatt in Oklahoma noted that it was already a $300 million investment just in the last 3 years. So we want to protect this investment.

We have OG&E, Oklahoma Gas and Electric, recently announcing the construction of a high-power line from Oklahoma City to Woodward. Woodward is kind of the mouth of the Panhandle. Then, eventually going into Guymon, all the way through what used to be called no man's land in the Panhandle of Oklahoma. These would be multimillion-dollar investments that could be severely challenged by the listing of the Lesser Prairie Chicken.

So I will be offering that amendment. I already submitted the amendment and would look forward to explaining that further as the time comes.

In the meanwhile, tomorrow I do want to get into the cost of the regulation. If we are really sincere in this country right now about doing something to promote business and industry, the first thing we need to do is get the bureaucrats off the backs of the businesses out there that are planning to expand and those that are in existence today. So we will be addressing that tomorrow.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

TRIBUTE TO FRANKIE FREEMAN

Mrs. MCCASKILL. Mr. President, Missouri is full of amazing Americans. At the very top of this list is my friend, Frankie Muse Freeman. She has been selected to receive the extraordinary honor called the Spingarn Medal, the NAACP's highest national honor.

Each year, the NAACP selects only one person in this country to receive the prestigious Spingarn Medal in recognition of particularly outstanding achievement.

We in Missouri are so proud of Ms. Freeman for her many accomplishments, including receiving this most distinguished award. While I am honored to come to the floor and congratulate Frankie Freeman, I regret that I will not be able to be in St. Louis, at the St. Louis City and County Freedom Fund Dinner to deliver these remarks and celebrate this great woman and her many admirers and supporters in the St. Louis area.

Frankie Freeman is an amazing story. She is 94 years old and still has the passion to serve her community. At age 16, Ms. Freeman enrolled in her mother's alma mater, Hampton Institute. In 1947, before the Presiding Officer or I were ever born, she earned a law degree from Howard University Law School. During that time period, as one might imagine, there really were not law firms that hired either women or African Americans, much less an African-American woman.

So what did Frankie Freeman do? She decided to open her own law firm. She began her practice with divorce and criminal cases and with a huge dose of pro bono cases. After 2 years she became legal counsel to the NAACP legal team that filed suit against the St. Louis Board of Education in 1949. In 1954, Freeman was the lead attorney for the landmark case, Davis v. St. Louis Housing Authority, which ended legal racial discrimination in public housing in St. Louis.

In the almost 60 years since that decision, Ms. Freeman has tirelessly fought for civil rights at home in St. Louis and across the Nation. She has endured abuse and discrimination, but through it all she worked with intellect and dignity while employing one of her very best weapons, a warm and friendly personality and a very quick smile.

In 1964 President Lyndon Johnson appointed her to serve as the first woman on the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. She continued to serve on the Commission under Presidents Nixon, Ford, and Carter.

Recognizing that there was still much work to do to end discrimination, Ms. Freeman joined with others to help form the bipartisan Citizens Commission on Civil Rights. Frankie Freeman's work has earned her many awards. She holds honorary degrees from multiple universities, including Hampton University, the University of Missouri, St. Louis University, Washington University, and Howard University. Now she has been inducted into the National Bar Association's Hall of Fame.

Despite this long history of accomplishments, Frankie Freeman still knows what is important—serving the community she loves.

At age 94, she remains active in her local community by volunteering at her church. Throughout her career, she has served on several local boards, including the National Urban League of Metropolitan St. Louis and the United Way of Greater St. Louis. Along the way, she also found time to write a book about her life, which I highly recommend to anyone for an inspiring story, a uniquely American story of a woman who had a vision at a time when women who looked like her weren't supposed to have a vision.

Ms. Freeman will become the 96th recipient of the Spingarn Medal this July when she is honored during the NAACP national convention in Los Angeles. Past Spingarn medalists include Maya Angelou, W.E.B. Du Bois, and Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. This impressive list of exceptional Americans whose company Attorney Freeman will now join gives you a sense of the caliber of person Attorney Freeman is.

There is no doubt that attorney Frankie Freeman is deserving of this distinction. I am so proud of her for being honored with this recognition of her lifelong dedication to justice and civil rights. She is such an inspiration to me, and she has been an inspiration to thousands of young people during her life, an inspiration to so many Americans, regardless of race, an inspiration for what she stands for and what she has accomplished in her lifetime. I am so grateful to call her my friend, and I thank her for all she has done for the people of St. Louis, the people of Missouri, and the people of this great Nation. Congratulations and thank you, Frankie Freeman.

Mr. President, I will spend a few moments talking about the Economic Development Administration. There are lots of times we debate legislation on the floor, and we do it in almost an academic way. We think of the proposals in the abstract. Unfortunately, there are many times we don't think about the real consequences of legislation. This year, at this time, this legislation feels very consequential to me. It feels very consequential because of what my State has gone through.

The Economic Development Administration plays a substantial role in making Federal resources available to assist communities that are affected by disasters to rebuild and recover.

As my colleagues in this Chamber are well aware, the first half of this year has been devastating to my State. Since the start of the year, 28 States have suffered at least one federally declared major disaster.

Missouri has been particularly hard hit, starting with the severe storms on New Year's Eve. We also had severe flooding along the Mississippi River, multiple tornadoes, including one that struck and caused severe damage to St. Louis and, obviously, the historic tornado that has, in fact, done such damage to the community of Joplin. We are also expecting additional extensive flooding along the Missouri River in northwest Missouri. Many families there are steeling for the worst as we wait for the waters to arrive.

When disaster strikes, the Federal Government steps in, as it should, to support the efforts of State and local government, nonprofit groups, and the faith community to help communities recover and rebuild.

In Missouri, EDA works with all 19 regional planning commissions in a collaborative role to help carry out projects deemed important by local elected officials and community leaders, particularly in the event of a natural disaster.

The Economic Development Administration's explicit mission includes the assistance of regions "experiencing sudden and severe economic dislocations, such as those resulting from natural disasters."

I just visited with people from a radio station in Joplin. The man I visited there was on the air for 23 straight hours. This radio station turned out to be one of the few methods of communication that everybody could rely on in the immediate hours after the tragedy struck. Eight of the twenty-eight employees who work at that radio station lost their homes, including the man who was on the air for 23 straight hours. There has been severe dislocation that has occurred in Joplin, MO. Two thousand homes were wiped away, clean gone. Another 6,000 structures, including homes and businesses, were severely damaged and are uninhabitable. There are thousands and thousands and thousands of people in Joplin, MO, who woke up that Monday morning—in fact, hadn't been to sleep the night before because they were busy huddling in rubble or were camped out at a relative's home because they had no place to go.

In the past few years alone, EDA has provided similar assistance in Kansas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Nebraska, and North Dakota after disasters hit communities in those States. EDA has already stepped up in Joplin and established a $3 million revolving fund to assist small businesses in the area, so that people have a place they can go back to, in terms of their work, after this kind of disaster.

We have a long history in this country of rolling up our sleeves and working together in difficult times. The Federal Government has always been a partner in those efforts, providing financial and technical support. The Economic Development Administration has been part of this support. It is my hope the EDA will continue to provide this invaluable service.

That is why this legislation is more important than words on a page. It could make the difference between someone being able to stay in the community, being able to go back to work, being able to put the pieces back together after a tragic loss. I hope my colleagues take this seriously and move quickly and promptly to support this legislation.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. President, I am here to talk about the legislation that is before us—that has been before the Senate today and likely to be before the Senate tomorrow—on economic development but specifically to talk about the interest of promoting economic development and job creation.

A couple of amendments I plan to offer will help give American employers some relief from regulatory mandates that are stifling economic growth and job creation.

I hear all the time in Ohio—I am sure my colleagues hear it in their States—employers saying: We would like to expand and begin hiring again, but one of the concerns is that there is regulation that affects us. Almost every business I meet in Ohio—and I was in Ohio last week meeting with businesses in the area of energy, both companies that produce energy and companies that use a lot of energy, including chemical companies and steel companies in Ohio—have stories about some of the regulatory burdens that are making it more difficult to get jobs back and to get our economy back on track. By all accounts, the regulatory burden on employers is growing. A recent study commissioned by the Small Business Administration estimates that the annual toll, now, of Federal regulations on the American economy has reached $1.75 trillion. By the way, $1.75 trillion is more than the IRS collects in Federal income taxes.

With the unemployment rate now at 9.1 percent and the unfortunate news we heard about last month's job numbers, it should be a wake-up call to us to focus on economic development—specifically, how do we get businesses to do more in terms of hiring, spend less on redtape, less on bureaucracy, and reduce the regulatory burden in smart ways?

The current administration has said some of the right things but actually moved in the wrong direction. We have seen a sharp increase in the last couple of years in what are deemed to be major economically significant rules. That is defined as regulations that impose a cost on the economy of $100 million or more.

According to the administration's Office of Management and Budget, the current administration has been regulating at a pace of 84 major rules per year. By way of comparison, that is about a 50-percent increase over the regulatory output during the Clinton administration, which had about 56 rules per year, and an increase from the Bush administration as well. So we have seen more regulations and more significant regulations.

I was encouraged to hear President Obama's words when he talked about the Executive order in January, which is entitled "Improving Regulation and Regulatory Review." But now we need to see action. We need to see it from the administration, from individual agencies to provide real regulatory relief for job creators to be able to reduce this drag on the economy.

One commonsense step we can take is to strengthen what is called the Unfunded Mandates Relief Act. It was passed in 1995. It was bipartisan. I was a cosponsor in the House of Representatives. It is an effort to require Federal regulators to evaluate the cost of rules, to look at the benefits and the costs, and to look at less costly alternatives on rules.

The two amendments I would like to offer over the next few days as we consider the legislation before us would improve this Unfunded Mandates Reform Act, and it would reform it in ways that are entirely consistent with the principle President Obama has laid out and committed to in his Executive order on regulatory review.

The first amendment would require agencies specifically to assess potential effects of new regulations on job creation—so focusing in on jobs—and to consider market-based and non-governmental alternatives to regulation. This would broaden the scope of the Unfunded Mandates Relief Act to require cost-benefit analysis of rules that impose direct or indirect costs of $100 million a year or more. So, again, this is for major rules of $100 million or more. It would also require agencies to adopt the least costly or least burdensome option that achieves whatever policy goals have been set out by Congress. It seems to me it is a commonsense amendment. I hope we will get bipartisan support for it.

The second amendment would extend the Unfunded Mandates Relief Act to so-called independent agencies which today are actually exempt from the cost-benefit rules that govern all other agencies. In 1995, we had this debate and determined at that time we would not extend the legislation to independent agencies. In the interim, independent agencies have been providing more and more rules, have put out more and more regulations, and are having a bigger and bigger impact. An example of an independent agency would be the SEC, the Securities and Exchange Commission, or the CFTC, which is the Commodity Futures Trading Commission. These are agencies that, although independent in the executive branch, are very much involved in putting out major rules and regulations. It is sometimes called the "headless fourth branch" of government because their rules are not reviewed for cost-benefit analysis, even by the OMB, the Office of Management and Budget, in its Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs, so-called OIRA.

We have looked at some GAO data and put together various studies, and it appears to us that there are about 200 regulations that were issued between 1996 until today that would be deemed to have an impact of $100 million or more on the economy but were automatically excluded from the Unfunded Mandates Relief Act because they were deemed to be from independent agencies.

So it is basically closing a loophole and closing this independent agency loophole, which I believe is a sensible reform. It has been endorsed by many people, including, interestingly, the current OIRA Administrator and the President's regulatory czar, Cass Sunstein, who, in a 2002 Law Review article, talked about the fact that this is an area where UMRA ought to be extended because, again, there were so many independent agencies that were putting out regulations impacting job creation in this country.

No regulation, whatever its source, should be imposed on American employers or on State and local governments without serious consideration of the costs, the benefits, and the availability of a least-burdensome alternative. Both these amendments would move us further toward that sensible goal, and I hope the leadership will allow these amendments to be offered. I think they fit well with the underlying legislation. If they are offered, I certainly urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support them.

I yield the floor. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senators be allowed to speak as in morning business for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRIBUTE TO LOUIS E. GIVAN

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize a distinguished Kentuckian who has worked tirelessly on behalf of our Nation's soldiers, sailors and marines for more than 40 years. Louis E. Givan, a lifelong resident of my hometown of Louisville, has played a vital role in protecting the men and women of our Armed Forces and our country's defense.

Formerly a sailor himself in the U.S. Navy, he has served for the last 11 years as the general manager of Raytheon Missile Systems operations in Louisville. I was saddened to hear of his retirement from that position this coming July 5. He will certainly be missed.

Mr. Givan—or, to those who know him, Ed—was a 1966 graduate of St. Xavier High School in Louisville and in 1970 earned his bachelor of science degree in mechanical engineering from the J.B. Speed School of Engineering at the University of Louisville. In 1968, he began working at the Naval Ordnance Station in Louisville, and he stayed at that post until 1996, in various engineering and supervisory positions.

In 1996 the Naval Ordnance Station transitioned to private ownership, and Ed's leadership was crucial in making that transition a successful one. The facility eventually became part of Raytheon Missile Systems, and Ed was appointed general manager in 2000. As general manager, Ed has led Raytheon Missile Systems in Louisville to great success, success for both the company and for the local community. They design, develop, and produce vital weapons systems for our armed forces, enabling America to have the most formidable military force in the world. Weapons produced at the Louisville facility are used by our forces in all parts of the globe, including in Iraq.

Kentucky is lucky to have benefitted from Ed's dedication, commitment to excellence, and leadership for so many years. I am sure his wife Velma; his sons Eddie, Tony, and Chris; and his grandchildren Benjamin, Nathan,

Isaac, Macy and Natalie are all very proud of what Ed has accomplished. I wish him the very best in retirement, and I am sure my colleagues join me in saying that this U.S. Senate thanks Mr. Louis E. "Ed" Givan for his faithful service.

CRIME VICTIMS' RIGHTS ACT

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, June 6, 2011.

Hon. ERIC H. HOLDER, Jr.,
Attorney General, U.S. Department of Justice,
Washington, DC.

DEAR ATTORNEY GENERAL HOLDER: I am writing about the Justice Department's implementation of the Crime Victims' Rights Act—an act that I co-sponsored in 2004. These questions relate to an Office of Legal Counsel ("OLC") Opinion made public on May 20, 2011 and more broadly to concerns I have heard from crime victims' advocates that the Department has been thwarting effective implementation of the Act by failing to extend the Act to the investigative phases of criminal cases and by preventing effective appellate enforcement of victims' rights. I am writing to ask you to answer these questions and explain the Department's actions in these areas.

GOVERNMENT PROTECTION OF VICTIMS' RIGHTS DURING INVESTIGATION OF A CRIME

When Congress enacted the CVRA, it intended to protect crime victims throughout the criminal justice process—from the investigative phases to the final conclusion of a case. Congress could not have been clearer in its direction that using "best efforts" to enforce the CVRA was an obligation of "[o]fficers and employees of the Department of Justice and other departments and agencies of the United States engaged in the detection, investigation, or prosecution of crime . . ." 18 U.S.C. § 3771(c)(1) (emphasis added). Congress also permitted crime victims to assert their rights either in the court in which formal charges had already been filed "or, if no prosecution is underway, in the district court in the district in which the crime occurred." 18 U.S.C. § 3771(d)(3) (emphasis added).

Despite Congress' clear intention to extend rights to crime victims throughout the process, the Justice Department is reading the CVRA much more narrowly. In the recent OLC opinion, for example, the Department takes the position that "the CVRA is best read as providing that the rights identified in section 3771(a) are guaranteed from the time that criminal proceedings are initiated (by complaint, information, or indictment) and cease to be available if all charges are dismissed either voluntarily or on the merits (or if the Government declines to bring formal charges after the filing of a complaint)." The Availability of Crime Victims' Rights Under the Crime Victims' Rights Act of 2004, Memorandum from John E. Bies (Dec. 17, 2010, publicly released May 20, 2011) (hereinafter "OLC Opinion"). Indeed, in that same opinion, I am surprised to see the Department citing a snippet from my floor remarks during the passage of the CVRA for the proposition that crime victims can confer with prosecutors only after the formal filing of charges. See id. at 9 (citing 150 Cong. Rec. S4260, S4268 (Apr. 22, 2004) (statement of Sen. Kyl)).

I did want to express my surprise that your prosecutors are so clearly quoting my remarks out of context. Here is the full passage of my remarks, which were part of a colloquy with my co-sponsor on the CVRA, Senator Feinstein:

Senator Feinstein: Section . . . (a)(5) provides a right to confer with the attorney for the Government in the case. This right is intended to be expansive. For example, the victim has the right to confer with the Government concerning any critical stage or disposition of the case. The right, however, is not limited to these examples. I ask the Senator if he concurs in this intent.

Senator Kyl: Yes. The intent of this section is just as the Senator says. This right to confer does not give the crime victim any right to direct the prosecution. Prosecutors should consider it part of their profession to be available to consult with crime victims about concerns the victims may have which are pertinent to the case, case proceedings or dispositions. Under this provision, victims are able to confer with the Government's attorney about proceedings after charging.

150 Cong. Rec. S4260, S4268 (Apr. 22, 2004) (statements of Sens. Feinstein & Kyl) (emphases added). Read in context, it is obvious that the main point of my remarks was that a victim's right to confer was "intended to be expansive." Senator Feinstein and I then gave various examples of situations in which victims could confer with prosecutors, with the note that the right to confer was "not limited to these examples." It is therefore troubling to me that in this opinion the Justice Department is quoting only a limited portion of my remarks and wrenching them out of context to suggest that I think that crime victims do not have any right to confer (or to be treated with fairness) until after charging.

In giving an example that the victims would have such rights after charging, I was not suggesting that they had no such right earlier in the process. Elsewhere in my remarks I made clear that crime victims had rights under the CVRA even before an indictment is filed. For example, in the passage quoted above, I made clear that crime victims had a right to consult about both "the case" and "case proceedings"—i.e., both about how the case was being handled before being filed in court and then later how the case was being handled in court "proceedings." As another example, Senator Feinstein and I explained that we had drafted the CVRA to extend a right to victims to attend only "public" proceedings, because otherwise the rights would extend to grand jury proceedings. See, e.g., 150 Cong. Rec. S4260, S4268 (Apr. 22, 2004) (statements of Sens. Feinstein & Kyl). Of course, no such limitation would have been necessary under the CVRA if CVRA rights attach (as the Department seems to think) only after the filing of a grand jury indictment.

Courts have already rejected the Justice Department's position that the CVRA applies only after an indictment is filed. For example, in In re Dean, 527 F.3d 391 (5th Cir. 2008), the Department took the position that crime victims had no right to confer with prosecutors until after the Department had reached and signed a plea agreement with a corporation (BP Products North America) whose illegal actions had resulted in the deaths of fifteen workers in an oil refinery explosion. Of course, this position meant that the victims could have no role in shaping any plea deal that the Department reached. In rejecting the Department's position, the Fifth Circuit held that "the government should have fashioned a reasonable way to inform the victims of the likelihood of criminal charges and to ascertain the victims' views on the possible details of a plea bargain." Id. at 394.

In spite of this binding decision from the Fifth Circuit, crime victims' advocates have reported to me that the Justice Department is still proceeding in the Fifth Circuit and elsewhere on the assumption that it has no obligations to treat victims fairly or to confer with them until after charges are formally filed. Given the Fifth Circuit's Dean decision, this position appears to place the Department in violation of a binding court ruling that extends rights to thousands of crime victims in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Texas. And more generally, the Department's position simply has no grounding in the clear language of the CVRA.

My first question: What is the Justice Department doing to extend to victims their right to fair treatment and their right to confer with prosecutors when the Justice Department is negotiating pre-indictment plea agreements and non-prosecution agreements with defense attorneys, including negotiations within the Fifth Circuit?

CRIME VICTIMS' RIGHT TO APPELLATE PROTECTION

Protection of crime victims' rights in appellate courts is an important part of the CVRA. As you know, when Congress passed the CVRA, the federal courts of appeals had recognized that crime victims could take ordinary appeals to protect their rights. See, e.g., Doe v. United States, 666 F.2d 43, 46 (4th Cir. 1981) (rape victim allowed to appeal district court's adverse "rape shield statute" ruling); United States v. Kones, 77 F.3d 66 (3rd Cir. 1996) (victim allowed to appeal adverse restitution decision). Congress sought to leave these protections in place, while expanding them to ensure that crime victims could obtain quick vindication of their rights in appellate courts by providing—in § 3771(d)(3)—that "[i]f the district court denies the relief sought, the [victim] may petition the court of appeals for a writ of mandamus." 18 U.S.C. § 3771(d)(3). Ordinarily, whether mandamus relief should issue is discretionary. The plain language of the CVRA, however, specifically and clearly overruled such discretionary mandamus standards by directing that "[t]he court of appeals shall take up and decide such application forthwith . . ." 18 U.S.C. § 3771(d)(3) (emphasis added). As I explained when the Senate considered the CVRA:

[W]hile mandamus is generally discretionary, this provision [18 U.S.C. § 3771(d)(3)] means that courts must review these cases. Appellate review of denials of victims' rights is just as important as the initial assertion of a victim's right. This provision ensures review and encourages courts to broadly defend the victims' rights.

150 CONG. REC. S4270 (Apr. 22, 2004) (statement of Sen. Kyl) (emphases added). Similarly, the CVRA's co-sponsor with me, Senator Feinstein, stated that the Act would create "a new use of a very old procedure, the writ of mandamus. This provision will establish a procedure where a crime victim can, in essence, immediately appeal a denial of their rights by a trial court to the court of appeals." 150 CONG. REC. S4262 (statement of Sen. Feinstein) (emphases added); see also id. (statement of Sen. Kyl) (crime victims must “be able to have . . . the appellate courts take the appeal and order relief). In short, the legislative history shows that §3771(d)(3) was intended to allow crime victims to take accelerated appeals from district court decisions denying their rights and have their appeals reviewed under ordinary standards of appellate review.

In spite of that unequivocal legislative history, the Justice Department has in past cases asserted a contrary position. In In re Antrobus, 519 F.3d 1123 (10th Cir. 2008), Ken and Sue Antrobus sought to obtain appellate review of a ruling by a trial court that they could not deliver a victim impact statement at the sentencing of the man who sold the murder weapon used to kill their daughter. The Tenth Circuit ruled against them on the basis that the Antrobuses were not entitled to regular appellate review, but only discretionary mandamus review. See id. at 1124–25. The Tenth Circuit did not consider the legislative history in reaching this conclusion, leading the Antrobuses to file petitions for rehearing and rehearing en banc—petitions that recounted this legislative history. In response, the Justice Department asked the Tenth Circuit to deny the victims’ petitions. Remarkably, the Justice Department told the Tenth Circuit that it could ignore the legislative history because the CVRA “is unambiguous.” Response of the United States, In re Antrobus, No. 08–4002, at 12 n.7 (10th Cir. Feb. 12, 2008).

At the time that the Justice Department filed this brief, no Court of Appeals agreed with the Tenth Circuit. At the time, three other Circuits had all issued unanimous rulings that crime victims were entitled to regular appellate review. See In re W.R. Huff Asset Mgmt. Co., 409 F.3d 555, 562 (2d Cir. 2005); Kenna v. U.S. Dist. Ct. for the Cent. Dist. of Ca., 435 F.3d 1011, 1017 (9th Cir. 2006); In re Walsh, 229 Fed.Appx. 58, at 60 (3rd Cir. 2007).

My next question for you is, given that the Justice Department has an obligation to use its “best efforts,” 18 U.S.C. §3771(c)(1), to afford crime victims their rights, how could the Department argue in Antrobus (and later cases) that the CVRA “unambiguously” denied crime victims regular appellate protections of their rights when three circuits had reached the opposite conclusion?

GOVERNMENT’S RIGHT TO ASSERT ERROR DENIAL OF VICTIMS’ RIGHTS

To further bolster protection of crime victims’ rights, Congress also included an additional provision in the CVRA—§3771(d)(4)—allowing the Justice Department to obtain review of crime victims’ rights issues in appeals filed by defendants: “In any appeal in a criminal case, the Government may assert as error the district court’s denial of any crime victim’s right in the proceeding to which the appeal relates.” 18 U.S.C. §3771(d)(4). The intent underlying this provision was to supplement the crime victims’ appeal provision found in §3771(d)(3) by permitting the Department to also help develop a body of case law expanding crime victims’ rights in the many defense appeals that are filed. It was not intended to in any way narrow crime victims’ rights to seek relief under §3771(d)(3). Nor was it intended to bar crime victims from asserting other remedies. For instance, it was not intended to block crime victims from taking an ordinary appeal from an adverse decision affecting their rights (such as a decision denying restitution) under 28 U.S.C. §1291. Crime victims had been allowed to take such appeals in various circuits even before the passage of the CVRA. See, e.g., United States v. Kones, 77 F.3d 66 (3rd Cir. 1996) (crime victim allowed to appeal restitution ruling); United States v. Perry, 360 F.3d 519 (6th Cir. 2004) (crime victims allowed to appeal restitution lien issue); Doe v. United States, 666 F.2d 43, 46 (4th Cir. 1981) (crime victim allowed to appeal rape shield ruling).

As I explained at the time the CVRA was under consideration, this provision supplemented those pre-existing decisions by “allow[ing] the Government to assert a victim’s right on appeal even when it is the defendant who seeks appeal of his or her conviction. This ensures that victims’ rights are protected throughout the criminal justice process and that they do not fall by the wayside during what can often be an extended appeal that the victim is not a party to.” 150 CONG. REC. S4270 (Apr. 22, 2004) (statement of Sen. Kyl).

I have heard from crime victims’ advocates that the Department has not been actively enforcing this provision. Indeed, these advocates tell me that they are unaware of even a single case where the Department has used this supplemental remedy. My final question: Is it true that the Department has never used this provision in even a single case in the more than six years since the CVRA was enacted?

Sincerely,

JON KYL,
U.S. Senator.

HONORING OUR ARMED FORCES

SERGEANT VORASACK T. KAYSANA

Mr. BENNET. Mr. President, it is with a heavy heart that I rise today to honor the life and heroic service of SGT Vorasack T. Kaysana. Sergeant Kaysana, assigned to the Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, based in Fort Hood, TX, died on April 10, 2011. Sergeant Kaysana was serving in support of Operation New Dawn in Kirkuk, Iraq. He was 30 years old.

A native of Westminster, CO, Sergeant Kaysana enlisted in the Army in 2005. During over 6 years of service, he distinguished himself through his courage and dedication to duty. Sergeant Kaysana’s exemplary service quickly won the recognition of his commanding officers. He earned, among other decorations, the Iraq Campaign Medal, the Global War on Terrorism Service Medal, and the Army Good Conduct Medal.

Sergeant Kaysana worked on the front lines of battle, serving in the most dangerous areas of Iraq. Mark Twain once said, “The fear of death follows from the fear of life. A man who lives fully is prepared to die at any time.” Sergeant Kaysana’s service was in keeping with this sentiment—by selflessly putting country first, he lived life to the fullest. He lived with a sense of the highest honorable purpose.

At substantial personal risk, he braved the chaos of combat zones throughout Iraq. Though his fate on the battlefield was uncertain, he pushed forward, protecting America’s citizens, her safety, and the freedoms we hold dear. For his service and the lives he touched, Sergeant Kaysana will forever be remembered as one of our country’s bravest.

To Sergeant Kaysana’s parents, Thong Chanh and Manithip, and to his entire family, I cannot imagine the sorrow you must be feeling. I hope that, in time, the pain of your loss will be eased by your pride in Vorasack’s service and by your knowledge that his country will never forget him. We are humbled by his service and his sacrifice.

GRAZING IMPROVEMENT ACT

Mr. BARRASSO. Mr. President, I rise today to submit for the RECORD an article written by Karen Budd-Falen and published May 28, 2011, in the Wyoming Livestock Journal. The article’s title is “Leveling the Playing Field: Support for the Grazing Improvement Act of 2011.”

The title of the article is instructive. Anyone living and working in rural communities knows the playing field is not level. The National Environmental Policy Act has become the preferred tool to delay and litigate grazing permit renewals for American ranchers.

Livestock grazing on public lands has a strong tradition in Wyoming and all Western States. Ranchers are proud stewards of the land, yet the permitting process to renew their permits is severely backlogged due to litigation aimed at eliminating livestock from public land.

During times of high unemployment and increasing food prices, we need to be encouraging jobs in rural economies. We need to be fostering an environment to raise more high quality, safe, American beef and lamb; not litigating less.

That is why I introduced the Grazing Improvement Act of 2011. This legislation will provide the certainty and stability public grazing permit holders desperately need in order to continue supporting rural jobs, providing healthy food, and maintaining open spaces for recreation and wildlife.

It is time to help level the playing field for hard working ranching families across the West. Their livelihood should not be held hostage by litigation and anti-grazing special interest groups. I thank my colleagues, Senators ENZI, CRAPO, HATCH, HELLER, RISCH, and THUNE, in supporting ranching families and this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the article to which I referred.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LEVELING THE PLAYING FIELD: SUPPORT FOR
THE GRAZING IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 2011

(By Karen Budd-Falen)

If jobs and the economy are the number one concern for America, why are rural communities and ranchers under attack by radical environmental groups and overzealous federal regulators?

America depends upon the hundreds of products that livestock provide, yet radical groups and oppressive regulations make it almost impossible for ranchers to stay in business. Opposition to these jobs comes in the form of litigation by radical environmental groups to eliminate grazing on public lands, radical environmental group pressure to force "voluntary" grazing permit buy-outs from "willing sellers," and holding permittees hostage to the court deference given to regulatory "experts." The playing field is not level and the rancher is on the losing side. The Grazing Improvement Act of 2011 will level the playing field. I urge your support.

The Grazing Improvement Act of 2011 does the following:

1. Term of Grazing Leases and Permits. Both BLM and Forest Service term grazing permits are for a 10-year term. This bill extends that term to 20 years. This extension does not affect either the BLM's or Forest Service's ability to make interim management decisions based upon resource or other needs, nor does it impact the preference right of renewal for term grazing permits or leases.

2. Renewal, Transfer and Reissuance of Grazing Leases and Permits. This section codifies the various "appropriation riders" for the BLM and Forest Service requiring that permits being reissued, renewed or transferred continue to follow the existing terms and conditions until the paperwork is complete. Thus, the rancher is not held hostage to the ability of the agency to get its job done—a job that is admittedly harder because of radical environmental appeals, litigation and FOIA requests.

This bill also codifies the ability of the BLM and Forest Service to "categorically exclude" grazing permit renewal, reissuance or transfer from the paperwork requirements under National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) if the permit or lease continues current grazing management on the allotment. Minor modifications to a permit or lease can also be categorically excluded from NEPA if monitoring indicates that the current grazing management has met or is moving toward rangeland and riparian objectives and there are no "extraordinary circumstances." Finally, this section allows the BLM and Forest Service to continue to set their priority and timing for permit renewal or reissuance.

3. Applicability of Administrative Procedure Act. This provision is really what levels the playing field for the rancher, against the environmental "willing buyer" and the arbitrary decisions of the governmental regulator.

First, this provision applies a real decision making process, with an independent hearing officer or judge, to Forest Service administrative appeals. Currently, legal challenges to Forest Service decisions are heard by the "next higher Forest Service line officer." There have long been allegations that this system is significantly skewed so that the Forest Service decision maker is "almost always right." For example, out of the 28 decisions that were administratively appealed in Forest Service Region 2 (Wyoming, Colorado, Kansas, Nebraska, South Dakota) from 2009 to the present, only two were rejected as being legally or factually wrong. In that same time period, in California, out of 78 appeals, only 13 decisions were either rejected or withdrawn. In Arizona and New Mexico, the Forest Service "independent review by the next higher line officer" only found 15 out of 83 decisions were deficient. In other words, just considering these three Forest Service regions, the agency found itself right 85 percent of the time. In a fair and equal system, no one is right that many times!

This provision would change that pattern so that Forest Service grazing permittees would appeal the decisions they believed were legally, factually or scientifically wrong to an independent law judge and the Forest Service would have to show why its decision is right, rather than the permittee having to show why the decision is wrong. The permittee would also be able to cross-examine Forest Service "experts" on the reasons for the decision and the agency would have to supply some justification for its decision. It is critical that Forest Service permittees have the ability to protect themselves from arbitrary decisions—an ability they do not have now.

Second, this Act would level the playing field for BLM permittees. Like the Forest Service provisions discussed above, this bill "changes" the current appeals system by requiring the BLM to prove its decision is legally and scientifically correct, rather than forcing the permittee to prove why the decision is legally and scientifically wrong.

Additionally, the OHA has determined that when the BLM issues a decision adversely affecting a permittee's grazing privileges, the BLM decision can still be upheld, even if the BLM did not comply with all of the grazing regulations. In short, under the current appeals system, the permittee's experts have to show why the BLM experts are wrong (a burden that is very hard to carry) and the BLM decision can still be held to be correct, even if the BLM only substantially complied with its regulations. This is not a level playing field and a problem that absolutely needs corrected.

Finally, this section also returns to the law the "automatic stay" provisions eliminated by the Bruce Babbitt "Range Reform '94" regulations, except for decisions of a temporary nature and except in emergency situations.

In truth, this bill is more than mere technical changes to erroneous agency regulations—it gives some very real protection to the permittees. For example, the Ruby Pipeline "donation" to Western Watersheds Project to purchase grazing preferences on a "willing seller" basis only works if the permittee is honestly "willing to sell." However, if the permittee is always behind the curve in protecting his grazing permit and the only way he can "win" is by "voluntarily selling" his permit for pennies on the dollar, the word "willing" is truly compulsion. And, in the case of the Forest Service, the current administrative appeals process is like asking your father to change the decision of your mother, when your mother and father agreed on the decision before it was dictated to you.

Finally, this bill reverses the U.S. Justice Department capitulations to environmental groups during the course of recent litigation. These "settlements" have significantly restricted the BLM's and Forest Service's ability to legitimately use categorical exclusions to renew grazing permits. Neither the Justice Department nor the federal bureaucrats should be allowed to make Congressional policy without the Congressional branch of government.

Make no mistake—this is not just a public lands ranchers' bill; this bill will help preserve family ranches, rural communities and the American beef supply. This is an American jobs bill! I urge your support and ask that you request your Congressional representatives support this bill.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

30TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE GOOD SHEPHERD FOOD BANK

• Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President. In early 1981, JoAnn and Ray Pike of Lewiston, ME, became concerned about the growing number of families and elderly in their community who were going hungry. Inspired by a newspaper story about an organization in Kansas City that received food donations from the food industry to distribute to those in need, the Pikes and their home prayer group turned concern into action.

On Palm Sunday of that year, the people of the twin cities of Lewiston-Auburn joined in a walkathon and raised $6,000. The Good Shepherd Food Bank was born. Thirty years later, it serves all 16 Maine counties, providing nourishment and hope to more than 70,000 Maine people each month.

This remarkable story of compassion started small. The first food bank was located in an apartment and garage at the Pike home. Within 8 months, the quantity of donated food outgrew that space and the operation moved to a former textile mill in Lewiston. Today, the food bank has more than 100,000-square feet of warehouse space in Lewiston, Portland, and Brewer, enough to store 12 million pounds of food per year.

At first, a handful of food companies joined this effort. Word of the good work being done in Lewiston quickly spread, and food manufacturers, distributors, and supermarkets throughout Maine stepped forward—more than 200 companies now contribute to the food bank.

Getting so much food to so many people over such a large area is a great challenge. It is a challenge that has been met by volunteers. The Good Shepherd Food Bank has established partnerships with more than 600 organizations throughout Maine—churches, charities, and civic clubs—that form a vast distribution network. This results in an operation of extraordinary efficiency. For every $1 donated to support food bank operations, $8.50 worth of food is provided.

As a founding member of the Senate Hunger Caucus, I know we have done much here in Washington to ensure food security for all, but that there is more to do. I also know that so much of the real work of helping those in need is done in our communities by caring and dedicated citizens. The Good Shepherd Food Bank of Maine is a shining example of such caring and dedication, and I congratulate this wonderful organization and its many supporters on 30 years of inspiring service.●

TRIBUTE TO MALCOLM ROSS O'NEILL

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, today I wish to recognize the distinguished career of a highly decorated soldier and accomplished public servant. Following decades of unwavering service to our Nation, Dr. Malcolm Ross O'Neill recently retired as the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Acquisition, Logistics & Technology, AL&T. In his capacity as the Assistant Secretary and Army acquisition executive, Dr. O'Neill led the Army's 41,000-member acquisition workforce in its vital mission to equip and sustain the world's most capable, powerful, and respected Army.

Dr. O'Neill has made significant contributions to our national security over the course of a career spanning nearly five decades. He proudly served 34 years on active duty as an Army officer, both in peacetime and in combat. Dr. O'Neill was commissioned in the U.S. Army as a field artillery officer in 1962 and served with the 82nd Airborne Division; as an adviser with the 21st Reconnaissance Company of the 21st Army of the Republic of Vietnam Division; and assistant chief of staff, Ammunition, with the Danang Support Command in Vietnam. His first acquisition job was as a member of the source selection team for what was then called surface-to-air missile, development—now the Patriot missile system. His extensive military experience includes service as commander, U.S. Army Laboratory Command; deputy director of the Strategic Defense Initiative Organization; and director of the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization.

Under Dr. O'Neill's leadership as Assistant Secretary of the Army, the Army acquisition community has honored its paramount commitment to meet the needs of soldiers in combat missions today. However, Dr. O'Neill also reenergized the Army's efforts to develop advanced soldier capabilities for tomorrow's conflicts. He reminded us that scientific and technical advancements play a critical role in maintaining the Army's unparalleled preeminence in the future. As the lead Army acquisition official, Dr. O'Neill made significant progress in developing a vigorous and robust science and technology portfolio incorporating the combined efforts of Army scientists, labs, advisory boards and other stakeholders. These accomplishments will leave an indelible impact on the Army's warfighting capabilities.

Dr. O'Neill's emphasis on sound management and execution of major weapon systems has helped the Army to prioritize capabilities and modify existing programs to achieve long-term success. He has played a critical role in bringing the Army requirements, resourcing, testing, and acquisition communities together to make informed decisions and adjustments within key programs. As the Army and Department of Defense continue to transform through an era of limited resources, Dr. O'Neill championed the importance of wise investments, competition, and sound acquisition strategies to ensure that more money was spent on the warfighting capabilities of our soldiers and less on overhead. The Army is in a better position to adapt to an ever-changing environment of competing needs as a result of his efforts.

Three words define this dedicated public servant: honor, integrity, and courage. The Nation is in his debt for his many accomplishments during the long and distinguished career of Malcolm Ross O'Neill.●

100TH ANNIVERSARY OF CHALLENGE DAIRY PRODUCTS

● Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues a milestone that has been reached by an important cooperative association responsible for the marketing and distribution of dairy products from 450 California family-owned dairies.

Challenge opened for business under the name of Challenge Cream & Butter Association 100 years ago with four employees and a wagon. That first day, Challenge sold 12 pounds of butter. Today, Challenge Butter is the largest butter brand in the West, and Challenge Dairy is the leading dairy foodservice provider in California, with eight distribution centers spanning the State in Lodi, San Leandro, Monterey, Fresno, Santa Maria, Ventura, Los Angeles, and San Diego. Challenge directly employs over 175 hard-working California citizens and has aided thousands of California dairy farmers in their success over the years. Today, more than 450 dairies are part of Challenge's cooperative, putting tens of millions of dollars into California's economy annually.

Challenge's success is made up of dedicated California dairy farmers and employees who have ensured the quality of all products produced from each of its creameries. Early on, dairymen realized marketing was and remains to be key in successfully spreading the word about the quality of their products, which was why Challenge was conceived.

The benefits of farmer cooperation were so effective that the status of every single dairyman was materially improved, just from their existence. A leader in quality improvement, Challenge established the standards all other dairy organizations followed. Thus, Challenge has figuratively held a protective umbrella over farm endeavors, for the good of the farmers and the Nation, for more than a century.

By refusing to sell any item that didn't meet the highest standards, Challenge built a reputation for quality. That reputation has grown as Challenge led the way in the dairy industry with product and manufacturing innovations such as the aluminum butter churn, the first successful metal butter churn in the world.

Now a wholly owned subsidiary of California Dairies, Inc. CDI, California's largest dairy provider and the second largest in the country, Challenge has grown to represent more than 450 dairy farmers and markets nearly half of CDI's butter supply. CDI has six manufacturing facilities that are located throughout the central valley and directly employs over 740 people.

Challenge has operated through two World Wars and the Great Depression in addition to a number of other obstacles. Through it all, the company adapted and persevered to continue fulfilling the people's need for quality dairy products and support the dairy farmers behind producing products. We believe Challenge embodies the determination and the spirit of the people of California.●

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. BINGAMAN (for himself and Ms. MURKOWSKI):

S. 1160. A bill to improve the administration of the Department of Energy, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Department of Energy Administrative Improvement Act of 2011. The bill makes several improvements to the way the Department of Energy, DOE, conducts its business and in doing so is designed to give taxpayers a better return on their investments in DOE programs.

Senator MURKOWSKI, who is the ranking member of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, is a cosponsor of this bill. These provisions were taken from the energy bill, S. 1462, reported out of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee last Congress. The provisions in this bill were adopted unanimously in the last Congress by members of the Committee as part of our work on S. 1462. Let me briefly highlight the sections of this bill.

Section 3 was taken from the recommendations of a 2009 report by the National Academy of Public Administration, which reviewed the business practices of the Department. Similar to the Department of Defense, it requires DOE to submit a 5-year budget profile for its programs with the DOE's annual budget submission to Congress. A 5-year estimate will encourage the Department to think about long-term budget implications of programs rather than on a year-to-year basis.

Section 4 replaces a provision enacted into law in the section 1007 of the Energy Policy Act of 2005, 42 U.S.C. 7256(g), relating to Other Transactions Authority. Section 1007 was based on the similar authority applying to the Department of Defense. Section 4 is a fresh re-write of the authority so it is organic within the Department of Energy Organization Act and not the Department of Defense's authorities. The language is largely the same in content as that in section 1007 of the Energy Policy Act of 2005. The DOE went through an extensive comment period in developing rules for the use of this authority after it was enacted into law in 2005 to ensure transparency in its development and use. This section still contains reporting requirements to Congress on the use of this authority to ensure effective oversight. The Advanced Research Projects Agency—Energy has used this authority to initiate projects with energy companies that were not traditional government contractors and I believe this is a sound addition to the contracting authorities available to the Department.

Section 5 permits the DOE to designate and protect proprietary data for a period of 5 years for transactions entered into by the Department. Section 3001 of Energy Policy Act of 1992, 42 U.S.C. 13541, contained various provisions to protect results from industry partnerships with the Department of Energy. The 1992 data protection provision was carried forward implicitly in section 1005 of the Energy Policy Act of 2005, 42 U.S.C. 16395. This section gives the Secretary of Energy explicit authority to protect proprietary data in order to promote commercialization of new technology arising from the public-private partnerships in such areas as energy storage, smart grid and advanced nuclear technologies.

Section 6 gives the Department direct hire authority for a period of two years consistent with merit principles and public notice. Similar authority, known as excepted personnel authority, originally was available to the DOE's predecessor agency, the Atomic Energy Commission. That authority transferred to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, NRC, but not the DOE. Interestingly, the NRC with its large scientific and engineering workforce has been rated as one of the best places to work in the federal government. While flexible personnel authorities are not singularly determinative of agency performance, I believe this pilot program will be an important tool for the Department to attract the best and brightest engineers, scientists and specialized technical personnel to work on its wide array of missions.

Section 7 gives the DOE critical pay authority to hire up to 40 highly skilled individuals for key or critical mission positions at the Department, for a period of up to 4 years. This will enable DOE to attract highly qualified individuals from industry and academia for positions within the Department typical of its complicated science and engineering missions.

Section 8 gives the DOE the authority to rehire retired DOE employees for mission-critical positions without impacting their retirement annuity. Many Department employees served in excess of 20 or 30 years in programmatic positions managing large, technically complicated projects. This authority will enable continuity of knowledge transfer as newer employees are hired.

Section 9 updates the list of DOE National Laboratories in section 2 of the Energy Policy Act of 2005, 42 U.S.C. 15801(3) to reflect the name change of the Stanford Linear Accelerator Center to "SLAC National Accelerator Laboratory".

The Department of Energy has one of the most technical and complicated missions in the Federal Government, which includes managing our Nation's nuclear stockpile, basic and applied energy research, environmental cleanup of former cold war nuclear weapons production sites, and finally the management of large contracts spanning decades. I hope that these provisions will be helpful to the Department to efficiently conduct its missions.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC. 9. DEFINITION OF NATIONAL LABORATORY.

Section 2(3) of the Energy Policy Act of 2005 (42 U.S.C. 15801(3)) is amended by striking subparagraph (P) and inserting the following:

“(P) SLAC National Accelerator Laboratory.”

By Mr. WEBB (for himself and Mr. CORKER):

S.J. Res. 18. A joint resolution prohibiting the deployment, establishment, or maintenance of a presence of units and members of the United States Armed Forces on the ground in Libya, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. President, I am pleased to come to the Senate floor, along with my colleague, Senator CORKER, a fellow member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, to speak about a joint resolution we are introducing today that deals with the situation in Libya.

This is introduced as a joint resolution rather than as an amendment on the current legislation because I believe this matter is serious enough that our body should actually consider this as a stand-alone piece of legislation and coordinate it with the House and get this passed with due speed.

This resolution, first of all, contains a statement of policy that American Armed Forces should be used exclusively to defend and advance our national security interests.

Second, it prohibits the deployment, establishment, or maintenance of ground troops in Libya, with two notable exceptions. The first would be for the purpose of the immediate personal defense of American Government officials, including diplomatic representatives, which I believe would be an important exclusion once and if we decide to conduct negotiations or reestablish our Embassy inside Libya. The other exception would be for the purpose of rescuing members of our Armed Forces who would be in Libya and would be under imminent danger.

It also prohibits the awarding of a contract to private security contractors to conduct, establish, or maintain any activities on the ground in Libya.

This language in section 2 is similar to language that passed the House last week with a vote of 416 to 5.

Section 3 includes a sense of Congress that the President should request congressional authorization for the continuation of American involvement in ongoing activities in Libya, and that the Congress, in its constitutional role, should debate and consider this matter expeditiously.

Sections 4 and 5 require the transmission of information to the Congress on a wide variety of information that, to this point, we have not been properly included on. That language, in some form, passed the House last Friday with a vote of 268 to 145.

Again, I appreciate very much Senator CORKER joining me as the principal cosponsor of this joint resolution.

I would like to explain why I believe it is important we take this measure as a body, as a Congress, in response to the actions the President took in Libya nearly 3 months ago.

First, we know, and we are reminded every day, that our economy is going through a terrible crisis, even as we are expending hundreds of billions of dollars every year on wars in the most vitriolic and contentious parts of the world.

Second, our military has been engaged in continuous combat operations for nearly 10 years. We still have 45,000 military members in Iraq despite a stated commitment for a full withdrawal by the end of this year. We have about 100,000 troops in Afghanistan, and the prospect for a meaningful withdrawal in the short term does not look good.

When we examine the conditions under which the President ordered our military into action in Libya, we are faced, in my view, with the prospect of a very troubling, if not downright odd, historical precedent that has the potential to haunt us for decades.

The issue in play is not simply whether the President should ask the Congress for a declaration of war, nor is it wholly about whether the President has violated the edicts of the War Powers Act, which, in my view, he clearly has. The issue for us to consider is whether a President—any President—can unilaterally begin, and continue, a military campaign for reasons that he alone defines as meeting the demanding standards of a vital national interest worthy of risking American lives and expending billions of dollars of our taxpayers' money.

What was the standard in this case? The initial justification was that a dictator might retaliate against people who rebelled against him. I do not make light of the potential tragedy involved in such a possibility, although it should be pointed out that there are a lot of dictators in this world and very few democracies in this particular region, which gives this standard a pretty broad base if a President decides to use it again. Then, predictably, once military operations began in Libya, the stated goal became regime change, with combat now having dragged on for nearly 3 months.

So in a world filled with cruelty, the question becomes whether a President—any President—should be able to pick and choose when and where to use military force using such a vague standard. Actually that is the most important question. Given our system of government, who should decide? Even if a President should unilaterally decide on the basis of overwhelming, vital national interests that requires immediate action, how long should that decision be honored, and to what lengths should our military go before the matter is able to come under the proper scrutiny and boundaries of our Congress?

Let's review the bidding. What did it look like when our President ordered our military into action in Libya, and what has happened since? Was our country under attack or under the threat of an imminent attack? Was a clearly vital national interest at stake? Were we invoking the inherent right of self-defense as outlined in the United Nations charter? Were we called upon by treaty commitments to come to the aid of an ally? Were we responding in kind to an attack on our forces elsewhere as we did in the 1986 raids in Libya when I was in the Pentagon, after American soldiers had been killed in a disco in Berlin? Were we rescuing Americans in distress as we did in Grenada in 1983? No, we were not.

The President followed no clear historical standard when he unilaterally decided to use force in Libya. Once this action continued beyond his original definition of "days, not weeks," he did not seek the approval of Congress. While he has discussed this matter with some Members of Congress, he has not formally conferred with the legislative branch.

I believe it is appropriate to question on whose behalf this continuing action is being taken, and, most importantly at this point, what is going to be asked of our military in the coming months, assuming the Qadhafi regime does fall? This is not even a civil war.

As Secretary of Defense Gates commented to me when I asked him that question during a hearing on the Armed Services Committee recently: You don't have a civil war when there is no clearly formed opposition movement. It has been a random rebellion. We can empathize with the frustrations of this rebellion, but looking into the future, the only thing the opponents of the present regime all seem to agree on is that Qadhafi should go.

As I have said repeatedly over the past few months, this matters greatly when one considers what the aftermath of this action could entail for the international community.

An additional curiosity is that we still recognize this regime even as we have been participating for nearly 3 months in actions designed to destroy it. I have raised this matter repeatedly with our State Department. We have not severed relations with this regime, nor have we recognized a successor regime. We have merely suspended our relations. So we are looking at something of a historical anomaly. We are participating in attacks on a regime that we recognize, on behalf of rebel forces that are so amorphous that we don't, and we really do not know what is going to replace the regime that we recognize once it is gone.

Obviously, I am not raising these points out of any lasting love for Mr. Qadhafi or any hopes that he continues in his present position. But let's be very clear. This is a region rife with tribalism, fierce loyalties, and brutal retaliation. In this part of the world the lust for revenge upon those who try to destroy you is not a characteristic that is unique to Mr. Qadhafi. Whether Qadhafi stays or falls, that is very likely going to be the future at some level in Libya, and this is not a place for American troops to be sent in order to sort out this mess. If other nations decide to do so, I certainly have no objection. But our military is stretched too thin, our economy is too fragile, and the reasons for us to continue in this effort are too ill-defined.

So it is important for the Congress to step in and to clearly define the boundaries of our involvement. We should be saying without hesitation that no American ground personnel should be introduced into Libya, now or in the future. We should also be insisting on fair and open communication from this administration to the Congress rather than the stonewalling that has characterized the past 3 months.

This is not a political issue for me. Rather, it is an issue of how our government is structured. I would submit that this issue has historical consequences. Our three branches of government were carefully designed by the Founding Fathers to guard against hasty decisions or judgments that would not be fully in our national interest. For centuries, the English monarchs had been able to wage wars of choice, with the only restriction being whether Parliament would raise enough taxes to fund their adventurous armies. Our Founding Fathers said no. The Framers of the Constitution deliberately gave the Congress the specific power to rein in such conduct and to protect our people from unwise choices by insisting on a democratic consensus.

The structure of international relations has become much more complex since then, but the principle is still vital, and it still must hold.

Over the past 10 years, in pursuit of a workable formula with which to defend our Nation against legitimate threats, we have allowed the balance of power in our constitutional system to tilt far too heavily to the executive branch. There could be no clearer example of why the Congress must finally say "enough is enough" than the situation we now face in Libya. We must clearly say, as a governing body, that there are boundaries on the conduct of a President—any President—when it comes to his or her unilateral decision to use military force. We should be clear that American military forces—in uniform or not—do not belong on the ground in Libya.

We should make it clear that we will not be deterred in requests for information that allow us to perform our responsibilities. To do less than that would bring us back in time, to a system of government our forefathers risked their lives to improve upon. We are not the Parliament of King Charles. I believe my fellow Members would agree that our role as a legislative body is more than that of collecting taxes so that the President—any President—can raise armies and fight wars of his own choosing. And that is why I am asking every Senator to support this legislation.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. CORKER. Mr. President, I am pleased to join the distinguished Senator from Virginia, the former Secretary of the Navy, in the introduction of this joint resolution, along with Senator LEE from Utah. I look forward to a debate of this resolution next week which I hope will end up passing both bodies and which calls for a number of answers we have been requesting to come forth.

I wish to discuss the ongoing situation in Libya where—specifically U.S. participation in NATO military operations authorized by the United Nations' Security Council resolution passed on March 17, 2011. For those of you listening, you heard me correctly. It was authorized by the United Nations, not the U.S. Congress. We are spending roughly $2 million per day on a mission on which the President has yet to broadly consult Congress.

I find it unbelievable that the President would seek the approval of the United Nations and the Arab League for military operations over Libya while sidelining the body that speaks for the American people, not even answering our questions. This is not consultation, nor is the President heeding the concerns of his own constituents.

For many weeks now, I and many colleagues, for that matter, have attempted to gain answers to some of the most basic questions about what we are doing in Libya. Through hearings in the Foreign Relations Committee, we have not received these answers. We have asked for specific witnesses and received no response. This is not consultation.

In my ongoing attempts to receive answers to these questions, I sent a letter to Secretary Clinton and Secretary Gates on April 14, 2011, specifically outlining five questions. I have the letter here and ask unanimous consent to have this letter printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,

Washington, DC, April 14, 2011.

Hon. HILLARY RODHAM CLINTON,
Secretary of State, U.S. Department of State,
Washington, DC.

Hon. ROBERT M. GATES,
Secretary of Defense, U.S. Department of Defense, Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY CLINTON AND SECRETARY GATES: It has now been nearly one month since the United States first engaged in coalition operations in Libya. Since that time, there has been relatively infrequent information sharing with the Congress regarding the full scope of U.S. involvement in the conflict. Administration officials have assured Congress that the United States was playing only a supporting role in ongoing operations in Libya, and those operations did not include kinetic operations. Yesterday, April 13, 2011, it was revealed during a Pentagon briefing that three U.S. aircraft assigned to NATO had fired ordnance. This seems contradictory to the information we have previously received and is an example of the disconnect between Congress and the administration on the nature of the U.S. role in Libya. To that end, I ask that you provide the following:

(1) A full accounting of U.S. assets assigned to the mission and how they are being utilized.

(2) Requests the U.S. has received from coalition partners and Libyan opposition forces for materiel and support—both fulfilled and denied.

(3) The contents of additional U.S. offers of assistance.

(4) Plans to offer additional assistance to Libyan opposition forces.

(5) All meetings that the administration has engaged in with coalition partners, the Libya contact group and the Libyan opposition forces to discuss the operations and political future of Libya.

I thank you for your service to our country, and I look forward to your prompt reply to my request.

Sincerely,

BOB CORKER,
U.S. Senator.

Mr. CORKER. Mr. President, today, 1 day shy of 8 weeks later, I finally received a response. This response did not come from Secretary Clinton. It did not come from Secretary Gates. This response came from the Acting Assistant Secretary of State for Legislative Affairs and only paid lipservice to one of my five specific requests for information.

I ask unanimous consent to have this "nonresponse" printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, DC, June 6, 2011.

Hon. BOB CORKER,

DEAR SENATOR CORKER: Thank you for your letter of April 14 regarding the State Department's effort to assist the coalition and support the people of Libya. The past three months have demonstrated Colonel Qadhafi's unrelenting efforts to kill those who wish to instill democracy in Libya and the use of barbarous, indiscriminant bombing of cities and vital civilian infrastructure. These acts further delegitimize Qadhafi as a leader of the Libyan people.

The State Department is working to ensure the coalition remains united behind the goal of protecting the people of Libya. We continue to work closely with coalition and regional governments to isolate Qadhafi and create support for the opposition. This effort includes the termination of diplomatic status for Libyan diplomats still supporting the regime and the freezing of all regime assets. As the situation evolves, we continue to evaluate further options to increase pressure on Qadhafi to step down. We are also considering options to provide the opposition the financial wherewithal it needs to support itself.

Along with looking at multiple ways to increase pressure on the Qadhafi regime, the State Department is looking at better ways to provide humanitarian assistance to civilians in conflict areas. We are assessing options for assistance we could provide to the Libyan people and are consulting directly with the opposition and our international partners. Some aid has been identified; the President directed up to $25 million in non-lethal items from U.S. government stocks, including medical supplies, uniforms, boots, tents, personal protective gear, and pre-packaged rations.

We continue working with the international community to determine the best way to support the Transitional National Council (TNC) in meeting its financial needs. The May 5 Libya Contact Group meeting in Rome endorsed the creation of a Temporary Financial Mechanism, which will help facilitate and coordinate financial assistance. Additionally, the United States is providing $53.5 million in humanitarian assistance to support people affected by the crisis.

Chris Stevens, U.S. Envoy to the TNC, remains in Benghazi and continues to hold productive meetings with high-level members of the TNC. In addition to Secretary Clinton's meetings with TNC leadership, Mr. Stevens regularly meets with senior TNC leaders to better understand the steps they are undertaking to build a democracy based on universal principles of respect for human rights and rule of law. While we are working closely with the TNC, we also continue to meet with a broad spectrum of Libyans involved in the opposition writ large.

Thank you again for your interest and support for Libya. Please do not hesitate to contact us again if we can be of further assistance on this or any other matter.

Sincerely,

JOSEPH E. MACMANUS,
Acting Assistant Secretary, Legislative Affairs.

Mr. CORKER. Mr. President, this is unacceptable. This is an unacceptable way to treat a coequal branch of the U.S. Government that is granted certain responsibilities to our Armed Forces by the Founders of our country. Without these answers, Members of Congress are unable to assess critical questions and debate whether we should continue to engage in military operations in Libya.

That is why I am pleased to join my colleagues, Senator WEBB and Senator LEE, in introducing S.J. Res. 18 today. This is a joint resolution drawing on language that already passed the House of Representatives last week, and it requires the President to answer 21 questions critical to determining whether engagement in Libya is in the vital national interest of the United States.

This joint resolution further expresses the sense of Congress that the President should request authorization from Congress for the continuation of U.S. involvement in ongoing NATO activities in Libya.

It says Congress should fully debate and consider such a request in an expedient manner. I can't imagine there is anybody in this body who would not like to debate this issue on the floor, regardless of how they may feel about this conflict. We owe it to every man and woman who puts on a uniform to serve our country and to every taxpayer who funds the operation to be clear that our entry into any conflict has been thoughtfully considered, contains clear justification, a clear mission, and a clear debate of the risks and benefits. The information sought by this joint resolution will help us meet those obligations.

I look forward to the Senate considering this joint resolution in the near future—hopefully next week.

SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE RESOLUTION 205—DESIGNATING THE PERIOD BEGINNING ON JUNE 19, 2011, AND ENDING ON JUNE 25, 2011, AS "POLYCYSTIC KIDNEY DISEASE AWARENESS WEEK", AND RAISING AWARENESS AND UNDERSTANDING OF POLYCYSTIC KIDNEY DISEASE AND THE IMPACT SUCH DISEASE HAS ON PATIENTS

Mr. KOHL (for himself and Mr. HATCH) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 205

Whereas polycystic kidney disease, known as "PKD", is one of the world's most prevalent life-threatening genetic diseases, affecting an estimated 600,000 people in the United States, including newborns, children, and adults regardless of sex, age, race, geography, income or ethnicity;

Whereas there are 2 forms of polycystic kidney disease, autosomal dominant (ADPKD), affecting 1 in 500 people worldwide, and autosomal recessive (ARPKD), a rare form, affecting 1 in 20,000 live births and frequently leading to early death;

Whereas polycystic kidney disease causes multiple cysts to form on both kidneys (ranging in size from a pinhead to a grapefruit), leading to an increase in kidney size and weight;

Whereas polycystic kidney disease is a systemic disease that causes damage to the kidneys and the cardiovascular, endocrine, hepatic, and gastrointestinal systems;

Whereas patients with polycystic kidney disease often experience no symptoms early in the disease, and many patients do not realize they have polycystic kidney disease until other organs are affected;

Whereas symptoms of polycystic kidney disease may include high blood pressure, chronic pain in the back, sides or abdomen, blood in the urine, urinary tract infection, heart disease, and kidney stones;

Whereas polycystic kidney disease is the number one genetic cause of kidney failure in the United States;

Whereas more than half of polycystic kidney disease patients will reach kidney failure and require dialysis or a kidney transplant to survive, thus placing an extra strain on dialysis and kidney transplantation resources;

Whereas there is no treatment or cure for polycystic kidney disease; and

Whereas there are thousands of volunteers nationwide dedicated to expanding essential research, fostering public awareness and understanding, educating patients and their families about polycystic kidney disease to improve treatment and care, providing appropriate moral support, and encouraging people to become organ donors: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) designates the period beginning on June 19, 2011, and ending on June 25, 2011, as "Polycystic Kidney Disease Awareness Week";

(2) supports the goals and ideals of Polycystic Kidney Disease Awareness Week, to raise public awareness and understanding of polycystic kidney disease;

(3) recognizes the need for additional research to find treatments and a cure for polycystic kidney disease; and

(4) encourages the people of the United States and interested groups to support Polycystic Kidney Disease Awareness Week through appropriate ceremonies and activities, to promote public awareness of polycystic kidney disease, and to foster understanding of the impact of such disease on patients and their families.

SENATE RESOLUTION 206—DESIGNATING JUNE 20, 2011, AS “AMERICAN EAGLE DAY”, AND CELEBRATING THE RECOVERY AND RESTORATION OF THE BALD EAGLE, THE NATIONAL SYMBOL OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. ALEXANDER (for himself, Mr. INOUE, Mr. HOEVEN, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Mr. ROBERTS, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. BROWN of Massachusetts, Mrs. BOXER, and Mr. CORKER) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 206

Whereas on June 20, 1782, the bald eagle was officially designated as the national emblem of the United States by the founding fathers at the Second Continental Congress;

Whereas the bald eagle is the central image of the Great Seal of the United States;

Whereas the image of the bald eagle is displayed in the official seal of many branches and departments of the Federal Government, including—

- (1) the Office of the President;
- (2) the Office of the Vice President;
- (3) Congress;
- (4) the Supreme Court;
- (5) the Department of the Treasury;
- (6) the Department of Defense;
- (7) the Department of Justice;
- (8) the Department of State;
- (9) the Department of Commerce;
- (10) the Department of Homeland Security;
- (11) the Department of Veterans Affairs;
- (12) the Department of Labor;
- (13) the Department of Health and Human Services;
- (14) the Department of Energy;
- (15) the Department of Housing and Urban Development;
- (16) the Central Intelligence Agency; and
- (17) the Postal Service;

Whereas the bald eagle is an inspiring symbol of—

- (1) the spirit of freedom; and
- (2) the democracy of the United States;

Whereas, since the founding of the Nation, the image, meaning, and symbolism of the bald eagle have played a significant role in the art, music, history, commerce, literature, architecture, and culture of the United States;

Whereas the bald eagle is prominently featured on the stamps, currency, and coinage of the United States;

Whereas the habitat of bald eagles exists only in North America;

Whereas, by 1963, the population of bald eagles that nested in the lower 48 States had declined to approximately 417 nesting pairs;

Whereas, due to the dramatic decline in the population of bald eagles in the lower 48 States, the Secretary of the Interior listed the bald eagle as an endangered species on the list of endangered species published under section 4(c)(1) of the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1533(c)(1));

Whereas caring and concerned individuals from the Federal, State, and private sectors banded together to save, and help ensure the recovery and protection of, bald eagles;

Whereas, on July 20, 1969, the first manned lunar landing occurred in the Apollo 11 Lunar Excursion Module, which was named “Eagle”;

Whereas the “Eagle” played an integral role in achieving the goal of the United States of landing a man on the Moon and returning that man safely to Earth;

Whereas, in 1995, as a result of the efforts of those caring and concerned individuals, the Secretary of the Interior listed the bald eagle as a threatened species on the list of threatened species published under section 4(c)(1) of the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1533(c)(1));

Whereas, by 2007, the population of bald eagles that nested in the lower 48 States had increased to approximately 10,000 nesting pairs, an increase of approximately 2,500 percent from the preceding 40 years;

Whereas, in 2007, the population of bald eagles that nested in the State of Alaska was approximately 50,000 to 70,000;

Whereas, on June 28, 2007, the Secretary of the Interior removed the bald eagle from the list of threatened species published under section 4(c)(1) of the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1533(c)(1));

Whereas bald eagles remain protected in accordance with—

(1) the Act of June 8, 1940 (16 U.S.C. 668 et seq.) (commonly known as the “Bald Eagle Protection Act of 1940”); and

(2) the Migratory Bird Treaty Act (16 U.S.C. 703 et seq.);

Whereas, on January 15, 2008, the Secretary of the Treasury issued 3 limited edition bald eagle commemorative coins under the American Bald Eagle Recovery and National Emblem Commemorative Coin Act (Public Law 108-486; 118 Stat. 3934);

Whereas the sale of the limited edition bald eagle commemorative coins issued by the Secretary of the Treasury has raised approximately $7,800,000 for the nonprofit American Eagle Foundation of Pigeon Forge, Tennessee to support efforts to protect the bald eagle;

Whereas, if not for the vigilant conservation efforts of concerned Americans and the enactment of strict environmental protection laws (including regulations) the bald eagle would probably be extinct;

Whereas the American Eagle Foundation has brought substantial public attention to the cause of the protection and care of the bald eagle nationally;

Whereas November 4, 2010, marked the 25th anniversary of the American Eagle Foundation;

Whereas the dramatic recovery of the population of bald eagles—

(1) is an endangered species success story; and

(2) an inspirational example for other wildlife and natural resource conservation efforts around the world;

Whereas the initial recovery of the population of bald eagles was accomplished by the concerted efforts of numerous government agencies, corporations, organizations, and individuals; and

Whereas the continuation of recovery, management, and public awareness programs for bald eagles will be necessary to ensure—

(1) the continued progress of the recovery of bald eagles; and

(2) that the population and habitat of bald eagles will remain healthy and secure for future generations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) designates June 20, 2011, as “American Eagle Day”;

(2) applauds the issuance of bald eagle commemorative coins by the Secretary of the Treasury as a means by which to generate critical funds for the protection of bald eagles; and

(3) encourages—

(A) educational entities, organizations, businesses, conservation groups, and government agencies with a shared interest in conserving endangered species to collaborate and develop educational tools for use in the public schools of the United States; and

(B) the people of the United States to observe American Eagle Day with appropriate ceremonies and other activities.

(c) REASONABLE EFFORT TO OBTAIN NECESSARY INFORMATION.—A servicer shall be deemed to have made a reasonable effort to obtain information necessary to determine whether the borrower is eligible for a loan modification or an alternative to foreclosure if—

SEC. ____ PRESCRIBED FIRES IN FLINT HILLS REGION.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the Flint Hills Region of Kansas and Oklahoma contains the world's largest share of the remaining tallgrass prairie, and is the only place in which that habitat occurs in landscape proportions;

(2) only 4 percent of the presettlement tallgrass prairie in North America survives to this day, and 80 percent of that prairie is located in Kansas;

(3) the Flint Hills Region is also home to certain declining avian species, such as the greater prairie chicken and Henslow's sparrow, that cannot continue to exist without large expanses of native tallgrass prairie in an original state;

(4) the Flint Hills Region is a significant corridor for migrating shorebirds, such as the American golden plover, the buff-breasted sand-piper, and the upland sandpiper;

(5) beginning in the mid-19th century, cattlemen understood that the richness of the Flint Hills grasses depended on a good spring burn—something they learned from the Native Americans;

(6) fire still thrives in the Flint Hills because the ranchers, and others using the land, understand that the natural ecosystem depends on fire;

(7) ranchers, landowners, and conservation groups use prescribed burns to mimic the seasonal fires that have shaped the tallgrass prairie for thousands of years;

(8) areas not burned for several years develop mature grasses and thicker, thatch-like vegetation, a habitat that is preferred by invasive species;

(9) the Flint Hills Region is a place in the United States that is an example of the prevailing agricultural system working essentially in tandem with an ancestral native ecosystem, preserving most of the complexity and the dynamic processes that helped shape the area; and

(10) due to the uniqueness of the Flint Hills tallgrass prairie and the historic manner in which the tallgrass prairie has been managed by fire—

(A) prescribed burn practices used as of the date of enactment of this Act to manage the Flint Hills tallgrass prairie should be allowed to continue; and

(B) ambient air data resulting from fires used for that management should be not be included in determinations of compliance with the Clean Air Act (42 U.S.C. 7401 et seq.).

(b) PRESCRIBED FIRES.—The Clean Air Act is amended by inserting after section 329 (42 U.S.C. 7628) the following:

“SEC. 330. PRESCRIBED FIRES IN FLINT HILLS REGION.

“(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

“(1) FLINT HILLS REGION.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘Flint Hills Region’ means the band of hills located in eastern Kansas and north-central Oklahoma.

“(B) INCLUSIONS.—The term ‘Flint Hills Region’ includes—

“(i) Butler, Chase, Chautauqua, Clay, Cowley, Dickinson, Elk, Geary, Greenwood, Harvey, Jackson, Lyon, Marion, Marshall, Morris, Ottawa, Pottawatomie, Riley, Saline, Shawnee, Wabaunsee, Washington, and Woodson Counties in the State of Kansas; and “(ii) Osage, Tulsa, and Washington counties in the State of Oklahoma.

“(2) PRESCRIBED FIRE.—The term ‘prescribed fire’ means a fire that is set or managed by a person with the goal of enhancing a fire-dependent ecosystem or enhancing the productivity of agricultural grazing land, irrespective of the frequency with which the burn occurs.

“(b) EXCLUSION OF DATA.—In determining whether, with respect to a specific air pollutant, an exceedance or violation of a national ambient air quality standard has occurred, or for any other purpose under this Act, a State and the Administrator shall exclude data from a particular air quality monitoring location if emissions from 1 or more prescribed fires in the Flint Hills Region cause a concentration of the air pollutant at the location to be in excess of the standard.

“(c) SPECIFIC LIMITATIONS.—If emission data is excluded under subsection (b) from a particular air quality monitoring station because of emissions from 1 or more prescribed fires in the Flint Hills Region—

“(1) the Administrator shall not, as a result of the emissions, find under section 113 that a State has failed to enforce, or that a person has violated, a State implementation plan (for national primary or secondary ambient air quality standards) under section 110; and

“(2) a State shall not, as a result of the emissions, find that a person has violated, or bring an enforcement action for violation of, a State implementation plan (for national primary or secondary ambient air quality standards) under section 110.

“(d) PROHIBITION AGAINST SMOKE MANAGEMENT PLANS.—The Administrator shall not require, and a State shall not adopt, a smoke management plan under this Act in connection with any prescribed fire in the Flint Hills Region.

“(e) NOT A STATIONARY SOURCE.—No building, structure, facility, or installation may be treated as a stationary source under this Act as a result of 1 or more prescribed fires in the Flint Hills Region.

“(f) NO TITLE V PERMIT REQUIRED.—No person shall be required to obtain or modify a permit under title V in connection with a prescribed fire in the Flint Hills Region.”.

SA 432. Mr. CASEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill S. 782, to amend the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965 to reauthorize that Act, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

On page 29, after line 20, add the following:

The bill clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 205) designating the period beginning on June 19, 2011, and ending on June 25, 2011, as "Polycystic Kidney Disease Awareness Week," and raising awareness and understanding of polycystic kidney disease and the impact such disease has on patients.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be agreed to, the preamble be agreed to, the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table, with no intervening action or debate, and any statements be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 205) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 205

Whereas polycystic kidney disease, known as "PKD", is one of the world's most prevalent life-threatening genetic diseases, affecting an estimated 600,000 people in the United States, including newborns, children, and adults regardless of sex, age, race, geography, income or ethnicity;

Whereas there are 2 forms of polycystic kidney disease, autosomal dominant (ADPKD), affecting 1 in 500 people worldwide, and autosomal recessive (ARPKD), a rare form, affecting 1 in 20,000 live births and frequently leading to early death;

Whereas polycystic kidney disease causes multiple cysts to form on both kidneys (ranging in size from a pinhead to a grapefruit), leading to an increase in kidney size and weight;

Whereas polycystic kidney disease is a systemic disease that causes damage to the kidneys and the cardiovascular, endocrine, hepatic, and gastrointestinal systems;

Whereas patients with polycystic kidney disease often experience no symptoms early in the disease, and many patients do not realize they have polycystic kidney disease until other organs are affected;

Whereas symptoms of polycystic kidney disease may include high blood pressure, chronic pain in the back, sides or abdomen, blood in the urine, urinary tract infection, heart disease, and kidney stones;

Whereas polycystic kidney disease is the number one genetic cause of kidney failure in the United States;

Whereas more than half of polycystic kidney disease patients will reach kidney failure and require dialysis or a kidney transplant to survive, thus placing an extra strain on dialysis and kidney transplantation resources;

Whereas there is no treatment or cure for polycystic kidney disease; and

Whereas there are thousands of volunteers nationwide dedicated to expanding essential research, fostering public awareness and understanding, educating patients and their families about polycystic kidney disease to improve treatment and care, providing appropriate moral support, and encouraging people to become organ donors: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) designates the period beginning on June 19, 2011, and ending on June 25, 2011, as "Polycystic Kidney Disease Awareness Week";

(2) supports the goals and ideals of Polycystic Kidney Disease Awareness Week, to raise public awareness and understanding of polycystic kidney disease;

(3) recognizes the need for additional research to find treatments and a cure for polycystic kidney disease; and

(4) encourages the people of the United States and interested groups to support Polycystic Kidney Disease Awareness Week through appropriate ceremonies and activities, to promote public awareness of polycystic kidney disease, and to foster understanding of the impact of such disease on patients and their families.

Whereas the habitat of bald eagles exists only in North America;

Whereas, by 1963, the population of bald eagles that nested in the lower 48 States had declined to approximately 417 nesting pairs;

Whereas, due to the dramatic decline in the population of bald eagles in the lower 48 States, the Secretary of the Interior listed the bald eagle as an endangered species on the list of endangered species published under section 4(c)(1) of the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1533(c)(1));

Whereas the "Eagle" played an integral role in achieving the goal of the United States of landing a man on the Moon and returning that man safely to Earth;

Whereas, in 1995, as a result of the efforts of those caring and concerned individuals, the Secretary of the Interior listed the bald eagle as a threatened species on the list of threatened species published under section 4(c)(1) of the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1533(c)(1));

Whereas, on June 28, 2007, the Secretary of the Interior removed the bald eagle from the list of threatened species published under section 4(c)(1) of the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1533(c)(1));

(2) the Migratory Bird Treaty Act (16 U.S.C. 703 et seq.);

Whereas, on January 15, 2008, the Secretary of the Treasury issued 3 limited edition bald eagle commemorative coins under the American Bald Eagle Recovery and National Emblem Commemorative Coin Act (Public Law 108-486; 118 Stat. 3934);

Whereas the sale of the limited edition bald eagle commemorative coins issued by the Secretary of the Treasury has raised approximately $7,800,000 for the nonprofit American Eagle Foundation of Pigeon Forge, Tennessee to support efforts to protect the bald eagle;

Whereas, if not for the vigilant conservation efforts of concerned Americans and the enactment of strict environmental protection laws (including regulations) the bald eagle would probably be extinct;

Whereas the American Eagle Foundation has brought substantial public attention to the cause of the protection and care of the bald eagle nationally;

Whereas November 4, 2010, marked the 25th anniversary of the American Eagle Foundation;

Whereas the dramatic recovery of the population of bald eagles—

(1) is an endangered species success story; and

(2) an inspirational example for other wildlife and natural resource conservation efforts around the world;

Whereas the initial recovery of the population of bald eagles was accomplished by the concerted efforts of numerous government agencies, corporations, organizations, and individuals; and

Whereas the continuation of recovery, management, and public awareness programs for bald eagles will be necessary to ensure—

(1) the continued progress of the recovery of bald eagles; and

(2) that the population and habitat of bald eagles will remain healthy and secure for future generations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) designates June 20, 2011, as “American Eagle Day”;

(2) applauds the issuance of bald eagle commemorative coins by the Secretary of the Treasury as a means by which to generate critical funds for the protection of bald eagles; and

(3) encourages—

(A) educational entities, organizations, businesses, conservation groups, and government agencies with a shared interest in conserving endangered species to collaborate and develop educational tools for use in the public schools of the United States; and

(B) the people of the United States to observe American Eagle Day with appropriate ceremonies and other activities.

Lord God Almighty, as the Psalmist says, "Your unfailing love, O Lord, is as vast as the heavens; Your faithfulness reaches beyond the clouds. Your righteousness is like the mighty mountains; Your justice like the ocean depths."

Lord God, I pray You will reward the faithfulness of all who honor Your name and seek to bring You glory. Make known Your plans to prosper them; plans not to harm them but to give them hope and a bright future. Inspire our elected leaders to seek Your presence and pray daily for Your wisdom. Let them clearly discern Your still small voice amidst the constant clamor of their busy lives.

In the long legislative days ahead, may they feel Your favor as they faithfully discharge the duties assigned to them. Give them the strength to persevere in the storms of life and the humility to honor You when victories burst forth like a radiant dawn. I pray in Your mighty Name. Amen.

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, following any leader remarks, the Senate will be in a period of morning business for 1 hour, with the Republicans controlling the first half and the majority controlling the final half.

Following morning business, the Senate will resume consideration of the Economic Development Act. There are currently five amendments pending to the bill. We are working to set up votes in relation to these amendments and will advise Senators when they are scheduled.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT REVITALIZATION ACT

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the Economic Development Revitalization Act is an important bill. Is it the most important bill we have ever done? The answer is, of course not. But it is an important piece of legislation. It is a very important bill.

What are the central points of this legislation? For almost 50 years, the Economic Development Administration has helped create jobs and growth in economically hard-hit communities across the Nation. Reauthorization of this important legislation will help ensure that the agency is able to help continue creating jobs and investing in distressed communities.

Since 2005, EDA has invested about $1.2 billion, and these grants have created more than 300,000 jobs—precisely, 314,000 jobs. For every dollar that is invested in EDA, we get $7 worth of private investment. That is why the jobs are created. This legislation makes it better.

This is a bipartisan bill. Senators BOXER and INHOFE and their committee have worked to get this to the Senate floor. It increases flexibility for grantees, lowers the threshold requirements for grantees to receive an increased Federal share, and makes more investments available for planning assistance.

We are trying to move through this legislation. Senator SNOWE offered an amendment. She has not uttered a single word about that amendment, which was offered yesterday. This is the same piece of legislation that held up our Small Business Innovation Act. We have had other Senators who have come and offered amendments. I don't particularly like the amendment offered by the junior Senator from South Carolina, but he came and said, "I want to offer this amendment, and I will agree to a time limit on it." Senator PAUL, the junior Senator from Kentucky, had an amendment he wanted to offer. He said he would agree to a short time limit. I didn't ask for time agreements on this legislation. I should not act as the person who determines what amendments are offered and aren't offered. But when someone offers an amendment, we should be able to work it to a conclusion.

This bill, as I have indicated, is an important piece of legislation. We need to move through it. We are going to do that to the best of our ability. We will have a number of votes today and do our best to move through this piece of legislation so we can move to other bills. There are a lot of things we can do. We can work on bipartisan pieces of legislation. That is my hope today.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

EDA

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I was discussing with the majority leader privately the comments he made publicly about getting votes. I have talked to my Members, and I understand he indicated that most of our Members who have amendments are willing to take short time agreements. We ought to be able to move forward and have votes, and the Senate can function the way it should.

Mr. President, with each passing day, the American people grow more concerned about our Nation's future. The Washington Post-ABC news poll this week said that by a ratio of 2 to 1, Americans believe we are on the wrong track, and 9 out of 10 rate the economy negatively. Yesterday's CNN poll found that many Americans expect another Great Depression.

It is in this context that President Obama has started talking about how concerned he is about jobs. This week, the President said he wakes up every morning and asks himself what he can do to spur job creation. Every morning this week, I have come to the floor with some suggestions for him.

The fact is that many Americans have a hard time believing the President is focused on jobs when so many of his policies seem to be designed to destroy them. In some key areas, such as trade, energy, and debt, the President himself has acknowledged that a reversal of his policies would create jobs and spur recovery.

Let's start with trade. Hoping to sound as though he had a plan for job creation, the President used the giant platform provided by his annual State of the Union Message in January to declare that he had finalized a trade agreement with South Korea that would support at least 70,000 American jobs. Yet, nearly 5 months later, he sent his aides out to say that he won't sign them into law unless Congress approves billions more in government spending first.

On energy, the President has acknowledged the pressure that regulations put on job creators. That is why he ordered a review of them in January. Yet, by one estimate, the national energy tax his administration tried to pass through the EPA could cost, by some estimates, millions of jobs—millions. While the President has acknowledged that in order to sustain economic growth and create jobs, as he put it last year, we would need to harness traditional sources of energy, his continued refusal to issue drilling permits in the gulf has had a devastating economic effect.

On the debt, the President himself has said, "If we don't have a serious plan to tackle the debt and the deficit, that could actually end up being a bigger drag on the economy than anything else." Yet, under his leadership, the Nation's national debt has skyrocketed 35 percent, from $10.6 trillion to $14.2 trillion, our deficit is three times bigger than the biggest annual deficit during the Bush administration, and the President refuses to put forward a serious plan to do anything to bring the debt or the deficit down.

So there is a pattern here. The President likes to say he is concerned about the economy and jobs, but his policies tell an entirely different story. He can talk all he wants, but he cannot walk away from what he has done, and the things he is failing to do right now to create private sector jobs and to get our economy moving again. Chief among them is his refusal to do anything to lower the debt and deficits he has done so much to create.

Right now, U.S. businesses are sitting on nearly $2 trillion in cash. Most of them would love to invest this cash in new products, ventures, and employees. Yet they are holding back. Why? It is not just the regulations and the mixed signals they are getting about taxes or the expectation that all the spending today will necessarily lead to higher taxes tomorrow; it is also the uncertainty surrounding our future. How can businesses be confident about the future and hire new workers to build that future if the Democrats who run the White House aren't willing to do anything—anything at all—about our deficits and our debt?

Investment follows certainty. That is one thing this White House refuses to provide. This ongoing uncertainty is paralyzing our economic recovery and seriously hindering job creation.

One recent study suggests that any nation which carries a public debt load at or above 90 percent of its economy loses one point of economic growth, which the administration's own economists have said is equivalent to 1 million jobs. So why won't they propose a serious plan to lower it? When will the administration follow through on what it knows it has to do to spur job growth? The solutions are right in front of us.

The administration acknowledges that free trade agreements, expanding domestic energy exploration, cutting regulations, providing tax certainty, and reducing the debt will lead to a dramatic increase in jobs. So why won't it follow through?

Too often, unfortunately, the answer is political. They don't want to cross some special interest group—whether it is those who don't like trade agreements or those who don't like the way private companies such as Boeing run their businesses or those who don't want to give up a single solitary penny of Federal spending.

But the good of the country is more important than the goals of some political interest group. We have to rein in our debt, cut spending, reduce taxes, reform entitlements, and grow this economy. This administration knows this as well as I do. It is time to act.

So, looking ahead, the key to success, in my view—and in the judgment of others, including Moody's—is for everyone involved to view the upcoming debt limit vote as an opportunity—an opportunity—to reduce Washington spending now and to save the taxpayers trillions of dollars over the long term. It is an opportunity to put our fiscal house in order and to prevent the fiscal crisis we all know is coming. We know what we need to do. The time to do it is now.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will be in a period of morning business for 1 hour, with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each, with the time equally divided and controlled between the two leaders or their designees, with the Republicans controlling the first half and the majority controlling the final half.

The Senator from Iowa is recognized. Mr. GRASSLEY. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. GRASSLEY pertaining to the introduction of S. 1161 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota.

THE BUDGET

Mr. THUNE. Mr. President, last week I had the opportunity to travel my State of South Dakota, as I think most Senators did who were home over the break. During the week, I was able to be part of a couple of events in my State with former Comptroller General David Walker. I think most people here are acquainted with Mr. Walker. He had a 10-year run as the Comptroller General of this country. He has since started an organization called the Comeback America Initiative and has been traveling the country trying to explain to the public the issues surrounding our national debt—high Federal spending levels and their effect on our Nation's future.

I would add he is someone who takes both parties to task. He is an equal opportunity critic. He is very bipartisan in his criticism of the out-of-control spending that exists in Washington, DC, but he did point out the tremendous growth in government which has occurred in the course of our Nation's history. In fact, when our country was founded, if we go back to the formative years of our country—and he uses the year 1800 as an example—government spending made up just 2 percent of our entire economy. Just 2 percent of our GDP represented government spending. Today, it makes up almost 25 percent, and we are on a trend line, a trajectory, where that will rise to 39 percent by the year 2040.

So we have seen this upward spike in the spending, the amount of Federal spending as a percentage of our entire economic output. The reason Mr. Walker gives for the continuing increase in spending is primarily entitlement programs. In other words, we have Medicare, Medicaid, and Social Security which now represent about 43 percent in 2010. Those three programs represented 43 percent of our total Federal spending and, again, that number is set to spike as we head into the future.

Mr. Walker pointed out we are set to spend more on mandatory programs than we will take in in revenue in 2011. So this current year we will spend more on mandatory programs, which include those I just mentioned—Medicare, Social Security, and Medicaid—than all the revenue the Federal Government will take in. So that would mean we can't even afford to pay out for the mandatory spending programs we have in our budget, not to mention those discretionary programs which are the other part of our Federal budget.

If we look at it in terms of how much we spend today and how much we borrow, we are borrowing about 42 cents out of every dollar we spend. That is the reality we are faced with. So it is clear we need to make some reforms, Mr. President, particularly in the entitlement programs, to put them on a more sustainable footing.

Further, Mr. Walker shared the results of his fiscal fitness index, which puts the United States at 28 out of 34 developed countries—just behind Italy and just two places in front of Ireland. We are No. 28 out of 34 developed countries around the world in terms of our fiscal fitness.

Mr. Walker's message, obviously, is not a fun one. It is not a message you would expect people to like to hear. It is not a message that promises more spending on people's preferred programs. Yet my constituents were eager to hear this message. Why is that? No. 1, he was honest. He was honest about the size of our problem, about the scope of our unfunded liabilities, about the causes of this deficit—that it is primarily a spending-driven crisis, about the effect of the health care law on health care spending in this country, and about the measures that are needed to cut spending and to bring the budget back into balance.

My constituents appreciate that kind of honesty. They appreciate someone telling them the truth, not simply continuing to make promises that cannot be kept. And, No. 2, they were eager to hear his message because his message offered hope. He pointed out that if the country adopted a fiscal plan that would bring down our deficits on a level that was similar to the plan of the President's fiscal commission, our Nation's rating on the fiscal fitness index would jump from 28th clear up to 8th place. He showed the attendees that there is a series of steps we can take to fix Social Security, Medicare, and Medicaid—to preserve these important programs without bankrupting our country—and he showed us that if we start now we have time to make these changes without being forced to make Draconian cuts or to hike tax rates.

This hope that we can fix these problems is real and it gives the general public something they can understand. That was certainly the case with my constituents last week.

Unfortunately, there was another event that occurred last week and that was the release of the unemployment numbers. Those numbers did not reflect hope but, instead, indicated we have a long way to go toward fixing our economy. These numbers showed that unemployment had risen to 9.1 percent. Further, the long-term unemployed increased to 6.2 million people, as those who are out of work are taking longer to find jobs. This long-term unemployment is particularly important for a number of reasons. No. 1, these individuals who suffer from long-term unemployment often exhaust government and personal resources that are available to them. As a result, they are at greater risk of falling into poverty. Further, it indicates our economy is not sufficiently dynamic. These individuals could have skill mismatches or there may simply not be any jobs in their local economy.

Finally, the long-term unemployed may see their skills diminished and become less and less attached to the workforce. What this all means is it becomes harder and harder for these people to find a job as they no longer know the latest technologies or no longer have the skills they developed by years of practice. This creates longer term challenges for our economy to be able to find these individuals jobs.

The question is how do we create an environment where businesses and individuals can be creating jobs. We know we need to cut spending, to cut our deficit, and to cut unnecessary and harmful regulations. In a recent presentation to the University of Washington, Nobel laureate Robert Lucas pointed out that the possibility of higher taxes, the uncertainty of regulations, and the increasing role of the Federal Government in health care because of the health care law, are all contributors to our slow economic recovery.

Likewise, Dr. Lucas speculated that our economy may continue to grow at a slower rate because of the increased regulation, taxation, and spending that is moving us closer to a European welfare state. In fact, Dr. Lucas notes that these European economies have incomes that are 20 to 30 percent less per capita because of these differences in the size of government.

It is clear it would even further increase unemployment if we continued to move along this path. We cannot continue with the status quo. We already know the size of our debt is costing us 1 percentage point in growth every year which, according to the White House's own economists, is the equivalent of 1 million jobs. In other words, when we sustain the kind of debt load we have today—our gross debt as a percentage of our GDP, our entire economic output, is over 90 percent—that means we are losing economic growth and that means we are shedding jobs as a consequence of this high level of debt and high level of spending.

We need to grow the private economy, shrink government spending, and cut our debts and deficits. This is the path that will help us on a recovery, help our economy to recover, and create the jobs that are necessary to lower that unemployment rate.

We know we can do this. There are a number of reforms and spending cuts we are pushing to attach to the deadline that is under discussion right now so we can make it easier and cheaper for individuals to create the jobs that are so necessary to get our economy back on track and get people back to work. There are a number of things that can be done and should be done.

Obviously, as I noted, as we continue the debate about spending and debt and doing something about this year-over-year $1.4 trillion, $1.5 trillion, now $14.3 trillion debt that is hanging like a cloud over our economy, we have to deal with that. We have an opportunity, as has been noted by the leader earlier this morning, to do that in the context of this debt limit debate we are going to have. We should view this—both sides—as an opportunity to do something meaningful about spending and debt and to put our country on a more sustainable fiscal path for our future.

But there are a number of other things that impact the economy today that should be done. One is we have three pending trade agreements that were negotiated 3 to 4 years ago. They have been languishing here because the White House will not send those trade agreements up here for Congress to act.

To give an example of what that means to an agricultural State such as South Dakota, Colombia is one of those three trade agreements—Colombia, Panama, and South Korea, all of which present markets for South Dakota agricultural markets. But agricultural exports are a big part of our trade relationship with Colombia. In 2008 we had an 81-percent market share in Colombia. Today that is a 27-percent market share. We need those trade agreements approved to create jobs and to grow this economy. I hope the White House will send those, follow through on their rhetoric and actually send those trade agreements up here so we can act on them.

It has been 771 days since we passed a budget in this country. We and the administration talk about doing something about spending and debt, and yet here we are having gone 771 days without even having passed a budget, the most fundamental responsibility we have to the taxpayers of this country. If we are serious about spending and debt, we need a budget that sets a blueprint for a more fiscally sustainable future for this country. We need energy policies that allow us to develop American energy to get fuel costs under control, which also impacts in a very direct way our economy and our ability to create jobs.

The solutions are out there, they are very straightforward and simple. We need to have the will to move forward and address these issues and I hope we will because the American people expect and deserve that we will. As Dr. Walker pointed out last week, in my State of South Dakota, if we do not, we are headed for a fiscal train wreck.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask for enough time to give my remarks this morning and I ask for an equivalent amount of time for the other side.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. I hope I can stay within the time constraints, but I am not sure.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah is recognized.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. HATCH pertaining to the submission of S. Con. Res. 23 are located in today's RECORD under "Submission of Concurrent Senate Resolutions.")

HONORING OUR ARMED FORCES

TECHNICAL SERGEANT KRISTOFFER M. SOLESBEE

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to TSgt Kristoffer M. Solesbee of Hill Air Force Base's 75th Civil Engineer Squadron. Technical Sergeant Solesbee was killed in action near the city of Shorabak, Afghanistan.

Technical Sergeant Solesbee was a brave and courageous man. Not only did he volunteer to serve his country, returning to the field of battle three times, twice in Iraq and this final tour in Afghanistan, but he volunteered for one of the most dangerous assignments in the war on terrorism; he was an explosive ordnance disposal technician.

This is not the first time a member of Hill's EOD flight had been killed while protecting his fellow servicemembers from improvised explosive devices. In early 2007, three other members of the 75th Civil Engineering Squadron were also killed. Yet, despite this tragedy, Technical Sergeant Solesbee always returned to duty. I believe one of Utah's largest newspapers, The Standard Examiner, paid him the highest tribute when it stated "Kristoffer M. Solesbee died doing what he loved: saving lives." I cannot think of a better definition of a true hero.

From those who knew him best, his family, friends and fellow servicemembers, described him as smart and highly energetic. Growing up he loved model rockets and radio controlled cars and airplanes. During his 11-year career in the service, his fellow airmen came to rely upon him and his professionalism. Indeed, there is broad consensus among Hill's EOD technicians that he was the benchmark by which others were judged.

His distinguished service also did not go unrecognized. Technical Sergeant Solesbee was the recipient of the Bronze Star Medal with Valor device and second oak leaf cluster, the Air Force Meritorious Service Medal, Purple Heart Medal, the Air Force Commendation Medal with one oak leaf cluster, Air Force Achievement Medal with one oak leaf cluster, and the Air Force Combat Action Medal.

I know God will be watching over the family of this admirable man. He gave his life so that others may live. TSgt Kristoffer M. Solesbee will never be forgotten.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HONORING RAFAT R. ANSARI

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, once again, I come to the floor to celebrate and recognize the contribution of our Federal employees. I do this on a regular basis because while we debate the issues of the day and grapple with issues around the debt and deficit and the circumstances that will require us to cut back on government spending, I think it is important to remember the literally millions of Americans who work in one form or another for our Federal Government day-in and day-out. From our armed services, to folks who work within this Capitol Complex, to folks who work within Health and Human Services, to those who work in research, to those who make enormous contributions to our Nation, we should not lose sight of them as we grapple with the debt and deficit and a host of other issues we deal with in this body.

So today I rise to honor another great Federal employee, Rafat Ansari. Mr. Ansari is a senior scientist and leading innovator at NASA's Glenn Research Center in Cleveland. He has been recognized for developing a safe, noninvasive laser device that could drastically improve the early detection of cataracts and improve people's lives in the process.

Cataracts are the leading cause of vision loss and blindness in the United States and in the world. They affect over 22 million Americans over the age of 40, and over $6.8 billion is spent annually in the United States on cataract treatment.

Mr. Ansari was motivated to help cataract patients after his father was diagnosed with the disease. He began researching the disease and realized that cataracts are caused by proteins in the lens that cluster abnormally, a process similar to what he was studying in his space experiments.

Lacking the necessary financial resources, he began conducting research in his home kitchen using a light-scattering device which was able to identify clustered proteins in the eye lens. These kitchen experiments ultimately led to Mr. Ansari's invention of an innovative eye-scanning device and procedure that is at least two or three times stronger than any device on the market.

His invention also has the potential to significantly improve the ability to detect early signs of Alzheimer's, Parkinson's, diabetes, and many other diseases. The procedure is currently used by NASA to study the long-term consequences of space travel on the vision of astronauts.

Mr. Ansari's personal story is a testament to all that continues to make our Nation great. Born in Pakistan, Mr. Ansari always dreamed of working for NASA. Not only was he able to realize his dream of working for our government, working for NASA, but in the process he has made discoveries that could have a big impact on the lives of millions of people not only here in the United States but around the world.

I hope my colleagues will join me in honoring Mr. Ansari and those other great scientists and engineers at NASA for their excellence and service to our Nation.

So, again, I wish to acknowledge not only Mr. Ansari but all of our Federal workers. I think it is important. As somebody who has been very involved—and hopeful to do more—on this issue of debt and deficit, I know we will have to make substantial cutbacks in how government spends and operates. But I think we need to remember, as we talk about some of these cuts, that we are affecting the lives of literally millions of good Americans who try to keep the functions of this government working on an efficient, honest, and ethical basis day-in and day-out.

With that, I yield the floor and note the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT REVITALIZATION ACT OF 2011

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of S. 782, which the clerk will report by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 782) to amend the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965 to reauthorize that Act, and for other purposes.

Pending:

McConnell (for Snowe) amendment No. 390, to reform the regulatory process to ensure that small businesses are free to compete and to create jobs.

DeMint amendment No. 394, to repeal the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act.

Paul amendment No. 414, to implement the President's request to increase the statutory limit on the public debt.

Cardin amendment No. 407, to require the FHA to equitably treat home buyers who have repaid in full their FHA-insured mortgages.

Merkley-Snowe amendment No. 428, to establish clear regulatory standards for mortgage servicers.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 390

Mr. REID. Mr. President, if I called for regular order, which I am, that would mean the Snowe amendment would be pending; is that right?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is now pending.

Mr. REID. OK. Mr. President, first of all, I appreciate the cooperation of Senator SNOWE, Senator COBURN, and others. It is important we move along with this legislation. So for the next 3 hours we will be able to debate the Snowe amendment. The time will be equally divided during that period of time.

We have a number of amendments others want to offer. We already have four in addition to hers that have been offered. We have time agreements on those. I appreciate everyone's help in moving forward in this regard.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time until 2:15 p.m. be equally divided between Senators SNOWE and BOXER or their designees; that at 2:15 p.m. the Senate proceed to vote in relation to the Snowe amendment; that no amendments, points of order or motions be in order to the Snowe amendment prior to the vote, other than budget points of order and the applicable motions to waive; the amendment not be divisible; that the amendment be subject to a 60-vote threshold; and that the motion to reconsider be considered made and laid upon the table.

I would also say, before the Chair rules, we have Senator MCCASKILL who wants to offer an amendment on the same subject matter. We will do that at some subsequent time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from California is recognized.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, as I understand it, I will have an hour and a half to present our side on the amendment and Senator SNOWE will have an hour and a half. Could the Chair please give me the exact timeframes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order, 1 hour 37 minutes for each side.

Mrs. BOXER. Thank you very much. I was close.

I wish to let Senator SNOWE know what my plan is at this time. First, I am going to yield some time on another subject—but it will be used on our time—to Senator WHITEHOUSE, who has something very important pertaining to his State, and then I am going to come back and take as much time as I might consume and it will not be that long. I wish to lay out where we are in this debate, why this bill is so important, and I am going to make some remarks about Senator SNOWE's amendment. So I do not know exactly how long it will take, but I will do it as quickly as I can and retain the remainder of my time.

But at this time, I yield 10 minutes of my time to Senator WHITEHOUSE.

Senator WHITEHOUSE is coming back into the Chamber with his charts, and I reiterate, I will yield the first 10 minutes of my time to Senator WHITEHOUSE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN of Ohio). The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Mr. President, I thank Senator BOXER.

COMMEMORATING GASPEE DAYS

Mr. President, my time in this Chamber often gives me cause to reflect on our history and on the brave patriots who went before us, many of whom risked or even gave their lives to create this great Republic. Today, I would like to talk about a group of men who, 239 years ago tonight, engaged in a daring act of defiance against the British Crown.

For many, the Boston Tea Party is one of the first events on the road to our revolution. Growing up, we were taught the story of painted-up Bostonians dumping shipments of tea into Boston Harbor, to defend the principle: "no taxation without representation."

Conspicuously missing from history books is the story of the brave Rhode Islanders who challenged the British Crown far more aggressively more than a year before Bostonians dumped those teabags into Boston harbor. Today, on its anniversary, I would like to take us back to an earlier milestone in America's fight for independence, to share with you the story of a British vessel, the HMS Gaspee, and to introduce you to some little-known heroes now lost in the footnotes of history.

In 1772, amidst growing tensions with American colonies, King George III stationed his revenue cutter, the HMS Gaspee, in Rhode Island. The Gaspee's task was to prevent smuggling and enforce the payment of taxes. But to Rhode Islanders, the vessel was a symbol of oppression.

The offensive presence of the Gaspee was matched by the offensive manner of its captain, LT William Dudingston. Lieutenant Dudingston was known for destroying fishing vessels and confiscating their contents, and flagging down ships only to harass, humiliate, and interrogate sailors. But on June 9, 1772, an audacious Rhode Islander, Captain Benjamin Lindsey, took a stand.

Aboard his ship, the Hannah, Captain Lindsey set sail from Newport to Providence. On his way, he was hailed by the Gaspee captain ignored the command and continued on his course. Recently, Dr. Kathy Abbas, director of the Rhode Island Marine Archaeology Project, has suggested a motivating factor for Dudingston to have sought to seize the Hannah: she may have been carrying 250 pounds sterling onboard. As Dr. Abbas told the Providence Journal, that was "an enormous sum" in those days.

In any event, Captain Lindsey and his Hannah sought to evade the Gaspee. Gunshots were fired, and the Hannah sped north up Narragansett Bay with the Gaspee chasing behind in pursuit.

Outsized and outgunned, Captain Lindsey drew courage and confidence from his keen familiarity with Rhode Island waters. He led the Gaspee into the shallow waters off Namquid Point, where the smaller Hannah cruised over the sand banks. The heavier Gaspee ran aground, and stuck. The Gaspee was stranded in a falling tide, and it would be many hours before high tide would lift her free.

Arriving triumphantly in Providence, Captain Lindsey visited John Brown, whose family helped found Brown University. The two men rallied a group of patriots at Sabin's Tavern, in what is now the East Side of Providence. The Gaspee was despised by Rhode Islanders who had been too often bullied in their own waters by this ship, and the stranding of this once-powerful vessel presented an irresistible chance.

On that dark night, 60 men in longboats led by Captain Lindsey and Abraham Whipple moved quietly down Narragansett Bay. They encircled the Gaspee, and demanded that Lieutenant Dudingston surrender the ship. Dudingston refused, and instead ordered his men to fire upon anyone who tried to board.

The determined Rhode Islanders took this as a cue to force their way onto the Gaspee, and they boarded her in a raging uproar of shouted oaths, gunshots, powder smoke, and clashing swords. Amidst this violent struggle Lieutenant Dudingston was shot by a musket ball. Right there in the waters of Warwick, RI, the very first blood of what was to become the American Revolution was drawn. Victory was soon in the hands of the Rhode Islanders.

Brown and Whipple took the captive Englishmen back to shore. You can go today down behind O'Rourke's Tavern in Pawtuxet Village, down Peck Lane toward the water, and see the bronze plaque commemorating the spot where the captured crew was brought ashore.

The Rhode Island patriots then returned to set the abandoned ship on fire and rid Narragansett Bay of this nuisance once and for all. As the Gaspee burned, the fire reached her powder magazine and she exploded like fireworks. The boom echoed across the bay, as the remains of the ship splashed down into the water. The Gaspee was gone: captured, burned, and blown to bits. The site of this historic victory is now named Gaspee Point.

The wounding of Lieutenant Dudingston and the capture and destruction of the Gaspee occurred 16 months before the so-called Boston Tea Party. Perhaps this bold undertaking will one day show up in our history books, alongside pictures of the blazing Gaspee lighting up Narragansett Bay. Perhaps American children will memorize the dates of June 9 and 10, 1772, and the names of Benjamin Lindsey, Abraham Whipple, and John Brown.

I do know that these events will never be forgotten in my home State. Over the years, I have often marched in the annual Gaspee Days Parade in Warwick, RI, as every year we recall the courage and zeal of these men who risked it all for the freedoms we enjoy today, and drew the first blood in what became the revolutionary conflict.

I would add, in the context of fires and disasters, we have lost one of the signature buildings of Woonsocket, RI, last night. It was called the Woonsocket Rubber Company. The building was known as the Alice Mills, named after the mother of the president of the company who built it, and it existed for—I do not know—100 years or more. It burned in a fire so great that 12 municipal fire departments had to answer it last night; fire departments all the way from Wrentham, MA, down to Warren, RI.

I want to express my sympathies for Woonsocket on this loss and my pride in the firefighters who responded from so far and wide to tend to this fire. Unfortunately, the mill could not be saved. These mills are very hard to prevent fires in once they get burning. We have lost something very precious in Rhode Island. I just wanted to note that in addition to my remarks about the Gaspee.

Let me thank very much my chairman on the Environment and Public Works Committee. I know she has important business on the Senate floor. It was very kind of her to give me those few minutes to talk about this historic day in Rhode Island and American history.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I just want to thank my colleague for his remarks. I offer my deepest sympathies to these impacted by that terrible fire. Unfortunately, in this country we are witnessing so many disasters. It is so difficult for the people to deal with this, but we have to always respond. I am glad he paid tribute to the firefighters, the first responders, because they are the ones who put everything on the line to help us.

We have before us a bill called the Economic Development Revitalization Act of 2011. It is S. 782. It is a good bill. It is a bill that is needed for our economy because it is a bill that is focused on one thing, jobs. When people are asked what our focus should be—and we all know we need to reduce the deficit and the debt—they all say No. 1 is jobs because without jobs, deficits only get worse, debts only get worse, as people have to turn to the safety net that is provided in this great Nation for their very survival. So when we have an opportunity to come together across party lines with a jobs bill, one would think we would be delighted to do it.

This EDA, the Economic Development Administration, was reauthorized back in 2004 when George W. Bush was President. Let me tell a story because everybody came together, and that EDA reauthorization passed by voice vote and was signed into law by President George W. Bush. So it is a bit perplexing for me to note that we have dozens and dozens of amendments that are absolutely nongermane to this reauthorization. We have one amendment that is pending that my colleague, Senator SNOWE, is offering, which has never had a hearing. It has never had a markup, and it is absolutely going to change the way we can protect our people from pollution, from danger.

I think it is unfortunate that rather than work on this together, we are seeing this offered as an amendment. It is Senator SNOWE's complete right to do this. I respect it. I honor it. I understand how strongly she feels. But I feel just as strongly that something that would ignore public health and safety and not even put that in the benefits column is something that is a danger to the people we serve.

So we are going to have a debate about it, and the votes will come at 2:15. I am pleased we will get to vote. I do hope at some point we will be able to look at regulatory flexibility, we will be able to work to make sure that as we assist our businesses—and we all want to do that. That is what this bill, the EDA bill, does. It is assisting businesses. It is jump-starting business development. We have example after example of that—we also can work to ease their burden a bit while not endangering the life and the health of the people. That is pretty straightforward, and I would be very happy to work with my colleague. But this bill has never even had a hearing. This bill she is offering has never been marked up. I have had no opportunity, other than this one, to basically say how I feel.

I know it is in contrast to the way Senator SNOWE feels, and Senator COBURN. I have lots of respect for them. I hope they have respect for me as chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee because my view is, my obligation is, to protect the health and the safety of our kids.

How many kids have asthma? If I asked a group here, I bet one-third of the hands would go up. If I asked how many people know someone with asthma, I bet more than half would raise their hands. So I think we cannot willy-nilly just support an approach that would take away the ability to put the benefits of protecting health into any formulas before we say regulation should be thrown overboard. I think there are ways to definitely work together. Unfortunately, today we are going to have an up-or-down vote on the Snowe amendment without that opportunity.

I want to go through the fact that the bill that is before us, the underlying bill, S. 782, has strong bipartisan support. It was reported out of our EPW Committee by voice vote, only one objection, and that is because this EDA has operated for 50 years. It has a very good tradition of creating jobs and spurring growth in economically hard-hit communities nationwide.

This bill is going to ensure that EDA can continue to create jobs, thousands of jobs, protect existing jobs, and drive local economic growth. It is distressing to me to see, for example, an amendment by Senator DEMINT. He is very proud of his amendment. What would it do? It would do away with the EDA. So on a bill to reauthorize the EDA, he has an amendment to eliminate the Economic Development Administration.

Now, again, I respect his view, but I do not understand it. Why do I not understand it? Because in 2005, Senator DEMINT sent out a press release congratulating local leaders for securing an EDA grant for the City of Dillon, SC. So we have Senator DEMINT proposing to eliminate an agency which he lauded not once but more than once.

Senator DEMINT was quoted in the press release as saying:

This investment in Dillon County will save and create hundreds of South Carolina jobs. And I am pleased that the EDA has awarded these funds.

So what planet are we on? We have a Senator who sends out a press release lauding an agency he now wants to eliminate. So you would say, well, maybe that was 2005 and he has suddenly changed his mind. No. One year ago, Senator DEMINT's staff held a workshop in Myrtle Beach to highlight competitive funding opportunities available to local communities and businesses through EDA and other Federal agencies.

June 16, 2010. Here it is:

Workshop to Highlight Competitive Funding Opportunities.

The office of U.S. Senator JIM DEMINT and the Myrtle Beach Chamber of Commerce will provide a workshop—

It goes on to say that the staff of Senator DEMINT will be there.

I don't get what is going on. How do you send out a press release lauding an agency and then say: Let's do away with it. I don't get it. If jobs are our No. 1 priority—and I certainly know the occupant of the chair is fighting 24/7 for jobs, for outsourcing jobs, and for job creation.

For every dollar spent in EDA, $7 of private investment is attracted. Historically, $1 of EDA investment attracts nearly $7 in private sector investment. Now, you say: Well, for our investment with Federal dollars, how much does it cost for us to create one good job? The answer comes back: EDA creates one job for every $2,000 to $4,600 invested. That is a good investment. EDA is a job creator. That is why it is perplexing to me to have a host of amendments that are distracting us from jobs, jobs, jobs.

Between 2005 and 2010, with an investment of $2.4 billion, total jobs generated were 450,000 and total jobs saved were 85,000. At the $500 million funding level authorized, if that was spent, EDA would create 87,000 to 200,000 jobs every year and 400,000 to 1 million jobs over the life of the bill. We don't know that that $500 million will stay, but historically that is what we have authorized through EDA.

Here are the people who are supporting an authorization of the EDA: U.S. Conference of Mayors, American Public Works Association, National Association of Counties, AFL-CIO, American Planning Association, Association of University Research Parks, Educational Association of University Centers, International Economic Development Council, Association of Development Organizations, National Business Incubation Association, State Science and Technology Institute, University Economic Development Association, and National Association of Regional Councils.

We have a letter from an arm of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce lauding this program, citing how well they work with the EDA. They say:

We are the citizenship arm of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, and in this capacity we work with thousands of businesses and local chambers of commerce on community development and disaster recovery. These local chambers and businesses are constantly looking for national best practices, lessons learned, technical assistance, strategy support, and other insights and tools and techniques to make communities as competitive as possible.

This is the chamber of commerce arm:

As you consider EDA's future roles and responsibilities, we would be happy to share with you our experiences and lessons learned in working with the agency and provide you with additional information.

They talk about the unique capability the EDA can and does support. They say EDA staff members displayed a high degree of professionalism and technical expertise. They say they have engaged with them on multiple levels, from consultation to sharing valuable field experience at the State and local level.

We have tremendous support. The AFL-CIO, dealing with the loss of construction jobs, says:

EDA has established an admirable track record in assisting economically troubled low-income communities with limited job opportunities by putting their investments to good use in promoting needed job creation and industrial and commercial development.

The last chart is the American Public Works Association, which builds public works and the water and sewer systems we need. This is from Peter King, executive director of American Public Works Association, dated this month:

I write on behalf of the 29,000 members of APWA in support of the Economic Development Revitalization Act, S. 782. We urge the Senate to pass this legislation, which will create jobs, stimulate economic growth in distressed areas, and improve the economic growth of local communities.

After Senator SNOWE speaks and others speak, I will reserve my time to go into specifically what programs we have seen flourish because of that little spark that gets lit when EDA gets in there. The private sector loves this program, and local governments and State governments love it. It has worked since 1965.

I urge my colleagues, if you have amendments, let's get time agreements and dispose of those amendments. Let's get to a final vote on this very important program, which has flourished under Democratic Presidents, Republican Presidents, Democratic Congresses, and Republican Congresses. For goodness' sakes, does everything have to be a battle royale around here? We ought to be able to reach across the aisle when there is a bill brought up that deals with jobs. If we don't do that, we honestly fail the people.

My very last point is that Senator INHOFE has worked very hard on this bill. Republicans have added a lot of reforms to the EDA. I think those reforms are important. One would eliminate a duplication of effort, and others would give the private sector the ability to buy out the EDA interests. So I think, clearly, at this time, we should get these amendments done.

I am pleased Senator SNOWE is here, and she is anxious to speak. I will conclude at this time and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. President, how much time remains on my side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 76 minutes remaining.

Mrs. BOXER. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, before I begin to address the pending amendment I have offered along with a number of Senators in response to regulatory reform, I am going to yield to the Senator from North Dakota, who is a cosponsor of this legislation. I am delighted that he is a cosponsor, and that he recognizes and acknowledges the importance of changing the regulatory environment in America if we are going to have job creation and economic growth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. President, I am pleased to be here with Senator SNOWE and to rise in support of her legislation, the Freedom Act of 2011. I will be brief in my comments. I know she has comments to make. I also appreciate Senator BOXER's comments in regard to Republican and Democrats coming together on this legislation. I think that is exactly what needs to happen with the Snowe-Coburn amendment, the Freedom Act of 2011.

I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this legislation. I draw on 10 years of experience as a Governor in our State in expressing how very important it is that we create the kind of legal tax and regulatory structure at the Federal level that will help us to stimulate private investment and get this economy going and growing and get people back to work. I know that is exactly what Senator SNOWE hopes to achieve with this amendment, and will. That is why we need to pass it.

Just this morning, jobless claims came out. New jobless claims were higher than anticipated, at 427,000. Last week, we got the employment numbers, and we gained only 54,000 jobs. Unemployment is 9.1 percent. At the same time, we face a more than $14 trillion debt, and our deficit is more than $1.5 trillion. We are spending $3.7 trillion a year and only taking in $2.2 trillion in revenue. Clearly we need to get a grip on spending, but to get out of this deficit and debt and to get people back to work, we need to get this economy growing. That doesn't mean the Federal Government spending more; it means the Federal Government spending less and creating the kind of progrowth, jobs-oriented economy and legal tax and regulatory structure that will help us grow.

If you look back at the 1990s, when we had a deficit, and even before, when we had stagflation, it was a combination of a growing economy and better fiscal management that got people back to work and got us out of the deficit and to a surplus. We need to do that again. We need this kind of legislation that will help us create a regulatory environment that stimulates business investment, creates jobs, gets people back to work, and gets the economy growing, and then, with good fiscal restraint, will help us get on top of this huge deficit and our debt. It is vitally important for us now, and it is vitally important for future generations.

This is an important step in the right direction. I am pleased to cosponsor this legislation with the Senator from Maine. I look forward to hearing her remarks.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from North Dakota, Mr. HOEVEN, for his excellent remarks. As a former Governor for 10 years, he knows the impact of regulations on small businesses and how detrimental they can be to job creation, particularly at this time where we have a very difficult economy. We have persistent high unemployment and subpar economic growth. We are at a consequential moment in our economic history, frankly, that deserves the attention of the Senate. So, again, I thank the Senator for his comments in recognizing the effect regulatory reform will have on the performance of small business and, ultimately, job creation in this economy.

I am very pleased to have many colleagues cosponsoring this amendment. I am pleased to have worked with Senator COBURN from Oklahoma, and this amendment is also cosponsored by Senators MCCONNELL, AYOTTE, BARRASSO, BROWN of Massachusetts, COATS, ENZI, ISAKSON, KIRK, HOEVEN, JOHNSON, MORAN, THUNE, and VITTER. It is clear to me that many of the Senators understand the value and imperative of reforming our regulatory system. It is absolutely vital that the Federal Government consider the small business economic impact of the rules and regulations that agencies promulgate.

The question might be asked, Why do we need regulatory reform? We had a bill on the floor last month, in early May, wherein I was denied a vote, which was regrettable because it is clear that many people don't understand how important this is and how central it is to small business job creation, how vital it is to the survival of small businesses and the cost of doing business across America. But I keep hearing from certain colleagues, "Yes, we understand it is important; however" or "but" or "at some point." Let's define "at some point." When?

When I was denied a vote on regulatory reform, on May 4 in the Senate, I heard that we are going to have hearings on the issue. Well, that obviously has not occurred. So it becomes the politics of obfuscation, not the reality. As I heard from a small business owner yesterday, "When I come into Washington, it is a walled city—walled off from reality, detached from the real world on Main Street."

I have been told that a concern with this amendment is that we have not had hearings. We had a hearing in the Small Business Committee on regulatory reform, but that is not enough for the Senator from California, who is saying we have not had hearings. She has offered plenty of amendments that haven't had hearings in the Senate. We had a major issue yesterday that was very important to small business—the interchange fee—which didn't have hearings. It didn't have hearings the first time it was offered to the Dodd-Frank legislation last year, and yesterday's amendment didn't have a hearing. So is there a new standard, in the Senate, when it comes to regulatory reform? Do you think there have been any overtures by anybody who opposes my legislation to work with us on this right away?

What is happening on Main Street America is that we are not creating jobs. Why? Because of what is failing to happen in Washington, DC, in the Senate. There is a clear detachment from the real world. Small businesses keep asking me what is going on. I say I can't explain it, other than it is clear that people don't understand what is going on because if they did, we would be working on it.

I heard the Senator from California say, "at some point." But tell that to the person who is running a small business and trying to keep their neck above water and keep their business afloat during these very difficult times. What do these small business owners talk about? They talk about the regulations that are suffocating their ability to survive in a very tough economic climate.

We are dithering. That is what this is all about. It is all a masquerade, a facade, just bringing up bogus arguments. I have been in the legislative process for the better part of four decades, and I know when there is a serious purpose about working together and solving a problem. It appears to me that there is no interest in solving this problem here in Washington. Everybody has their own agenda, but people are wondering why there is this unemployment rate of 9.1 percent.

When I raised these concerns to the Secretary of the Treasury back in early February in the Finance Committee, when he was testifying—I described the concerns about what was happening on Main Street because I take Main Street tours, and I invite people to do that and to actually listen to what people are saying—he said: "I think your view of the economy is dark and pessimistic."

I said: Well, maybe I wasn't hearing it right. Maybe I wasn't hearing it right on Main Street. So when I meet with small business owners, I mention the Secretary's comments to them, and they cannot believe it. They cannot comprehend that the Secretary of the Treasury doesn't understand what is going on on Main Street; that the administration doesn't, the Senate doesn't, and the Congress doesn't. If they did, we would be working here day and night.

I was told I had to have a vote on this amendment right now. Why? Because it is Thursday, and certain members of this body are smelling the jet fumes while people are suffering on Main Street. Our fellow Americans are losing their jobs. Have my colleagues heard the stories about what people are facing? Time and time again I hear the same old refrains: "We don't have time. We have to rush it. It hasn't had hearings. We will do it sometime." Well, tell that to the average American who is struggling to keep a job, to find a job or to keep the doors open to their business. That is what this amendment is all about. That is the reality.

We can pretend it is something else, but the macroeconomic numbers are demonstrating time and again there is a desperation out there. Yet, we take 2-week recesses, then we come back and have morning business and chat along, but it does nothing to resolve the consequential issues facing this Nation. There was a time when the Senate used to work, where we could sit down and solve a problem. Now it is all a facade, a few talking points and we move on. In the meantime, people are suffering and they are handicapped by our inability to work together. Regulatory reform is central to that agenda, make no mistake about it.

Let's look at what we are talking about and why we need regulatory reform. The analysts have lowered their forecast for the second quarter growth this year. The first quarter growth was already abysmal at 1.8 percent of GDP. Manufacturing recovery has slowed. Housing remains in shambles. New claims for jobless benefits, as the Senator from North Dakota indicated, exceeds 400,000—again. Growth of consumer spending is sluggish.

The President talks about job creation and stimulating the economy, but the results speak louder than words. Since the President took office, unemployment has dipped below 9 percent for only 5 months. Even that data is skewed because it doesn't account for the millions of workers who have exited the workforce altogether. Just last week, the unemployment rate for May increased to 9.1 percent. We are experiencing the longest unemployment period in American history since data collection started in 1948, surpassing even the 1982 double-dip recession for the length of unemployment.

Despite the President's promise, and an $800 billion stimulus package, a $700 billion TARP program, up to $600 billion in quantitative easing by the Federal Reserve, and over $2 trillion in overall government spending, we are years away from where we need to be in terms of job or economic growth. Mr. President, 40 months after the start of the four deepest postwar recessions our economic output averaged 7.6

percent higher than pre-recession levels. Yet since December 2007, when the most recent recession commenced, our GDP has only increased 0.1 percent. That is why we need regulatory reform. We need to bolster job creation, and the only place we can do that is through small businesses.

The Senator from California says we need hearings on this amendment. Then we should change the rules of the Senate and require that every amendment offered on this floor has a hearing, and every bill. That must be a new standard, Mr. President. We have had hearings on this question in the Small Business Committee, and the focus is that we desperately need reform.

In a small business regulatory reform hearing in November 2010 we heard a witness note if there was a 30 percent cut in regulatory costs, an average 10-person firm would save nearly $32,000—enough to hire one additional person.

When President Reagan entered office in 1981, he faced actually much worse economic problems than President Obama faced in 2009. I know because I served in the House of Representatives at that moment in time. With unemployment soaring into double digits, at a peak of 10.8 percent, huge chunks of industrial America shut down in the recession of 1981–1982 and never reopened. Yet once the recovery began in earnest in the first quarter of 1983, the economy boomed. It exceeded 7.1 percent for five consecutive quarters and kept growing at a 4-percent pace for another 2 years.

The contrast in results between the current recovery and the Reagan years is instructive because the government's response was so different. As a recent Wall Street Journal article reiterated, in the 1980s the policy goals were to cut tax rates, reduce regulatory costs and uncertainty—which is what these regulations are producing day in and day out—let the private economy allocate capital free of political direction, and focus monetary policy on price stability rather than on reducing unemployment. That is the type of policy mix we need to rediscover if we are going to climb out of this economic downturn.

Let's look at the first chart—small business job creators in my State and across America because they are the ones that create 70 percent of all the net new jobs in America. That is why regulation reform becomes so essential and imperative. The total cost of regulation is at $1.7 trillion—that is with a “t”—and small firms with fewer than 20 employees bear a disproportionate burden in terms of those costs. It is $10,585 per employee, which is 36 percent higher than the regulatory costs confronting larger firms.

I know some people like to dispute numbers and say: Oh, no, that is not really a true number. Oh, really? Just add them up. There was a study that was done by Crain and Crain. They added the estimated cost of four categories or types of regulations—economic regulations at $1.2 trillion; environmental regulations at $281 billion; task compliance, $160 billion; and regulations involving occupational safety, health, and homeland security, $75 billion.

Some studies omit independent agencies. Some even omit the Internal Revenue Service from the calculation cost of regulations. Well, ask a small business or any business in America about whether IRS regulations have a cost for them. Of course they do. We have to include all agencies of government that have an impact directly on small business or any business in America.

Even a separate White House finding acknowledges that the estimated annual cost of major Federal regulations reviewed by the Office of Management and Budget this past decade cost between $44 billion and $62 billion.

The point is, the principal impediment to job creation in this country is a broken regulatory system. We have repeatedly talked about it. It is a top priority for the small business community across America. Every major organization that is a key voice for small business echoes this repeatedly: Federal regulations have placed a tremendous burden on them.

I know many of my colleagues and I understand the critical nature of all of this. We have heard the message loud and clearly. Even the President, interestingly enough, issued an Executive order in January to begin the process of reviewing Federal regulations, citing the need for “absurd and unnecessary paperwork requirements that waste time and money.” So in 4 months the administration's preliminary findings uncovered over $1 billion in savings in 30 agencies. They ran the gamut. They included even environmental regulations.

So, obviously, there is some recognition and acknowledgment that regulations are a barrier and an impediment. The President is making eliminations at the Occupational Safety and Health Administration and the Environmental Protection Agency. And yet, I don't think anybody would suggest he is trying to eradicate all environmental protections in America by identifying some that just aren't worthy of support because they are onerous. He would eliminate the requirement that States install a system to protect against fuel polluting the air at gas stations since modern vehicles already have these systems. That would save up to $67 million a year. But no one in this Chamber is going to accuse the President of saying, well, we are undermining all environmental regulations in the country.

It is as if we can't be discerning and discriminating in evaluating what is worthy and what isn't, what is too costly and complex and what isn't, what makes sense and what doesn't in this current context of this economic environment. Can we spend time doing that, since I was denied the time on May 4 and an ability to vote on this amendment? Could we have worked that out? Absolutely not. So why can't we become involved in this effort?

It seems we are turning a blind eye to it. There is no recognition because I don't think there is a full understanding or an appreciation of what is going awry in the economic landscape in every community across this country and why there is that despair, that anxiety.

By the way, about 80 percent of the American people believe we are moving in the wrong direction when it comes to our economy. That should be a Paul Revere wake-up call. It should be a message on which we might want to realign our focus in the Senate.

Maybe we should spend some time in the Senate working out the issues to solve the problems so we can create jobs for Americans who are unemployed, because we know that 9.1 percent doesn't capture all unemployed Americans. There are many who have dropped out of the workforce entirely. You could have, underemployed or unemployed, as many as up to 25 million Americans. That is staggering. That is breathtaking.

Since the time I was denied a vote, we could have been moving ahead on this legislation, or in the interim from when I was denied that vote on May 4, working out a solution, working through these issues. And during that time, the chairman of President Obama's own Council on Jobs and Competitiveness, General Electric CEO Jeff Immelt, announced the top four priorities. This just happened on May 10. Understand, on May 4 I was prevented from having a vote on regulatory reform. That is preposterous. We have not had hearings. Hearings sometimes are a path to nowhere; leading to nothing. But since then, have there been hearings called for? No, of course not.

But 6 days later, who is speaking on regulatory reform? The President's own Council on Jobs and Competitiveness chairman, that is who, and he is noting a number of priorities. Guess what. One of them happens to be regulations to support a pro-growth environment and strengthen U.S. competitiveness. He listed improving and innovating education and bolstering exports to the world's fastest growing markets as three of those priorities. Then he called for “collaboration between government and business with regard to regulation” as a top priority, noting that “Decades of overlapping, uncoordinated regulations create unnecessary hurdles and increased burdens for entrepreneurs and businesses, large and small, across the country.”

Let me repeat, this is from the President's hand-selected chairman of a council dedicated to create American jobs and boosting our competitiveness. He made this pronouncement less than a week after the Senate failed to consider my regulatory reform amendment to the SBIR Reauthorization legislation that we were considering for nearly two months, with a mere three days of votes over that time.

You might think that if there were some reasonable concerns about my amendment, the other side would try to work with me since then. Nothing. Nothing. We might have had a recess or two. We had days without votes, days without debating key issues—actually not just days, weeks. Nothing. Nothing is connecting.

What is connecting, though, unfortunately for small businesses and people who depend on them for jobs, is that there is a cause and effect and that is why you are seeing the deleterious effects of our inability to work on the issues that matter, that we have basically relegated all of this to the backseat, we have substituted other things without purpose. It is truly regrettable because of what it is doing to the average American and for those who are struggling. People, rightfully, know it. The American people understand what is happening here—or what is not happening here, I should say.

The breadth of regulations is truly punitive on businesses in America. The Heritage Foundation reported last year that “[t]he burden of regulation on Americans increased at an alarming rate in fiscal year 2010,” with a record 43 major new regulations costing $26.5 billion alone, “far more than any other year for which records are available.”

That is just in 1 year, $26.5 billion. That is on top of the $1.75 trillion in already existing total regulatory costs. That is just 1 year, $26.5 billion.

It is clear the administration and the agencies have gone on a regulatory rampage. Again, it is that detachment from the real world. What does this mean? What are the real, practical implications for the person running a small business and trying to calculate the costs or anticipate future costs? Why are they going to hire a new employee and take on new costs? Why should they make investments? They don't dare. They can't take the risk. They say: We don't know.

I meet with small businesses regularly and talk to them and they say it is the uncertainty with regulations that continues to limit their decisions. This demonstrates it.

The Heritage Foundation reports that “[r]egulatory costs will rise until policymakers appreciate the burdens that regulations are imposing on Americans and the economy, and exercise the political will necessary to limit—and reduce—those burdens.”

That is exactly what our amendment will do. This is a clarion call for regulatory reform. There should be no political or philosophical boundaries. There should not be philosophical differences. You might have some arguments about what approach you take, but those things could be worked out. In fact, that is exactly what I did with the amendment I offered on which I was denied a vote back on May 4.

From the other side there were some issues. We made five major modifications to my proposal because it is important to build bipartisan support. I have certainly reached across the aisle on so many occasions. I would have thought we could have had a corresponding response to work out these issues. That is what I do not understand. I cannot understand. There should not be any debate. If they talk to their small business community, they will get the same response.

What can we do to make it better? That is the key. The key is making some changes. One, I called for a small business review panel to be required for every agency so they can review the regulations before they are promulgated, before they are implemented, so we find out beforehand what might be of concern to small business, what might have potential costs or risks, or will not work out, and know it beforehand. I hear from some: Oh, no, we will work it out later, afterward. You ask the small business person how you are going to work it out afterward, after they paid astronomical costs to comply with that regulation.

Let's set up the small business review panels. This is not a new model. There are such panels for OSHA and EPA. And due to an amendment that I offered to the financial regulatory reform bill, one also now exists at the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, and it is part of that mechanism now. There was a model that we adopted from OSHA and EPA, from 1996, when we had a Democratic administration, and it worked exceptionally well. So I thought, Why not apply it to every agency?

But we heard, absolutely not.

So I said OK, what can we do to work it out? I talked to those on the other side of the aisle and we changed it and said for the 3 years that this bill will be authorized we will do it for nine agencies, three a year, to see how it works for the nine agencies who's rules have the most effect on small businesses. I did that. I made that change to address the concerns that were expressed on the other side of the aisle.

Then we said we should start requiring the agencies to do what they are supposed to do by law. You think it is a little redundant to ask them to do what they are required to do already, which is to review the rules? They are supposed to review the rules every 10 years but, guess what, they do not. So I said: If they are not reviewing a rule every 10 years, then that rule cannot be that important. So let's take it off the books. That is what I proposed. If an agency cannot be bothered to review the regulations as they are required to do under the law every 10 years, if they are not doing it, then it must not be that important so let's take them off.

There was some resistance on the other side so I made the change in response to the concerns. What I incorporated is that they would lose 1 percent of their operating budget. That is fair. We have to give them incentives to do what they should be doing by law but we will now give them some greater impetus to comply with the law. It is amazing that we are in that position, but that is where it stands. So I made that change because I thought it was important.

We have tasked inspector generals with assuring that these reviews are taking place and they can do so in consultation with the chief advocacy counsel at the Small Business Administration. It is not unusual for an IG to determine that the agency they are overseeing complies with existing laws. After all, isn't that what they precisely do? Would anybody argue that outdated and ineffective regulations hurt the environment or harm small businesses? The administration's own preliminary review of regulations at 30 agencies in 4 months identified $1 billion worth of savings. Why would we not want to start having those reviews become the norm rather than the exception? I do not understand it. Are we that busy here that we cannot do it? Maybe we could forfeit a few recesses and do some work for America to connect what is going on in Main Street—getting back to Main Street because that is where the jobs are created.

Maybe we could spend more time here doing that instead of deferring to sometime down the road.

I made some other key changes in hopes that we could build that bridge in response to the concerns that were given by the other side. I made five major modifications because I thought it is important to build bipartisan support. Again I was denied that opportunity.

Now we are being told that the main concern is that it has not had a hearing. Does that mean that we ought to change the rules of the Senate, as I said earlier, to require a hearing for every amendment? Perhaps that would slow the train down even more here. Maybe we could get back to achieving some results.

Another provision I have in my Regulatory Reform Act that I have introduced with Senator COBURN and so many others here, is a basic common-sense approach: incorporating the indirect economic effects of regulations on small businesses so we make sure they anticipate the foreseeable indirect economic effects in addition to the direct effects, because we know there are a multiplicity of effects that resonate and reverberate with other industries. That needs to be calculated and incorporated and factored into the equation in terms of cost. And let's be clear. This is not a radical or partisan proposition. In fact, the language was taken directly, word for word, from the President's Chief small business regulatory watchdog, the head of the SBA Office of Advocacy.

I also recommend that we expand the judicial review requirement so we make sure that when an agency proposes a rule, it has complied with its existing legal requirements to consider the economic impact of the rule on small businesses, that it has contemplated less costly alternative ways to make the rule less burdensome.

That is important because they ought to listen to diverse options, in terms of the rule they are proposing, to make sure that they have incorporated the views of small businesses in understanding the implications, being more exact and precise in the process—not waiting until months and years down the road, after you go through a very extensive, complicated rulemaking process, to try to make your case. Small businesses do not have the resources to do that to begin with, let alone the time or employees to do it. That is not a good use of their capital, by the way, to be spending their time arguing with a government agency time and again.

For 30 years, small businesses have had the ability to seek judicial review of an agency's small business impact statement after the rule has been made. In this entire time period, for over 30 years, even with the ability to obtain judicial review, we know of only two rules that were remanded by the courts. One was a mining regulation that did not account for the number of small businesses that had gone bankrupt under bonding requirements. The other was fishing restrictions issued without realizing the impact on fishermen. This means that waiting until the rule is final is simply too late; the damage is done.

To correct this injustice, our amendment would provide small businesses the ability to bring legal action earlier in the process so we can avert mistakes at the outset so we do not force small businesses to go through this onerous, complicated, costly process, and then find out we made a mistake, the agencies made a mistake, and they say: You know what. You are going to have to fight it and go through another rule-making process which takes months if not years. It is not going to happen. That is why we are not stimulating economic growth; we have thousands of regulations.

As a result, we have provided small businesses the ability to bring legal action, to seek judicial review prior to the rule becoming finalized, whether an agency failed to comply with its existing small business review requirement. This is a commonsense approach, to ensure agencies abide by the law prior to a rule being made final. It is not a partisan measure. It is just practical sense. If somebody has not run a small business, they probably do not understand it, do not appreciate what it takes to start or run a small business, the ingenuity and the cost involved.

If you take a small operation with 5 employees, 10 employees, 20 employees, they are the majority of small businesses in America. And small businesses account for up to 70 percent of the net new jobs in America. Remember, in the last 2½ years other than 4 months, we have had 9 percent or higher unemployment rates. I mean, that is a dire commentary of where we stand today after we have spent $2 trillion, and the deficit is growing, the debt is growing. We are facing the potential of a debt crisis if we do not deal with this massive accumulation of debt. That is why job growth becomes such an imperative. This is why regulatory reform is urgent and why we must do something about it.

We could work across the aisle instead of making broad accusations that this is going to decimate the environment, and workplace safety, that this is going to decimate health care. If that is the case, the President must be doing the same thing because he has just proposed revoking more than $1 billion worth of regulations from agencies in 4 months. We cannot even have a hearing in 4 months on the issue if hearings are so important to the outcome. I would be more than happy to have hearings to get it done, but we cannot even get hearings, cannot work it out. It is just talk, talk, talk.

Many of my proposals have bipartisan support. In fact, interestingly enough, this proposal regarding judicial review was a provision that actually the Small Business Committee chair, the Senator from Louisiana, proposed and Senator CARDIN from Maryland, in a nearly identical fashion as section 605 of the Small Business Investment and Innovation Act of 2010 in the 111th Congress. They obviously agreed with the approach. There is nothing partisan about this. We ought to be able to work this out. There is nothing complicated about it. There is nothing complicated about addressing a fundamental issue facing small businesses.

I just want to set things straight so it is clear and we are not misunderstood. Some are making generalized mischaracterizations. People have not read the amendment, or taken the time and effort to understand it. Reason it out, and if you disagree, come up with something so we can move with urgency, with dispatch because we are losing jobs in America. We are losing businesses. This would help enormously.

That is why the legislation I have introduced, and the Senator from Oklahoma and others, has broad support from major small business organizations across America. They understand. They are hearing from their membership. And speaking of this, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two letters of support, one from 32 major business organizations and another from the Chamber of Commerce.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JUNE 8, 2011.

Hon. OLYMPIA SNOWE,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.
Hon. TOM COBURN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATORS SNOWE AND COBURN: As representatives of small businesses, we are pleased to support Freedom from Restrictive Excessive Executive Demands and Onerous Mandates (FREEDOM) Act of 2011. This legislation puts into place strong protections for small business to help ensure that the federal government fully considers the impact of proposed regulation on small businesses.

In an economy with high unemployment, and where almost 2% of all net new jobs come from the small business sector, we appreciate that your legislation would require regulators to further analyze the impact of certain proposals on job creation. The annual cost of federal regulation per employee is significantly higher for smaller firms than larger firms. Federal regulations—not to mention state and local regulations—add up and increase the cost of labor. If the cost of labor continues to increase, then job creation will be stifled because small businesses will not be able to afford to hire new employees.

The Small Business Regulatory Freedom Act expands the scope of the Regulatory Flexibility Act (RFA) by forcing government regulators to include the indirect impact of their regulations in their assessments of a regulation's impact on small businesses. The bill also provides small business with expanded judicial review protections, which would help to ensure that small businesses have their views heard during the proposed rule stage of federal rulemaking.

The FREEDOM Act strengthens several other aspects of the RFA—such as clarifying the standard for periodic review of rules by federal agencies; requiring federal agencies to conduct small business economic analyses before publishing informal guidance documents; and requiring federal agencies to review existing penalty structures for their impact on small businesses within a set timeframe after enactment of new legislation. These important protections are needed to prevent duplicative and outdated regulatory burdens as well as to address penalty structures that may be too high for the small business sector.

The legislation also expands over time the small business advocacy review panel process. Currently, the panels only apply to the Environmental Protection Agency, the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, and the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau. These panels have proven to be an extremely effective mechanism in helping agencies to understand how their rules will affect small businesses, and help agencies identify less costly alternatives to regulations before proposing new rules.

We applaud your efforts to ensure the federal government recognizes the important contributions of job creation by small business, and look forward to working with you on this important legislation.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Washington, DC, June 8, 2011.

Hon. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Hon. TOM COBURN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATORS SNOWE AND COBURN: As a longstanding advocate for reducing excessive regulatory burdens on small businesses, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce strongly supports S. 1030, the "Freedom from Restrictive Excessive Executive Demands and Onerous Mandates (FREEDOM) Act of 2011." If enacted into law, this legislation would expand the responsibilities under the Regulatory Flexibility Act (RFA) of federal agencies during the rulemaking process so that a more thorough economic impact of proposed regulations on small businesses would be taken into account by regulators.

One provision in the bill would force agencies to take into account the foreseeable indirect economic impact of rules on small entities when analyzing potential burdens. As a result, regulators would have a better picture of the downstream implications of a proposed rule on other businesses that might not otherwise be considered.

Another section of the bill would subject agency guidance documents to the small business safeguards contained in the RFA. In many cases agencies have circumvented their rulemaking responsibilities by issuing informal guidance. Requiring agencies to perform small business economic analyses before publishing informal guidance documents would help prevent regulators from subverting their rulemaking duties under the law.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce is the world's largest business federation, representing the interests of more than three million businesses and organizations of every size, sector, and region. More than 96 percent of the Chamber's members are small businesses with 100 or fewer employees. On behalf of these small employers, we applaud your leadership on introducing this important piece of legislation and look forward to working with you on its passage.

Sincerely,

R. BRUCE JOSTEN.

Ms. SNOWE. Our amendment includes a number of other provisions that would be important. For instance, we asked the Internal Revenue Service to consider small business impact on rulemaking, and that agencies review their rule penalty structures. I think we should ask the Internal Revenue Service to consider small business impact as well. It is reasonable. They obviously have a broad effect on small businesses across America.

I have spoken on this issue at great length because I think it is that important. I have been a ranking member of the Small Business Committee. I have been chair of the Small Business Committee, since 2003 in either capacity. My State of Maine is a small business State with over 97 percent small businesses, so I fully understand and appreciate the magnitude of the situation, the circumstances in which they find themselves and struggle to survive. The interchange fee amendment to this bill, was an important issue that consumed a lot of time in the Senate. I certainly did not complain because I understand that. It did not have a hearing. It is a new proposal—that did not have any hearings. I did not complain, but it is important to understand—I just want everybody to understand not every amendment offered on the Senate floor, every proposal, has a hearing. Far from it. Very few ever do.

We had a hearing on small business regulations last fall. That is why I am working this out, but we cannot work it out. There is no process or mechanism. It is all talk. No action for where it matters most, and I feel the despair and anxiety of my constituents. I feel it intuitively. I wish we could do better.

I have been in the legislative process, as I said earlier, for the better part of four decades. My whole reason for serving in public office is to rise to a higher level. I believe it is my responsibility to solve the problems on behalf of people I represent and, hopefully, the country. There are only 100 United States Senators. It matters for our States, and it matters for our country. I would hope we could aspire to a higher level than this; certainly, in the aftermath of the last election, where there was an indisputable, unequivocal message from the American people begging and pleading with us to solve problems.

We have an individual and a collective responsibility. We know how to do it, and we can do it. The genius of America has always been working together to solve our problems. It has been the hallmark of the innovation and the can-do spirit of America. I happen to believe in that can-do spirit. I know it is possible if we have a process and a procedure in the Senate that allows for it.

When I get up every day, it is about what I can do for the people I represent and for this country at a very trying and anguishing moment, where the uncertainty is permeating the American psyche; to feel and to understand the fear that people get up with every day wondering if they are going to find a job or keep a job. Even if they get a job, it is about one-third of what they were making before. I heard that story yesterday from some constituents, about the hundreds who apply for a job for one-third of what they were making. How are they going to keep their families afloat, their homes? If they can keep it. That is what it is all about.

Why is it we cannot replicate it here in actions and speak to the American people and give voice to those fears and say we are going to do it, we are going to do it right here, and then systematically tackle those issues one after the other and just do it and do it as long as it takes, even if we have to work weekends? Americans are working weekends, two and three jobs. They are doing everything. We take recesses. We do this. We "obfuscate" is the word that comes to mind, sort of create a confusion, a masquerade that we are doing something to mix it up.

The practical impact in the absence of what we are doing is directly felt at home on the average American. I know we can do better. There have been soaring moments in this Chamber and there can be again. This is one of the most consequential times in our economic history, and we have an obligation to lift up the spirits of the people by working together on the issues that matter, and this is one issue that matters because there are 30 million small businesses in America. They are the job generators and creators, and if we do not recognize the reality of this type of reform and we cannot get it done, then we have failed to do our jobs. And I regret that.

I believe we can do it, and working it out instead of talking about hearings at some point, some ambiguity, as if we cannot appreciate or understand what is happening in the real world and households every day on our Main Streets. If you do not, then I suggest you take a few Main Street tours and talk to small businesses and talk about their fears. These are Americans who are working mighty hard to make a difference in this world. All they want is a better life for themselves and their families and their children and, in fact, we are retreating.

We have an obligation to stand up to do what is right. I hope we can find our way somehow, somewhere. This is a great place to start to make a difference.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BEGICH). The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I appreciate the passion with which my colleague spoke, and I could not disagree more with her when she says we are masquerading as if we are doing something.

Were we masquerading when we brought the small business jobs bill to the floor, and Senator LANDRIEU, who chairs the Small Business Committee, stood here day after day after day and only faced a filibuster from the Republicans? We could not get that bill done, and millions of jobs were in the balance. Were we filibustering? No, they were. Were we masquerading?

Were we masquerading when we brought the FAA bill to the floor, in which my colleague, Senator SNOWE, played a huge role? Thank God, we passed it. Were we masquerading? That bill is held up because the House Republicans have not chosen conferees, and we are waiting to have a 21st-century aviation system in this great Nation where we are using radar that was used in the last century—practically the century before. Come on. We are trying to do our job.

She talked about the last election. I will talk about the last election. I was on the ballot, so I can talk about it. It was about jobs. I told my people when I get back here: Jobs, jobs, jobs. I am proud to say we have on the floor right now a bill to reauthorize the Economic Development Administration, a program that has been around since 1965 and one which has a stellar record of attracting $7 of private capital for every $1 we spend. The cost of each job created is approximately $3,000 per job, and they are good jobs. The Chamber of Commerce arm is supporting this and the AFL-CIO.

We are dealing with amendment after amendment after amendment, and it is fine. It is everybody's right, and I appreciate the fact that we will be voting on this amendment at 2:15. We even have an amendment to do away with the very agency we are trying to reauthorize by Senator DEMINT, even though in 2005 he had a very big press release lauding the EDA and, as recently as last year, his staff attended a workshop where they were working with the EDA and praising the EDA for their work to reinvigorate jobs.

I appreciate being lectured—and it is everybody's right to do it—and I will do anything to defend my colleagues' right to say whatever they want. It is just not true. The masquerading here is being done by Republicans who filibuster almost every single thing we do.

I hope we are going to get to the series of amendments. We are being very cooperative with our colleagues. We are going to take some of these—some of these amendments are for show. Fine. Everyone has that right. It is fine. But let's get it done, and let's get going with authorization of a bill that is going to create jobs. That is the whole idea of it. The last time we voted on it, we had a unanimous vote. Since 2004, we had a unanimous vote, and George Bush signed this into law.

I just want folks to know I have another couple minutes of remarks, and then I will yield such time as he may require to Senator BROWN of Ohio.

Mr. THUNE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. THUNE. What are the rules of discussion or debate right now? When the Senator from California wraps up her remarks, would it not be appropriate to have someone from the other side speak at that time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no order for speakers. The Senators from Maine and California control the time, and they yield.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I am happy to propound a unanimous consent request so that at the conclusion of my remarks Senator BROWN will speak for, say, 10 minutes and then it would go to Senator THUNE; is that all right?

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. THUNE. I appreciate that, Mr. President. I don't know if there is any time agreement, but I think it is appropriate to go back and forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. I have said I would offer a unanimous consent agreement. We are dividing the time between the two of us. It is my decision to yield to Senator BROWN because Senator SNOWE has spoken for a very long time and I want him to have some time and I am wrapping up my comments. I would be happy to propound a unanimous consent request that after Senator BROWN's remarks for 10 minutes, we then turn to Senator THUNE for 10 or 15 or 20 minutes or whatever it is he wishes.

Mr. THUNE. Mr. President, point of clarification. My understanding is the Senator from California cannot yield time to another Senator.

Mrs. BOXER. I am not yielding time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can yield time but not the floor.

The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Thank you. So is there objection to my unanimous consent request that Senator THUNE be recognized immediately after Senator BROWN for as long as he wishes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Ms. SNOWE. Reserving the right to object, the Senator from California has been addressing the Senate, so wouldn't it be appropriate for the Senator from South Dakota to speak?

Mrs. BOXER. My unanimous consent request is that I have the right to call on Senator BROWN. I can yield to Senator BROWN is my understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can yield time but not control of the floor.

Mrs. BOXER. I wish to yield time to Senator BROWN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does not give Senator BROWN the floor.

Mrs. BOXER. So then I will yield to him for some questions. I can do that under the rules; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mrs. BOXER. All right. So that is what we will do, unless my colleagues would rather do it the way I said before. If not, I will just yield for questions. Either way. It is up to my colleagues.

Mr. THUNE. Mr. President, the request was that at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from California, the Senator from Ohio would have how many minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ten minutes.

Mrs. BOXER. Then Senator THUNE would be recognized for as much time as he wishes.

Mr. THUNE. I don't have any objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The Senator from Maine.

Ms. SNOWE. Reserving the right to object, I wish to include the Senator from Oklahoma, Mr. COBURN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the conclusion of Senator THUNE?

Mrs. BOXER. Reserving the right to object, and I will not object, could we have some indication of timeframe? It is all fine.

Ms. SNOWE. Fifteen.

Mrs. BOXER. All right. I think I have the time; is that right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let's make sure. Up to 10 minutes for Senator BROWN of Ohio, then Senator THUNE to follow, and then Senator COBURN will follow.

Mrs. BOXER. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. BOXER. I have one more question. I still have the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mrs. BOXER. I said at the conclusion of my remarks we would turn to Senator BROWN. How many minutes remain on each side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is 68 minutes for the majority and 47 minutes for the minority.

Mrs. BOXER. Thank you very much. I will wrap up in a couple minutes and come back later.

I think it is very important to reiterate what I said before. I don't think we are masquerading around here; I think we are trying to do our work. The bill before us was voted out of the committee. It had hearings. It had a vote. It was bipartisan, unlike the amendment offered by my friend who never had a hearing. Let's be clear. We are not masquerading; we are doing our work.

I only hope this bill gets better treatment than the small business bill. My friend is speaking for small business. We all know small business is the engine of jobs, and that is why it was shocking to me that the Republicans filibustered the last small business bill that was on this floor. It is outrageous, when we say we want jobs.

The reason I am going to vote to table the Snowe amendment or against the Snowe amendment—there are many, but one is process. We haven't had a hearing. It is very far-reaching. But I also wish to speak as chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee. One of our biggest laws and regulations that stem from it has to do with the Clean Air Act. The way my friend has put forward her amendment, there would be no benefit put into a regulation because of its impact on the health of us and our families.

The Clean Air Act has been attacked by those who want to say let's not have regulations for this segment of business and that segment. We just had a vote in California and 60 percent of the people—Republicans, Democrats, Independents—more than 60 percent said we want to see our health protected.

Here is what has happened. In 2010, the Clean Air Act prevented 160,000 cases of premature deaths—premature deaths. Now we are going to come in with some regulation that has never had a hearing, never had a vote, that is not going to take into account the benefit of a health regulation such as that. By 2020, that number is projected to rise to 230,000 cases of premature deaths.

In 2010, the Clean Air Act prevented 1.7 million asthma attacks—1.7 million fewer attacks. We want jobs. We want people healthy. They can't go to work if they can't breathe, because if you can't breathe, you can't work. So let's not get up here and pass something that hasn't had a hearing, hasn't had a vote, and suddenly say we are no longer going to take into account the benefits of some of the regulations we have.

In 2010, the Clean Air Act prevented 130,000 acute heart attacks. In 2010, the Clean Air Act prevented 3.2 million lost days at school.

So my point is, yes, we want regulations to be sensible; yes, we want them to be flexible; yes, we should work together to make sure our businesses aren't facing undue delays and all the rest and I am very willing to do that. But what I am not willing to do is pass something that has far-reaching impacts. We don't even know what it would mean to the health and safety of our families, and it would absolutely ignore the benefits of regulations that protect our children's health, their safety, their well-being and our working families because a lot of these regulations are meant to protect them.

I hope we will vote down the Snowe amendment. I appreciate the passion on all sides. I truly believe we are not masquerading. We have a bill with real impacts, a bill that I have shown has made a major difference in job creation, in business creation, and in bringing hope to our most ravaged communities. It is such a good program that even Senator DEMINT, who says he doesn't like this program, certainly throughout his career has praised the progress it has made in his State.

With that, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. HAGAN). The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Madam President, I thank the Senator from California, and I thank the Senator from South Dakota also for his indulgence. I will be no more than 10 minutes.

I listened to Senator BOXER. This EDA issue is important for job creation. I know when it comes to something such as this, there is a whole array of issues that EDA is involved with in job creation. Just one of them is what EDA does with incubators and accelerators.

Last week, I was in Shaker Heights, OH, at a place called the LaunchHouse. It used to be an auto dealership, and there are now 40 entrepreneurs working there. We know EDA investment, public dollar investment, in these incubators pays real dividends. The EDA estimates a $10,000 investment creates 50 or more jobs. We are seeing that in places such as Shaker Heights and Youngstown, one of the best incubators in the country. Athens, OH, is the home of the National Association of Incubators, and they know what that means.

Before the Senator from Alaska was presiding, I was in the chair presiding and listening to some of this debate. I am a bit amazed by it. First of all, let's remember a little bit of history. I hear the talking points, apparently distributed to all 47 of the Republican Senators, all coming to the floor and blaming government regulation for every problem known to humankind. They are forgetting government regulation is seat belts, airbags, safe drinking water, prohibition on child labor, the Food and Drug Administration so our food is pure and our pharmaceuticals are safe. But they lump it all together and say get rid of all this government regulation. I think the history they need to think about is the last time they preached on the Senate floor about deregulation, they were successful in deregulating Wall Street, and look what happened to that.

When I hear this sort of preachy: "We have to get rid of government regulation," let's be a little more specific. There are some regulations, to be sure, that we should do away with. But when I hear them talk about trillions of dollars of regulation, a lot of that is what keeps our food pure, our drinking water safe, our workplaces safe, our quality of life better for the broad middle class. Let's not forget that.

I wish to speak for the last 5 or 6 minutes about something my colleagues and I will be debating fairly soon; that is, the pending trade agreements with South Korea, Colombia, and Panama. It is a bit of deja vu—as Yogi Berra said, deja vu all over again. The promise of jobs is an echo we hear about every 3 or 4 years: Time to do a new free-trade agreement; time to promise lots and lots of new job creation; promise more exports for the United States. We heard it with NAFTA, the North American Free Trade Agreement, almost 20 years ago. We heard it with PNTR with China in the late 1990s. We heard it with the Central American Free Trade Agreement in the last decade—2003, 2004, 2005, 2006—and now we are hearing it again with Colombia and South Korea and Panama.

I recall both Republican and Democratic administrations saying 200,000 new jobs created by NAFTA. I heard proponents of PNTR promise a more balanced trade relationship with China, and new, increased exports. We have seen increased exports to China but nothing like the number of—there were jobs created because of that, I acknowledge that, but nothing like the export of goods from China to the United States, which, in essence, is outsourcing jobs in the United States.

There is a company in Bryan, OH, called the Ohio Art Company. They make something we are all familiar with, and that is the Etch A Sketch. We all played with it as kids. Walmart went to that company—the biggest retailer in the history of the world—and said: We want to sell your product for less than $10 at Walmart. Do my colleagues know what they did? They basically shut down production in the United States and moved to China so they could sell it for $10, costing hundreds of jobs in that northwest Ohio community.

Before PNTR, before these promises about increased jobs, we had a $68 billion trade deficit in goods with China. Last year, it was $273 billion. About $600 million or $700 million every single day we bring in—we buy from China, then we sell to China. I hear this word "unsustainable" in this body all the time about Medicare, whatever they are talking about. But this is what is unsustainable. We can't keep adding to that trade deficit and think we are going to have good jobs.

In April alone, our trade deficit with China was $21 billion—in 1 month, $21 billion. So when I hear, this year, the Korean Free Trade Agreement—and the President of the United States is going to submit it to Congress fairly soon, I assume, depending on what happens with the trade adjustment assistance; and this President has made this agreement with Korea, significantly better than the last President's trade agreement with Korea but not all that good yet—the Congressional Budget Office estimates this agreement will cost—in addition to the jobs issue, but hold on to that for a second—about $7 billion over the next 10 years—$7 billion.

My conservative friends on the other side of the aisle are going to say: How are we going to pay for $7 billion? They want to offset cuts, they want to offset any other kind of spending, but they do not seem to want to offset spending on this trade agreement. So this trade agreement is costing us $7 billion. So free trade simply is not free.

The administration says this agreement is expected to support—not create—70,000 jobs. Do the math. It is about $100,000 for every job supported. But do another piece of math, if I could ask the indulgence of the Presiding Officer. George Bush the first said for every $1 billion trade deficit or surplus, that translates—these are his numbers—into about 13,000 jobs. So when I mentioned that trade deficit with China a minute ago—$21 billion in just April alone—for every $1 billion, 13,000 jobs are either gained or lost. If it is a trade deficit of $21 billion, that means 13,000 jobs for every $1 billion of loss. So you can see, without belaboring this point or putting too fine a point on it, there is significant job loss from these trade agreements.

The Obama administration sought to address the Bush administration's neglect of American automakers, which the free-trade agreement the Bush administration negotiated with Korea did. But I fear we have not gone far enough. Korea is the most closed automotive market in the world to America and other foreign autos. No manufacturer can export vehicles in significant volumes into Korea—not Toyota, not Volkswagen, not Ford, not Fiat. U.S. vehicle exports to Korea in 2010 were 7,500 units. In a country approaching perhaps 90 million people in Korea—80, 90, 95 million people—we sell them 7,500 cars? Imports currently make up about 6 percent of the Korean auto market. Six percent of the cars driven around in South Korea are made somewhere other than South Korea. That is not quite fair trade.

This bill, this Korean Free Trade Agreement, does not get us there. The Obama administration approved it, but nothing like it needs to be. So I just caution my colleagues, the Korea Free Trade Agreement is a permanent agreement. If we pass this agreement in a couple months, what we pass in establishing that formalized trade agreement with that major industrial country in East Asia is a permanent relationship.

It does not sunset like a so-called authorization. It does not sunset the way many of my colleagues have recently let the trade adjustment assistance lapse for service workers and for workers who lose their jobs to countries we do not have a free-trade agreement with. Some of my colleagues insist trade adjustment assistance needs to be reauthorized in the short-term, little baby steps, year-by-year intervals, while they press for more permanent trade agreements.

Here is the deal. Madam President, I know you in North Carolina have shown real leadership on these trade relationships. Here is the deal conservative politicians in the Senate and in the House of Representatives want. They want us to pass permanent trade agreements, but then they may want to take care of workers for just 1 year at a time, 6 months at time—6 weeks at a time the last time they reauthorized this.

This does not make sense. The trade agreement with Korea is a significant problem for job growth in our country and for protecting jobs in our country. There is nothing wrong with the word “protecting” jobs in our country. But at the same time, before we even consider that, we need to make sure we pass the trade adjustment assistance. We should have learned our lessons from NAFTA, from NPTR with China, from CAFTA, and from these other trade agreements that the promises coming from an administration on job creation, when it comes to trade agreements, are mostly empty promises.

I yield the floor.

I thank Senator THUNE from South Dakota for his indulgence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. THUNE. Madam President, I rise in support of the amendment that has been proposed by my colleagues from Maine and Oklahoma, Senators SNOWE and COBURN, the Freedom from Restrictive Excessive Executive Demands and Onerous Mandates Act of 2011. This is a very commonsensical piece of legislation. It is something that certainly responds to a concern I hear from small businesses all across this country about the need for relief from burdensome, one-size-fits-all Federal regulations.

We hear a lot of discussion—in the Senate and around this town and around the country, for that matter, because that is where it truly matters—about creating jobs. Yet for all the rhetoric about job creation, it seems there is very little that is actually being done with regard to the substance of putting the right kind of policies in place that will make it cheaper and easier for small businesses to create jobs. It seems as if everything we do makes it harder, more difficult, and more expensive for our small businesses to create jobs.

As the Senator from Maine very correctly pointed out, 70 percent of the jobs in our economy are created by small businesses. I think there are a whole range of issues that impact small businesses in this country and their ability to create jobs.

My colleague from Ohio just talked about trade. I happen to have a view on trade that you ought to have trade agreements that are fair, that are enforceable, obviously, but that we are a country that benefits enormously from the opportunity to export the products we grow and make to other countries around the world.

To just give you an example of one particular country, one of the bilateral trade agreements that is under consideration—or at least I wish was under consideration; it has been negotiated and has not been submitted by the White House yet to the Congress for consideration—is the one with Colombia. I mentioned this earlier today in some remarks on the floor, if you look at it and its impact on agriculture in this country: In 2008, in the commodities of corn, wheat, and soybeans, our country had 81 percent of the Colombian market when it comes to those three agricultural commodities. In 2010, that was down to 27 percent. Why? Because a lot of other countries that had negotiated free-trade agreements with Colombia have stepped in to fill the void because we do not have that kind of agreement.

This has very direct and profound impacts on the American economy. Because when you lose that kind of market share—81 percent in 2008, down to 27 percent in 2010—that is a significant number of jobs that are impacted in industries in this country. The same would be true with Panama and South Korea, all of which would be trade agreements that are teed up that have been sitting and languishing for 3 or 4 years now without action in the Senate. It is absolutely insane for us not to be moving trade agreements that could benefit our economy and create jobs at a time when job creation—certainly, at least rhetorically around here—is stated to be the No. 1 priority we deal with.

When it comes to jobs and the economy—and I think there are a number of things, as I said, that impact that, trade being one—there are a number of policies coming out of Washington that impact small businesses and their ability to create jobs. Clearly, tax policy is one. Tax policy is something I think needs to be reviewed. We need tax reform. It is long overdue. It is making us noncompetitive with other countries around the world because our tax laws are outdated relative to other countries, our takes rates are higher relative to every other industrialized country in the world, with the exception, perhaps, of Japan. That is something we need to be looking at. If we are serious about being competitive and about growing our economy and in the global marketplace creating the kind of jobs we need here at home, we have to have trade policies, tax policies that are conducive to economic growth and job creation.

The other area, however, on which we can be impacted by what happens in Washington is regulation. That is what this particular amendment is all about. It is about making regulation coming out of Washington, DC, reasonable, making it based upon common sense, making it based upon science, making it where any objective bystander or person out there—an observer who looks at these regulations—would say: They are trying very hard not to make it more difficult for small businesses to create jobs in this country.

But I think what happens too often is the exact opposite. It looks like what is coming out of Washington are heavy-handed, burdensome requirements, mandates, and regulations which drive up the cost of doing business in this country. Frankly, I do not disagree with what some of my colleagues on the other side have said about regulations that are important to public health and safety. What I am talking about are excessive, overreaching regulations, which in some cases go beyond the congressional intent, the statutory purpose that Congress, when they enacted the laws, wanted to see take place. So you have regulatory agencies that go way beyond the congressional intent and the statutory purpose with regard to many of these policies that are being put in place.

I have to say that when I travel in my State of South Dakota—and, for that matter, outside the State of South Dakota—and I talk to small businesses, I talk to agricultural producers, the overriding theme, the consistent theme I hear over and over and over again is: You have to get these out-of-control regulatory agencies under control. They keep spinning and kicking out more and more regulations that are making it more difficult for us to grow our businesses and to create jobs.

Maybe that is a function of the fact that we have a government that has gotten too big and out of control. If you look at government today relative to historical standards, we are looking at government, as a percentage of our entire economy today, of being somewhere in the 24- to 25-percent range. I mentioned earlier this morning in some remarks on the floor that back in the year 1800, the government was actually 2 percent of our entire economy. For our entire economic output at that time, 2 percent represented what we spent on the Federal Government. Today we are spending one-quarter—one-quarter—of every dollar of our entire economic output in just the Federal Government. That does not include State and local governments. When you add those in, you get up over 40 percent. The trajectory we are on today will take us up to 40 percent of spending on the Federal Government to GDP in the not-too-distant future. If you look at 2035, 2040, that is where we are headed if we stay on our current path.

So it necessarily follows, I suppose, that when government keeps getting bigger and more expansive, more government regulations, more government redtape, more bureaucracy is a natural outgrowth of a growing government. What I think makes the most sense is for us to be creating jobs in the private economy. What we have seen here in just the last few years is that the government economy is growing relative to the total economy. The private economy, thereby, is shrinking. We have seen, over the last 40 years, the average of the Federal Government, as a percentage of our entire economy, being 20.6 percent. So 20.6 percent of our entire economy spending has been by the Federal Government. As I said, now it is 24 to 25 percent.

So we are on a path where we are rapidly ramping up, we are rapidly growing the size of government relative to our entire economy. That is not where we want to go if we are serious about creating good-paying, permanent jobs for people in this country. Those jobs originate and come from the private sector. They come from small businesses. That is where we want to create the jobs.

So I would say the amendment that is being proposed by the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Oklahoma is a very reasonable one because all it is simply saying is, before these new regulations go into place, the small businesses ought to have access to some review and perhaps even, if necessary, to the court system, to make sure those regulations are consistent with the legislative intent and not overly burdensome and putting an unnecessary and excessive burden on our small businesses.

I think it is common sense. If we are serious about job creation, if we are serious about economic growth, getting the economy back on track, this is the very type of legislation we ought to be supporting. Too often around here we end up off on these tangents, working on things that do not have an impact on job creation. I will say that one of the things we should be working on—and that we are not—it has now been 771 days since Congress passed a budget. Think about that: $3.8 trillion, $3.7 trillion, $3.8 trillion in annual spending, and it has been 771 days now since Congress passed a budget.

It strikes me, at least, that if we are serious about getting our fiscal house in order and sending signals to the economy and to the market that we want to create jobs, the first thing we could do is get the fiscal house in Washington, DC, in order. Yet we have had 771 days now without a budget.

If you are really serious about getting the economy back on track, you have to also restrain spending. You have to grow the economy, you have to restrain Federal spending, because when you have a government that is growing at the rate ours is, it does crowd out private investment. It makes it more difficult for small businesses to get access to capital and create jobs because they are competing with the government.

Back to the issue at hand here—that is regulations—I think that whether it is a farmer or rancher in South Dakota—by the way, I spoke yesterday with someone who is in town representing a livestock organization in my State—the No. 1 issue is overreaching government regulation driving up the cost of doing business.

You look at some of the proposals and suggestions that are out there, and sometimes they fall into the category of “you can’t make this kind of stuff up.”

There was a proposal under consideration here recently at the EPA—which they have not, to be fair, promulgated regulations on yet or proposed regulations on yet—that would regulate fugitive dust. I mean, imagine and think about what that means in an agricultural. What it essentially means is you could not have dust from your property drift over onto someone else’s property.

Some of this stuff borders on insanity. I think that is the point that is being made by the amendment of the Senator from Maine. Let’s use some common sense. Let’s use some reason. If we are going to have these regulations, let’s at least put them forward in a way that does not disproportionately adversely affect small businesses and make it more difficult for them to create jobs.

Here is another example. Just last month, the DOT started seeking comment on the need for commercial driver’s licenses for individuals who are driving off-road farm equipment such as tractors. Well, where I come from, that is a pretty important part of our economy. You have a lot of young people working in farm operations, a lot of people, period, who are out there who grow up learning or knowing how to drive tractors, how to handle farm equipment, and this particular requirement would force them to get a commercial driver’s license.

I mean, some of this stuff, as I said, falls into the category of “you can’t make these kinds of things up.”

The EPA recently threatened ranchers in the Flint Hills region of Kansas to stop or limit the controlled burn of their prairie pastures, which is a practice that allows for the new growth of grass to feed cattle, or to be faced with EPA-mandated regulations.

The list goes on and on.

It strikes me again that when you have as many of these studies that are out there, and a lot of data supports these arguments, we ought to be responding in a way that recognizes that science, data, and input from people who are impacted by these regulations ought to have more of an influence on the regulations that are imposed by these agencies. What this does is it simply puts in place a way in which small businesses can get access to that kind of a review.

I hope my colleagues in the Senate will support the Snowe-Coburn amendment and move us in a direction where we are dealing fundamentally with the issues that are important to our economy right now because, for all of the rhetoric, as I said earlier, about wanting to grow the economy and create jobs, it seems as though every policy coming out of Washington, DC, is contrary to that objective, whether that is tax policy, trade policy, energy policy, but perhaps more important now than ever, regulatory action coming out of the executive branch of the government and running amok by creating all kinds of roadblocks and hurdles and impediments to job creation in this country.

Again, when you are at 9.1 percent unemployment, when you have as many people out of work as we have and who have been out of work for as long as they have, you would think that, first and foremost, we would be looking at policies that make it easier and less expensive to create jobs in this country. And what is happening is we are making it more difficult and more expensive to create jobs by these excessive, overreaching, runaway regulations that are coming out of Federal agencies every single day.

It is hands down the thing I hear more than anything else from people in my State of South Dakota. As I said, whether that is the Farm Bureau or a livestock group or a small business organization, right now government regulation is the thing they state most often as the biggest impediment to them going out there and creating jobs.

So this is a very commonsense amendment. It is something our small businesses are all supporting. We saw the list of small business organizations the Senator from Maine put up earlier. This is something this Senate ought to act on and act on today. I hope we will get a strong affirmative vote.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Would the Senator yield for a question? Is the Senator aware that there are at least four other bills—Senator VITTER, Senator ROBERTS, Senator COLLINS, and Senator PORTMAN—and, in addition, that Senator LIEBERMAN is developing a comprehensive bill on reg reform? Is the Senator aware of those other bills?

Mr. THUNE. Well, I would say through the Chair that there may be many efforts, as there typically are here in the Senate, to address some of the issues, and a lot of our Members have different ideas about how best to do that. I happen to believe the proposal put forward by the Senator from Maine is, as I said, a very reasonable, commonsense approach to this.

The Regulatory Flexibility Act is something that is in need of some revisions, particularly in light of the fact that we have so many regulations coming out of these agencies that are so costly, so difficult, and so burdensome for small businesses in this country. I think we ought to be, at every opportunity, looking for ways to lessen the cost and the difficulty for our small businesses to create jobs.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Through the Chair, I understand Senator COBURN, under the UC, has the next 15 minutes. But, through the Chair, I would end my question by saying that I think the Senator is right. There are some regulations that are coming fairly fast and furiously. But I think the Senator would also understand that the normal process is reviewing the bills at the committee level, comparing and contrasting, and then bringing the best approach to the floor. And that is what some of us are objecting to. It is not the goal of reducing regulations; it is the process.

Thank you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLUMENTHAL). The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. COBURN. Mr. President, I have listened to this debate all morning, as an original cosponsor with Senator SNOWE on her bill. I wish to talk about the EDA first, and then I will talk about what most of us do not realize because most of us have not taken the time to look.

There are 80 economic development programs in the Federal Government through 4 agencies that spend $6.6 billion a year. Not one of them has a metric on it to see if it is successful.

We have heard all morning about $3,000 per job. That is all self-reported stuff. No oversight on it. No committee oversight on it. No hard work to see—there is not a metric on one of these programs to see if it is working. Now we have a bill on the floor to spend another $500 million a year on something we have no idea what—we have anecdotal evidence, but what does the OIG say? The OIG says, first of all, this program has been used as a congressional slush fund to direct money to friends of Members of Congress. That is what they say. Fully one-third of the projects never come to completion. So the money that was spent on it ends up being totally wasted. We are reauthor-izing a bill that nobody can show the statistics that it is, in fact, effective. It is not just that we are reauthorizing this bill, we have 79 other programs.

Ask yourself a question. We are $14 trillion in debt. We are nearly bankrupt. We are running a $1.5 trillion deficit. And we have a bill on the floor to spend $500 million, and we do not know whether it works. We claim, anecdotally, we see positive things every now and then. Well, you know, there are positive outcomes to illness too. But the fact is, we do not know what we are doing.

What the Congress ought to be doing is saying: If, in fact, it is a role for the Federal Government to have economic development activities, then we ought to center it in 1 area, and we ought to have 1 or 2 programs, not 80 with 80 sets of administrators, 80 sets of commissions, and $6.6 billion a year, with half of it not accomplishing any purpose for the American people other than make the Senators and Congressmen feel good because they think they may have done something.

So the whole idea that we would put forward a bill that has never truly been oversights in terms of the way everybody else would oversight the way they spend their money to see if it is effective in the whole, not anecdotal evidence of one company or one benefit—put it all together, and if we have a role, let's put together a program that will work, No. 1; No. 2, that has metrics on it so we can measure whether it is effective when we are actually borrowing the money to do this. By the way, if we actually pass this bill and $500 million gets spent, we are going to borrow $200 million from the international financial community to do it. When we know one-third of it is wasted, that just does not make any sense.

So the whole idea of Congress passing this EDA bill, in light of not doing oversight on the other 79 economic development programs under the other 4 agencies, is the definition of insanity. We don't know what we are doing.

Now, let's talk about regulation for a minute. There is well over $2 trillion in the United States sitting in small, medium, and large businesses right now that is not invested for jobs. Why is that? Why are people afraid to go out and invest and get a return on capital? It is because they do not see any clarity in the future. The administration we have today has issued 40 percent more regulations—40 percent more regulations—than any administration in history in the first 2 years. One of the reasons people do not have confidence is they cannot handle the regulatory framework that is coming at them so fast.

The other thing I have observed is that when regulations are written, they are oftentimes written without people with the real knowledge of what they are writing the regulations for.

Eighty percent of the regulations written in this country are written by lawyers within the agency in which they are doing it. Now, I like lawyers. That is good enough. But how about having someone who has real experience in the area in which they are writing the regulation rather than a lawyer write a regulation for it?

A great example is that one of the good things about the new health care bill was going to be where we combine things into accountable care organizations, where we end up putting hospitals and doctors and physical therapists and mental health workers all together, and then we work as a team so we can cut the costs and not have duplication and get better outcomes. The regulations on that were 220 pages long, with 65 things you have to do every day on every patient to report back to the Federal Government. Well, that is just idiotic. It is asinine. Yet that is the regulation that came out on what I view as one of the few positive things about the affordable care act.

The Senator from Maine outlined the cost of business regulation to small businesses and large businesses. It is $1.7 trillion a year; that is, fully 12 percent of our GDP is the cost of regulations that are coming from the Federal Government.

All this bill says is—it is a way to force the administration and the agency—it does not matter if it is a Republican or Democratic administration. They are both the same. It does not have anything to do with what party is in power in the administration, but to hold the agencies accountable, that they will look at the impact of the regulations they write so they are not counterproductive to our country.

We are at a time period where we are at great risk as a nation—great risk—because we are so overly exposed on our debt and our deficit. For every 1 percent increase of interest rates that we are going to see next year, it is going to cost us, the taxpayers of America, $150 billion additional. And there is no question we are going to see interest rates rise in this country. So we do not create the confidence of the small and medium businesses to go out and build that next production line or build a way to produce this next new idea, because what they are seeing is so much blowback from an unaccountable, misdirected Federal Government.

So what Senator SNOWE wants to do is totally connected with common sense. But you know what, we don't want to do that. We don't want to do that. And the excuse is that we have not been through committee. Well, let me tell you, one-third of the bills that come to the floor of the Senate have never been through the committee, and now we are saying an amendment has to come through the committee. It is ludicrous. It is also false. It is that we really don't trust the American people.

That is what it really says, we really don't trust the American people to use common sense. The reason we don't is because we have no connection with common sense whatsoever in this body, and because we can't figure it out, we don't think they can. So Big Brother has to tell you every time, every location, at every situation what you can do.

The thing that has changed in my adult lifetime is when I was a medical device manufacturer in the seventies, the presumption was on the government to prove that I was doing something wrong.

With our regulatory framework now, the presumption is on you, the American citizen, to prove you didn't do something wrong. That is why this overregulation, this attendance to detail matters to nothing, except a gnaw on the top of a pin. It is out there and is so costly, in terms of the cost of compliance, it makes no difference in terms of somebody's outcome. But, mainly, it is costing us jobs. It is costing us the very thing that built this country—the premise that you can put together an idea and build on that idea with hard work and minimal capital and make it a success.

The thing that is blocking that is the regulation coming from the Federal Government. This is a straightforward bill. Let's hold the bureaucrats accountable. If they will not be held accountable, you will have a way to hold them accountable.

I don't get it. I don't get why anybody would object to this because it is not stopping regulation; it is saying you have to figure out whether it is prudent. If you are not following the Regulatory Flexibility Act, then we are going to make you do it because, we will give you a basis in a court of law to be able to do that.

What is wrong with that? Nobody has addressed what is wrong with that. They have just said, no, we don't like it, we don't want it. So we are going to do everything we can to make sure an amendment, which will fix the problems in this country and start creating jobs, and will actually move money into investment to create new opportunities for jobs for Americans, when we have 17 million Americans who want to work but can't, we are going to defeat it. We are so disconnected with what is important in this country, and it is so frustrating. I am surprised I still have hair on my head.

Senator SNOWE knows more about small business in this Senate than any other Senator. She has worked on it for years. She knows the problem. She has offered a solution that is common sense, that will work, that won't cost a lot of money, but will rein in the bureaucracy when they do the wrong thing or they don't follow the law.

For us to say, no, we are not going to do it because there may be a small amount of risk that something might go wrong, that is exactly the same way the bureaucracies work. Let me tell you how they work. They never do what is best for the country, they do what is safe for the bureaucracy. That is why we have so much regulation, because they don't want to be criticized. You can't walk through life without being criticized. Nobody is perfect. No action is perfect. So let's hold them accountable and help them be better. Let's be uplifters to them and put some tools there that will enable us to have a good regulatory framework that actually accomplishes the purpose of the regulations but doesn't destroy what small amount of manufacturing business we have left.

With that, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I understand our side has about 50 minutes left in this debate on the Snowe amendment and we will vote at 2:15. I will speak for the next 15 or 20 minutes. There is nobody else on the floor on our side. I will continue to try to answer some of the issues raised in the last few minutes about this particular amendment.

First of all, I have a great deal of respect for the Senator from Oklahoma, and nobody has worked harder on trying to bring more efficiency to the Federal Government. He has spent hours and hours and hours in meetings, official meetings, informal meetings, on budgets, efficiencies, and regulations. I have a great deal of respect for the Senator from Oklahoma personally. But I do take offense at some of the—not just the suggestions but accusations and specific attacks made on the floor against the government. Two or three were issued in the speech he just gave—statements like this: "The bureaucracy never takes risks."

I wish to ask him, what bureaucracy did he think supported the elimination of Osama bin Laden? Does the Senator from Oklahoma believe there were no risks taken by this bureaucracy that he so routinely wants to degrade—to no good end? I would ask him, if he were still on the floor, were no risks taken by anyone when they launched the strike against Osama bin Laden that eventually killed him?

Would the Senator from Oklahoma suggest we have no regulations on Wall Street; that we should trust the big international bankers of the world to do what is right every day for the people of Oklahoma? I know the people on Wall Street wake up every morning and think to themselves while they are eating breakfast: What can I do today to help the people in Oklahoma or in Louisiana?

Of course, that is absurd. There is a place for appropriate regulation, and bureaucracies aren't always bad. When George Washington led the creation of this country, he most certainly had in his mind a government that worked for the people, by the people.

Let's fix the government. Let's not tear it down by statements that have no basis in fact, that do not uplift people, do not encourage people. They numb people. They make people angry. They make people think there is no hope, when there is. There are thousands of people who put on a uniform every day and go to work for this country. They are mothers, fathers, grandparents, aunts, and uncles. They work hard and they do not deserve the disparaging remarks that come too often from the other side of the aisle.

If you don't like government—you have made it plain—then fix it. One of the ways to fix it is to take a bill—and this is not an amendment that Senator SNOWE has, it is a bill. I have seen it. She asked me to cosponsor it, and I have declined. It is a bill—a major bill—that has jurisdiction that will find its jurisdiction not in one committee—the Small Business Committee—but in five committees that have jurisdiction over the aspects of Senator SNOWE's bill. One of the reasons we should not vote favorably is not because we are not for regulatory reform but because this bill has ramifications that go far beyond the Small Business Committee, which I chair, and five or six other committees need to look at the provisions in her bill. That is one reason we have asked to go through the committee process.

No. 2, there are, at least to my knowledge, four other bills that attempt to fix this overregulatory reach which, I agree with Senator THUNE, with Senator COBURN, and I agree with Senator SNOWE, needs to be tapped down and harnessed—not eliminated—and made less onerous for all business, not just small business. There are at least four other bills I know of that are attempting to do that. One is by Senator VITTER, one by Senator ROBERTS, one by Senator COLLINS, and one by Senator PORTMAN. I have not had the opportunity to review in detail all of these other bills, but I am sure they have some very excellent points to them.

The committee process allows a chairman such as Senator LIEBERMAN, who is not here today, whose committee would have primary jurisdiction over this, to bring all five bills before his committee, hear the best aspects of each, potentially combine them into a bill, and bring them to the floor. Do you know what. Senator LIEBERMAN, I know, has offered to do that in his committee. That bill could potentially come out of committee—potentially with Senator SNOWE as lead author, with other cosponsors—a bill that both Democrats and Republicans can agree to, which could give relief to reg reform.

This is not about finding a solution. This is about public relations, campaigns, and Republican rhetoric about the election. That is what I object to. If this were about regulatory reform and finding a solution, the five Senators who have bills, and other Senators—Senator McCASKILL, for one, who is here today, is developing a bill, and Senator CARPER, who has spent years on this subject and is quite the expert—they would all come before the Homeland Security Committee, on which I have the privilege of serving, and in a short amount of time—just a few weeks—figure out something the majority could support.

This is not about fixing the problem. This is about bumper stickers for elections, and I am very tired of it. I am not the only one. As chair of the Small Business Committee, I can promise you that our committee, with Senator SNOWE as ranking member, has worked every day very hard through this recession to put forward bills on this floor that could help create jobs, bring relief. In fact, regarding one of the most burdensome regulations that the business community was screaming about, our committee was very aggressive in helping to eliminate that. That was section 1099, which would have required every business to report to the IRS any purchase they made for goods over $600. It would have brought many businesses to their knees, buried in paperwork.

Did our committee sit around and twiddle its thumb? No. We worked hard. We had, I think, the only hearing in Congress on 1099, and we repealed it. It took us a while to find the right offset. The minute the business groups brought it to our attention, we said we made a mistake and it will take us a while to find the $20 billion to offset it, but we will look at it before it goes into effect and repeal it. We did that.

When Republicans say Democrats don't care about regulatory burdens, I find that offensive. It is not helpful. This bill is not on the floor on regulatory relief. This bill is on a small but effective economic development program that has worked beautifully in my State. Contrary to what the Senator from Oklahoma and others have said, this program—in Louisiana, as far as Louisiana is concerned—actually works. One of the reasons it works so well is because many of the decisions about the grants are not done in Washington but at the regional level. Our office happens to be in Austin, TX. When the Chamber of Commerce comes to visit me—and they are not always huge supporters of the Democratic caucus—they say to me: Senator, one of the best programs that our members like and feel the Federal Government does a very good job with is the EDA grants, because they are not that bureaucratic. They make quick decisions and help us fill gap financing in programs that make a meaningful difference to people in our communities. I didn't raise this subject to the Chamber of Commerce; they raised this subject to me.

Maybe the Senator from Oklahoma is correct that some of these moneys were earmarked. But we don't allow earmarks anymore. So this program is going to go on without earmarks directed by Members. It is going to be done on a regional basis, and these programs have been—at least in Louisiana's experience—quite effective. Louisiana Tech, one of my universities, received a $2 million EDA grant. I will submit this for the RECORD: Our ongoing partnership with EDA has greatly enhanced the university's overall economic development efforts. We are creating the EDA University Center.

This is from the mayors of both cities. You know, I do trust my local elected officials. I do trust the people I represent. When they say a program works, I like to believe them.

There is a list of projects and recent investments in Louisiana—$1.2 million to Tulane University.

Can I tell you one thing about Tulane University, since it was damaged significantly after Hurricane Katrina? We have over 45,000 applicants to this school. Why do people want to come to Tulane? They want to come because not only is it a great school, but it is in a great city that is rebuilding itself. An EDA grant—that some people wish to eliminate—is helping to rebuild our city. So $1.2 million to Tulane University. It is a microloan program.

I believe the people at Tulane University. I have a great respect for Scott Cowen and their board. Everywhere I travel around the United States as a Senator I could not be more proud when people come up to me and comment what a great university Tulane is. I don't need somebody in Washington telling me how good this program is. I have the people I represent at home telling me.

We have $75,000 given to the downtown development district which was underwater after Katrina for the Idea Village. You know where the Idea Village was recently advertised? Maybe on the front page of Enterprise Magazine; maybe in Time magazine. This Idea Village is one of the best ideas in the whole country. You know who funded it? The program Senator BOXER is trying to reauthorize.

We have $400,000 for a startup fund for the creation and development of stimulus funds to support fledgling enterprises in the greater New Orleans region. Our seafood industry went completely—no pun intended—underwater after the BP oil spill. This agency stood up, when no one else would—BP wouldn't give them a penny, Ken Feinberg wouldn't give them any money—and gave them $350,000 to keep their head above water—the Seafood Promotion Board. That is why, in large measure, people are eating gulf coast shrimp today.

So I don't know what report Senator COBURN is looking at, but the May 19

GAO report states they have not concluded that duplication exists among programs, and plans to address these issues in their future work on overlap and duplication.

I don't know if the Senator has asked his Chamber of Commerce from Oklahoma, but I am going back to my office and I am going to call them myself, because I wish to find out. Maybe their program works differently in Oklahoma than it works in Louisiana. But when I call my people at home—and they will tell me: Senator, some of these programs aren't worth a hill of beans and you should eliminate them; these programs are too difficult. I have that all the time about some programs. Not all the time, but some programs. This isn't one of them.

The reason I am a little exercised is because this is like deja vu. I came to this floor 4 weeks ago to try to get a similar program in size—a $1.2 billion program that has worked so well. Senator Warren Rudman had created it. It is a great program. It is the country's best venture capital program for all small business. It makes money. It doesn't lose money. We got the same thing done to us by the other side of this aisle that says we don't care about small business over here because we have to talk about X, Y, and Z.

So this is the second time for one of our chairmen. I was the first, and now Senator BOXER is trying to bring to the floor a program that is not that complicated. It is a little program but it has big bang for the buck. It gets rave reviews from the people in my State—Republicans mainly but Democrats as well—and we can't seem to get this program approved until we take bills that Members want to put on this bill that have nothing to do with it and that haven't gone through committee.

I am going to be voting against Senator SNOWE's bill. But to make clear, I support Senator SNOWE's efforts to reduce regulation. My people in Louisiana are screaming about this. I have tried to communicate this to the administration in many ways, whether it is EPA or the Corps of Engineers, or the more recent one coming out of one agency that wants all my oilfield workers to put on HAZMAT suits to go to work. If you put on a HAZMAT suit in Louisiana when it is 100 degrees, you won't get to the oil rig because you will faint before you get there.

I am not unaware—I want the Senator from Oklahoma to understand—of some ridiculous rules and regulations that come flying out of some of our agencies. But the way to fix them is not to bring a bill to the floor that has not had a hearing when six different committees have jurisdiction, when Senator LIEBERMAN, who has the lead jurisdiction as chair of Homeland Security has indicated a complete willingness to take this on.

There are enough bumper sticker printing operations in America today.

There is only one U.S. Senate. I suggest we start acting like the U.S. Senate and stop acting like a bumper sticker operation.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. COBURN. Mr. President, I want to make a couple of comments. I said in my earlier comments there are some good things about the EDA. But the fact is, they are all self-reported. There is no data. There are no methods. Any time you send money to the State of Oklahoma, I guarantee you the people who are going to get the money are going to like it. But there isn't one metric, one set of metrics that measures the effectiveness of the money that has been spent through EDA in terms of job creation. Fully one-third of the dollars don't get through to completion over the history of the program.

The very idea we would defend the bureaucracy—the bureaucracy didn't help us on 9/11 because they were stovepiped and they didn't communicate. The bureaucracy failed to ensure the safety of the levees in New Orleans—this same bureaucracy that doesn't need to be controlled. The bureaucracy didn't protect us from the financial crisis of 2008 because we didn't do the oversight. The bureaucracy didn't protect the gulf from the Deepwater Horizon. We had a bureaucracy that was supposed to be in charge of that, but they didn't do their job.

The SBIR—you had my full support on SBIR; the Senator from Louisiana knows that. She had my support on that because that is one of the proven programs inside the SBA that actually has metrics on it that works. So the debate is whether we hold back the regulatory framework.

I find it ironic that you agree with us in principle but won't vote with us on this amendment because it didn't go through a committee. It is amazing.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. COBURN. I want to finish my points and then leave the floor because I have something else I have to do.

It is amazing the negative effects we all are hearing from all across the country. Every Senator is hearing how regulation is drowning out opportunity for investment that creates jobs in this country. Every program has some positive aspects to it. The question isn't whether they have positive aspects, it is what is our priority now that we are bankrupted. Where should we be spending the money so we get the best bang for the buck. How do we pull back the regulatory framework so that it is common-sense oriented rather than bureaucratic oriented? That is what Senator SNOWE is trying to do and to give some type of power to the very people who are being regulated. Because we certainly won't do the oversight. We haven't done the oversight.

It is interesting that when the GAO put out this last report on duplication, they are right, they didn't say in these particular programs. But I put out a report 9 months before that detailed the duplication in these programs, and it was published, so you can find the duplication.

The important point is we are strangling business and job development—small and medium. The big guys can take all this regulation, and they are already staffed up. The small- and medium-sized businesses can't. We have to give them a way to force common sense onto the bureaucracy. That is all this does. Everybody hears it from all of their constituents, that regulation is killing business formation and job creation. Why would we not want to put in some balance? I don't understand it.

The real problem with the regulatory agencies is us, because we won't oversight them. There was no oversight hearing on the EDA. Nobody ever asked the question: Where are the metrics? We hear all this anecdotal evidence about how great it is when we give money to the States that they can do things, but where are the numbers that show the job creation for every thousand dollars that gets spent? It is self-reported, but there is nothing that looks at it that says statistically here is the proof.

If the EDA is the best way to create jobs in this country, I am all for it. But I want to see some data that says that right now. We have job training programs, 47 of them in this country, and we spend $18 billion a year on them. We have 104 science, technology, engineering, and math programs across nine different agencies we are spending $16 billion on a year. We have no data on any of those programs anywhere, but we have it out there. We have no idea what we are doing because we won't ask the hard questions and we won't study it. Nobody would have 104 science, technology, engineering, and math programs. We have 64 programs—and 20-some of them are outside the Department of Education—to improve teacher training quality.

The reason we are in trouble is because we haven't done our job on oversight. So anyone can claim anecdotal evidence that something is good, but you should know that when we spend $1,000 of the taxpayers' money—money we don't have today because we are borrowing it from China—we ought to be certain that it is actually going to create something because our kids are paying the bill. The next generation is going to pay the bill, and they will pay that bill through a markedly lower standard of living.

With that, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, how much time remains on the Republican side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirteen minutes.

Ms. SNOWE. Thirteen minutes. Thank you, Mr. President.

I want to make a few points. It is about solving problems. That is what this is all about. It truly amazes me that we have an amendment here on regulatory reform that everybody agrees with in principle and everything else, that goes to the heart of the issues concerning the economic well-being of small business and, hence, America's well-being in these desperate times, yet we can't manage to get it together and to work on these issues.

I made a number of good-faith changes in my legislation, and I would have done more if I had heard any response from the other side to working those out. I made five major changes to the proposition back in April to respond to this. But there is no response. Then I hear about these hearings. Can somebody please tell me where it is in the rules of the Senate that every amendment has to have a hearing?

We had a major vote yesterday on interchange for the second time. That is important to small business. But even the committee of jurisdiction didn't have a hearing. So this is, again—as I describe it—the politics of obfuscation. Let's get to the heart of the matter and solve the problems for America. It isn't about who authors it and who is doing it. Let's do it. That is the point: We are not doing it. We are just sitting here talking, recessing, going home today, going to do something else, going to have recesses.

We have five committees that have jurisdiction over this issue. We are going to need a roadmap pretty soon. I don't want to go home and tell my constituents this is what happened on regulatory reform. So let me get this straight. Let me get this straight. We have five committees, there are a number of bills, time is running out, people have to leave, and we can't have enough time to debate this.

That is what I was told this morning. All of a sudden I was given a call saying: Sorry, you have to do it right now. I said: Well, is the bill over? We just started. There are a number of pending amendments that haven't even been addressed yet. Let's vote on those. This is an important issue. Let's give this the equivalency of the interchange amendment. Let's do something that is important for small business. Absolutely not.

This is about jobs at a very difficult time in America.

Let me repeat, 40 months after the start of the four deepest postwar recessions, our economic output averaged 7.6 percent. Here we are, our GDP has only increased .1 percent. Those are terrible numbers. But behind those numbers are people and human beings because it means we are not creating jobs.

We heard here today that sometimes bureaucracy is good. Well, bureaucracies, by definition, and I read, mean "excessive multiplication of, and concentration of power in administrative bureaus or administrators." Absolutely. They are unelected. We are elected. We understand the problems. Even the President—let's read this headline, "Obama to scale back regulations in an effort to spur economic growth."

What is interesting about all this—nobody is accusing the President of decimating the environment or workplace or health care. Understanding that, 6 days after I was denied a vote on this very amendment where I made five different adjustments to respond to the other side, you have the President's Economic Competitiveness Council coming out with four major priorities, one of which is a need to improve the regulatory process because there are decades of overlapping and uncoordinated regulations.

Even by the administration's estimate, this White House's own estimate, that regulations last decade cost anywhere from $44 to $62 billion, last year's alone with a $26 billion. This is a serious issue.

Can we work it out? Can we do it? Do we have the capacity to work on issues anymore, thoroughly and deliberately? It has been almost 2 months and we have not gotten any further. We haven't even had a hearing. Somewhere, somebody has bills. Great. Bring them up. Let's debate them. Let's compare them. Let's do something. Let's do something for small business. They desperately need it. Now I will be glad to yield to the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. President, I would like in this context to focus on the economic policy, to look at where we are right now, the state of the economic union and the State of Illinois.

If we look at basic numbers we see we will take in about $2.1 trillion in tax revenue, but our government is currently projected to spend $3.4 trillion in tax revenue, yielding a deficit of approximately $1.3 trillion. We will have to borrow from the American people, from China, and other foreign powers.

Total unfunded liabilities of the Federal Government are $61 trillion, yielding a debt of $196,000 per American, currently. When we look at economic growth and the way to expand the available pie for the United States, our economy last year grew at a 2.8-percent rate. China, on the other hand, grew at 10.3 percent, and Libya—currently under attack by NATO—grew at 4.2 percent. In fact, quiz question: Which economy grew more last year, the United States or Iran? The answer: The Iranian economy grew at a faster rate than the United States.

The situation probably is even more bleak in the State of Illinois. For the State of Illinois, we are going to take in about $27 billion in revenue, spending $33 billion, for a $5.8 billion gap. This is for a State whose credit rating is deteriorating quite rapidly, having not funded its pensions to a greater degree than almost any other State, the unfunded liability of the State of Illinois of $62 billion for a per-citizen debt on top of the Federal debt of $4,800.

When we look at our State and its economic growth, the State of Illinois is at just 1.9 percent growth. Other States, Wisconsin, even with its highly controversial Governor now rapidly improving its business climate at 2.5 percent; the State rated No. 1 for creating jobs in America, 2.8 percent, and the State that is on fire, the State of Indiana at 4.6 percent. This is clearly a sign that things are going well in Indiana, things are going well in China, things are even going better in Libya than in the United States, and it shows that we need to change course for our country economically, to back the amendment of the Senator that she has here, and to make sure we can lay out better, more pro-productive policies like the small business bill of rights that represents 10 new policies to accelerate economic growth.

On behalf of that entity, which represents half of all the jobs in the United States, and my own State—these are private sector jobs. They are sustainable. They do not depend on a failed stimulus which is now running out of gas—given the records, I think we can see it is clear we ought to go back to economic fundamentals to correct the system and look clearly at the state of economics where we are now.

With that, I yield to the Senator from Maine and thank her for the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from Maine.

Ms. SNOWE. I now yield to the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. BROWN.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, how much time is remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine has 4 minutes, and the remaining time for the Democratic side is 35 minutes.

The Senator from Maine.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for additional time on the bill, since the vote is not going to occur until 2:15, and that time be equally divided.

Ms. LANDRIEU. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The Senator from Maine.

Ms. SNOWE. I yield the remainder of the time to Senator BROWN. It is regrettable, since this is an important issue, that we couldn't have more time on this key issue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BROWN of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I want to begin by expressing my support for what Senator SNOWE has been doing and for the EDA

Reauthorization Act. I applaud the committee for producing a good, comprehensive bill. These EDA grant programs provide vital resources, not only for Massachusetts economic development and its businesses, but also other States throughout the country to help communities get back on their feet in this tough economic climate. For that reason, the reauthorization of this bill is incredibly important, and I encourage that it be done.

I rise to speak about two amendments to this bill that affect the stability of our small businesses. Senator SNOWE and Senator COBURN's FREEDOM Act, to reform the small business regulatory system, is one that I have consistently supported because it is a commonsense solution. When I am traveling around my State, no matter where I go and no matter with whom I speak, from CEOs all the way down to the worker who is just doing the everyday work, one thing I hear over and over is a plea to get rid of the one-size-fits-all Federal regulations that are limiting businesses.

Businesses need certainty and stability in order to create an economic climate for jobs not only to be created but to be retained, not only in Massachusetts but throughout the country.

This amendment would require that Federal agencies conduct comprehensive analysis on the potential impact of regulations on small businesses. It has the support of the NFIB and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. Simply put, burdensome regulations are hurting our small businesses and job creators and are preventing them from growing and hiring. It is a shame this amendment got caught up in partisan volleying in the SBIR reauthorization. I am happy to have an opportunity to speak about it today.

I also want to turn the Senate's attention to amendment No. 405 to repeal the 3 percent withholding tax, a malignant and business-threatening provision. It is based on S. 164, the Withholding Tax Relief Act, which enjoys bipartisan support and is critically needed now. Senator SNOWE is a cosponsor, as well as 14 of my colleagues.

We need to repeal once and for all this onerous and costly unfunded mandate. This is a jobs amendment, plain and simple. It would repeal a part of our Tax Code that promises to kill jobs.

As you know, Mr. President, we have had many comments about how this bill would, in fact, cost potentially as high as $75 billion to actually implement. The moneys received back to the Federal Government would be about $8 billion over that same period. It is absurd. Any program that costs more to implement than it brings in revenues should be repealed immediately.

Two months ago I received a letter from the Massachusetts State secretary of finance, Jay Gonzalez, warning Congress of the inevitable threat to the ability of small businesses to survive in this economic climate if we allow the continuation of this stealth tax.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Massachusetts. I encourage colleagues to also adopt that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, the Senator from California was on the Senate floor this morning, Mrs. BOXER, advocating passage of this bill and urging colleagues to vote against the Snowe amendment. I am here to support that position.

I would like to respond briefly to Senator COBURN's last couple of statements about where the bureaucracy failed. He didn't have to remind me, of course, the bureaucracy failed to respond to Katrina and Rita, the largest disasters by far in the history of the country. But we have spent 6 years fixing that bureaucracy, not printing bumper stickers for reelection campaigns. You know what. It has worked because our efforts to fix the bureaucracy have helped the people of Missouri and Arkansas and Tennessee and Montana and Indiana who are currently experiencing terrible disasters as we speak.

The bureaucracy that showed up at the Superdome is a lot better today in many ways—it is better today than the bureaucracy that showed up at the Superdome. That is because we had hundreds of hours of committee meetings, where this hard work is done, to bring significant and important bills and changes that take debate, not on the Senate floor but take debate in the work of the committee. When you are working on major pieces of legislation that have major impacts, that is where it is done.

Besides the FREEDOM Act that is on the floor today, there is the Regulatory Responsibility For Our Economy Act, sponsored by Senator ROBERTS with 46 cosponsors. I am assuming—I don't have the list, but I am assuming they are Democratic and Republican cosponsors. That is a major regulatory relief bill.

There is a bill by Senator COLLINS called the CURB Act, Clearing Unnecessary Regulatory Burdens. The CURB Act has two cosponsors.

Then there is a smaller bill by Senator PORTMAN that has no cosponsors, but he is the lead sponsor. That looks to me like it is a smaller bill and has limited scope but nonetheless on regulatory reform.

There could be 12 other bills filed in the Senate—I don't know—and hundreds of other bills filed in the House. Forget the House bills. When bills like this are filed in the Senate, the usual route and the most effective route is to go through the committee of jurisdiction. You can understand in this topic, which is so broad—regulatory reform—it is regulatory reform in the Department of Commerce and regulatory reform in the Department of EPW, Environmental and Public Works, regulatory reform for the Department of Homeland Security, regulatory reform in the Department of Defense. There are many committees of jurisdiction.

What everyone has agreed to is to have the hearing in the Homeland Security Committee, which has broad jurisdiction, and get the work done. Senator LIEBERMAN is not here today because he is on Jewish holiday. He has said time and time again he will have this hearing in the committee and that is the appropriate place so we can come forward with a bill on regulatory relief.

There are a couple of reasons why this particular approach is flawed. I would like to read the comments from the administration. I would like to read three specific reasons why this particular FREEDOM Act is not in the proper position it should be. But the way to fix it is not debating on the floor of the Senate on a bill that is not really germane to the bill that we are debating, that we are trying to pass. It is to have this kind of debate in committee so we can work out these details. Senator SNOWE has shown herself to be in the past, and still today, willing to work in a very cooperative manner, and the place to do this is in committee.

No. 1: The bill as currently drafted would allow judicial review before the completion of rulemaking. That provision in the Freedom Act would undermine regulatory certainty, making it harder for businesses—not easier, harder—

for businesses to plan for the future and compete in the marketplace. It would also invite excessively costly and unwieldy litigation.

We don't want to have more lawsuits. We want to have less lawsuits. That is one of the problems small businesses are facing today—lawsuit after lawsuit after lawsuit. The last thing we want to do is encourage more of them. Many people have reviewed the technical writing of the bill in its current form and believe it will result in more lawsuits, not less. We wish to fix that in committee.

The amendment would make it harder, not easier, to see the actual cost of regulation, by expanding the Regulatory Flexibilities Act definition to include indirect effects.

I can understand why she wants to do it, but in interpreting the language as the Senator has written it, this legislation would likely undermine any reliable and meaningful economic analysis of regulation, thereby distracting the agencies from focusing on what the actual impacts of the rules would be.

Finally, the amendment inappropriately links regulatory decisions to budget cuts. Decisions about regulation should be based on sound economic science and not on the threat of budget cuts.

This is a preliminary review of some of the current problems.

Senator SNOWE is right, I guess. We could stay on the floor for the next 2 or 3 or 4 weeks and the other Senators who are not on the floor could agree to come and debate their bills on the floor, which is highly unusual. But why not just go to the Homeland Security Committee, have all of the sponsors of these major pieces of legislation present their bills and have that committee work through these technical difficulties? Because it is an important issue. Many of us support regulatory reform. We know there are some burdens, particularly on small business. We want to get it fixed, so let's fix it instead of continuing to rail on this subject on every bill that comes before the Senate, whether or not it has anything to do with regulatory reform.

One thing I wish to point out to the Senator, and I point this out with the greatest respect, about 6 months ago or longer now, we were both on the floor trying to pass the small business jobs act, a very significant bill that would actually help to bolster this economy and help provide literally billions of dollars of loans to small businesses that couldn't get them anywhere. Their credit card companies had raised the rates so high or their banks had shut down their lines of credit. Senator SNOWE and I worked together to bring a bill to the floor—and we did, and passed it, unfortunately, without the support of the other side of the aisle. But in that debate, the Senator from Maine said—because I included in that bill, with a 60-vote margin—I got Senator Voinovich and Senator LeMieux to vote for the small business lending fund, which was a little unusual. She said:

... not included in the overall. First and foremost, it has not had a single hearing with respect to this issue, and in my view, it certainly does resurrect the controversial TARP program ... and because it hasn't had a hearing, this should not pass.

Yet, within a year, she is back arguing against that argument—that her bill, which hasn't had any hearing in the committee—should pass.

So there is some inconsistency here. I say this with the greatest respect to the Senator from Maine. But if we want to be serious about regulatory reform, we have to have this debate in the committee of jurisdiction, which is right now Homeland Security, and then have the other chairmen of the committees try to cooperate with that committee and bring something to the floor. We will be happy, many of us, to vote for it. But doing this in this way is not helpful. It is not going to fix the problem. It is only going to make the burden on small business worse. We have to move past it.

I wish to refer my colleagues to the floor remarks Senator SNOWE made on July 22, 2010.

Can these be fixed? Yes. But this is not the place, on the Senate floor, when there are many other bills as well. Senator SNOWE could remain the main sponsor because she has put in the most work. She has been a tireless advocate. She should get tremendous praise for bringing forth this issue and keeping the fires burning and pushing the Senate to this end, and that would be terrific. Many of us would join that effort. But this is not the bill to do it on. This is not the place to do it. I would suggest that, again, taking this to the committee of jurisdiction, working it out, bringing the administration forward so we can actually make some real progress on curbing regulatory overreach by the Federal Government would be welcomed by all.

I see the Senator from Vermont is here on the floor. I am assuming he wants to talk.

How much time do we have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is 24 minutes remaining.

Ms. LANDRIEU. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. SANDERS. I ask unanimous consent that the final 10 minutes be equally divided and controlled between Senators SNOWE and BOXER, with Senator BOXER controlling the final 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President, I yield myself 10 minutes of majority time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE DEFICIT

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President, there are a number of huge issues facing our country. Our middle class is collapsing. Poverty is increasing. We are in two wars. We are concerned about global warming, the quality of our education, and massive unemployment. So this country today has its share of serious problems we have to address.

Right now, a whole lot of attention, not inappropriately, is on our very large deficit and a $14 trillion-plus national debt. This is an issue which is perhaps going to come to a head over the next few months as it becomes tied to whether we raise the debt ceiling. I wish to say a few words on this issue.

No. 1, when we talk about deficit reduction, it is important for us to understand how we got to where we are today. How did it happen? How do we have a $1.5 trillion deficit this year, and a $14 trillion-plus national debt? Let's remember that not so many years ago, at the end of President Clinton's tenure, this country had a significant budget surplus and the expectation was that surplus was going to grow in the years to come.

But then a number of things happened during the Bush years. No. 1, we became engaged in two wars. No. 2, we passed a Medicare Part D prescription drug program. No. 3, we bailed out Wall Street. And No. 4, we gave huge tax breaks to the wealthiest people in this country. Then, as a result of the Wall Street-caused recession, revenue dropped, and the result was that we now have a very high deficit and a very large national debt. But it is important to remember how we got to where we are today.

It is also important when we talk about deficit reduction to take a look at American society today in order to determine what is a fair way—a fair way—to address deficit reduction. When we look at American society today, the trends are very clear. The middle class is, in many ways, disappearing as a result of stagnant or, in fact, lowered wages for millions and millions of American workers. Median family income over the last 10 years has gone down by about $2,500. The middle class is hurting. Many millions of Americans, in fact, have left the middle class and entered the ranks of the poor. Poverty is increasing. But at the same time as the middle class is shrinking and poverty is increasing, there is another reality we cannot ignore—or I am afraid many of my colleagues choose to ignore it—and that is that the people on top are doing phenomenally well. Over a recent 25-year period, 80 percent of all new income went to the top 1 percent. The top 1 percent now earns more income than the bottom 50 percent. When we talk about distribution of wealth, we have the top 400 Americans—the 400 wealthiest Americans—owning more wealth than the bottom 150 million Americans.

That gap between the very rich and everybody else is growing wider. It is important to discuss that issue about what is happening to the middle class, to lower income people, and the growing gap between the wealthy and everybody else when we address the issue of deficit reduction.

My Republican colleagues in the House came up with an idea that I think most people almost can't even believe they would pass; it seems so incomprehensible. At a time when the middle class is hurting and things are getting worse as a result of a recession, our Republican colleagues say, Well, what we want to do is move toward deficit reduction by making savage cuts in Medicaid, in education, in infrastructure, in nutrition, in virtually every program that low- and moderate-income Americans depend upon. Furthermore, what we want to do in the House—what they have done—is to end Medicare as we know it, convert it into a voucher program, giving seniors a check for $8,000 and have them go out and get a plan from a private insurance company which clearly will be totally inadequate for most seniors and end up raising their out-of-pocket expenses.

Then when it comes to the wealthiest people who are doing phenomenally well, not only do our Republican colleagues not ask the wealthiest people or the largest corporations to pay one nickel more in taxes to help us with deficit reduction, they come up with this brilliant idea that we are going to give $1 trillion in tax breaks over a 10-year period to the wealthiest people in America. So the rich are getting richer, and they get tax breaks. The middle class is shrinking, and what they are asked to do is to assume huge cuts in programming which will impact them very strongly.

This is clearly the Robin Hood proposal in reverse. We are taking from working families who are hurting and giving it to the wealthiest people who are doing phenomenally well. The Republican plan is clearly absurd, and I think most Americans understand that.

The question is, What will the President do? What will the Democrats do? It is my very strong hope Democrats will be strong on this issue. The President has to be strong on this issue. The President has to go out to the American people and win the support that is there for a deficit reduction package of shared sacrifice. We need to say very clearly to the American people: No, we are not going to move toward deficit reduction solely on the backs of the most vulnerable people in this country. No, we are not going to decimate Medicare so elderly people will not be able to get the health care they need when they are old and sick. No, we are not going to throw millions and millions of people off of Medicaid and endanger families who have their parents in nursing homes. We must have shared sacrifice. The wealthy and large corporations must be involved and contribute toward deficit reduction.

There is a lot of responsibility on the President, but let me make it very clear. I, personally, as a member of the Budget Committee and as a Senator from Vermont, will not be supporting any package that does not call for shared sacrifice.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President I have supported regulatory reform since before my election to the Senate in 1978, to make regulations more sensible and efficient while protecting the public's health and well-being. The Snowe regulatory reform amendment would amend the Regulatory Flexibility Act, RFA, to require that Federal agencies consider all potential direct and "indirect economic impacts" of proposed regulations. I will vote against this amendment because it is so broad and undefined. Also, the Snowe amendment would give standing to seek judicial review and seek injunction of a rule-making while the rule is still in its draft form and still receiving public comment. I am concerned that such a change could paralyze the regulatory process, not reform it.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, as cosponsor of the Freedom Act, I would like to add my voice to those who have spoken in its support.

But first I would like to thank Senator SNOWE for her dedication and hard work in support of the many small business owners across her state and across the country who would benefit from this legislation.

As we all know, America's job creators are suffocating under regulations and redtape.

The administration doesn't seem to realize that all its interference has a human cost.

Businesses want to create jobs and help communities recover, but they can't.

Whether it is new financial requirements, health care mandates, energy mandates, onerous new fees, burdensome tax filing requirements, or threats of higher taxes, businesses today are faced with so many new rules and requirements from Washington that they can hardly see straight.

The Freedom Act says enough is enough.

This regulatory reform amendment would help give small businesses much-needed relief from the Federal government and its one-size-fits-all approach.

Specifically, it would modernize the Regulatory Flexibility Act to require that from now on, Federal agencies conduct a comprehensive and careful analysis of the potential impacts—both direct and indirect—of regulations on small businesses. It would make sure that the voices of small business owners are heard in government agencies that frankly don't seem to be listening to them.

This amendment has broad support from the small business community.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the National Federation of Independent Businesses have issued strong letters of support.

At a time when nearly 14 million Americans are looking for work, this is exactly the kind of legislation that would help America's job creators.

When I ask business owners what they want us to do to help them create jobs, they usually have a simple five-word response: get out of the way. That is what we are doing with this legislation.

And the only people who could possibly oppose it are those who think the needs of bureaucrats in Washington are more important than the needs of job creators everywhere else.

I thank Senator SNOWE and Senator COBURN for their strong advocacy on behalf of small businesses.

I intend to vote for this important amendment. I urge my colleagues to do the same.

AMENDMENT NO. 390

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, we are working on a bill that is a jobs bill, plain and simple. It does not have any fancy parts to it. It is a reauthorization of a program that was set up in 1965. The purpose was very clear: to go into areas in our States where the communities are hurting for jobs, where the communities are hurting for business. It works in a way that every $1 we put into the program attracts $7 of private investment.

I will show you the job creation on some of these charts that we see. At the $500 million funding level that is authorized in the bill, the EDA is projected to create up to 200,000 jobs a year and over the life of the bill up to 1 million jobs. It is done at a very low cost per job. Mr. President, $3,000 per job is what it costs the Federal taxpayers because of all the leverage that comes in as cities join in, counties join in, and so on.

I have a list of projects we can talk about today. I have talked about a number of projects that have been funded through the EDA over the course of this debate in the last few days. I have talked about them in California and Minnesota and I wish to add just a couple other recent projects from across the country.

In California, EDA awarded $3 million to the Inland Valley Development Agency in a county that is going through some tough times, San Bernardino, to support the renovation of an existing building at the former Norton Air Force Base. This project is going to help the conversion of that base into a commercial and light industrial area, attracting new companies that are interested in locating there.

This investment, funded by the Department of Defense Office of Economic Adjustment and administered by EDA, is part of a $3.6 million project that will create 100 jobs and generate $20 million in private investment.

So here you have a $3 million investment that is going to be leveraged to $20 million. It is pretty extraordinary, and this is the bill we are talking about.

In Florida, the EDA awarded nearly $4 million to construct a new wastewater system for western Palm Beach County. The region suffered flooding in 2008 from Tropical Storms Hanna and Fay, which caused environmental damage. It closed local businesses.

The construction is going to support three city industrial parks and a general aviation airport, as well as a major inland port and intermodal center that are being developed. That investment is part of a $5.3 million project that will create 240 jobs, save 270 jobs, and generate $48 million in private investment.

So a $4 million investment attracting $48 million in private investment.

In Idaho, we have a very good example of a $4.4 million grant to the College of Southern Idaho in Twin Falls to fund the construction of the Applied Technology and Innovation Center. This new LEED-certified facility will help the college meet the region's needs for a higher skilled workforce. They will learn to operate computer-driven manufacturing equipment, maintain alternative energy systems, and to use environmentally sound construction processes for these green buildings. This investment is part of a $6.9 million project that will create 486 jobs.

In Indiana, EDA provided $2.4 million; in Kansas, $1.4 million to the city of Hutchinson. I will go on with this in my remaining time that I will have later.

But the point is, this is a jobs bill, and it is being hijacked by a slew of amendments, and I see the handwriting on the wall. I have been here long enough to know what is going on. There is no cooperation. We have everything from the Snowe amendment to endangered species, dealing with a chicken that somebody wants to take off the endangered species list. I mean, I was not born yesterday, as you can tell. I know what is happening. This is a dance. It is a slow dance. It, unfortunately, signals to me maybe the slow death of this bill. I think that is very sad, when you have a bill that has been supported by Republican Presidents, Democratic Presidents over the years, and the last vote on this floor was unanimous, in 2004—by unanimous consent—and George W. Bush signed it. I have fought George W. Bush in a number of areas. He and I saw eye to eye on this one. This is not controversial.

I hope we can dispose of this amendment. I will have more to say on the amendment in a couple minutes.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SANDERS). Under the previous order, the Senator from Maine has the next 5 minutes.

The Senator from Maine.

Ms. SNOWE. Thank you, Mr. President.

I would urge my colleagues to support this amendment. It is about jobs. It is about small businesses. It is about the well-being of American families. Just remember this: the stark numbers. The unemployment rate is at 9.1 percent; the average over the last 2½ years, 9.4 percent. For 23 out of the last 28 months, unemployment has been at 9 percent or higher. Housing prices are at the lowest level since mid-2002. This is the longest recession since modern record-keeping.

These are stark, grim numbers. What I am hearing here today is a bureaucratic process and response, exactly what we are trying to attack. This is not indiscriminate, as some have described on the other side of the aisle about this regulatory reform measure. It is very consistent.

I know the Senator from Louisiana was talking about several of the issues. I would like to go through them.

First of all, she mentioned about the concerns of the judicial review. But this provision is nearly identical to one that she and Senator CARDIN introduced in their own legislation in the 111th Congress.

The Senator also was concerned with our tying budget cuts to the SBA to this amendment as a way of paying for some of the costs of it. But, to avoid controversy, we specifically selected as offsets, cuts in the SBA that had been proposed by the Agency's Inspector General, and in the President's very own budget.

The Senator from Louisiana talked about the problems associated with considering indirect economic effects on small businesses when issuing rules. But, for that provision we used the exact same language suggested by the President's chief small business regulatory appointee, the chief advocate at the Small Business Administration.

So this is not indiscriminate and some are mischaracterizing the provisions in this legislation because they have not bothered to read the amendment. I made a number of changes in order to address the concerns on the other side. If there were further concerns, that we could work through, I would have addressed those as well. So I think we better make sure we get our facts straight because it is about small businesses and jobs. That is what it is about. We are just stalling, deferring, delaying.

We heard concerns that we did not have a hearing on my specific amendment. Well, the Senate did not hold a hearing on it since I was denied a vote on it on May 4. And the President came out a few days later and said regulatory reform was one of the top four issues for American economic growth and job creation.

Then we hear a bureaucratic conversation about hearings and multiple jurisdictions and committees and committees. I have to say, I have never known amendments to require hearings before they are considered on the floor. In fact, I believe the Senator from California had 19 amendments in the last Congress—19 amendments—8 of which were accepted and none had hearings. Yesterday we had a major amendment on interchange. We did not have a hearing on that major issue.

I am just making a point. This is just bringing up issues to obfuscate and obscure. I do not know exactly what the concern is, to be honest with you. If there are some issues to address, then let's address them. But to just postpone in conversation, debating—the talk goes nowhere. There are no hearings. There is nothing.

The President scaled back regulations, as I said earlier in an effort to spur economic growth, including some in the Environmental Protection Agency. He did not undercut the Endangered Species Act. Nobody is accusing him of scaling back every environmental law that has ever been on the books.

I think we ought to get away from extreme mischaracterizations, inaccuracies and untruths. Let's talk about the facts. Let's read the bill. Let's know what we are talking about and get our facts straight. This goes to the heart of economic growth. It goes to jobs.

It goes to the American people's well-being.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, in my 5 minutes, here is what I wish to say: Yes, I have offered many amendments on this floor, as have all my colleagues. But if I see an amendment and colleagues see an amendment that could hurt, we believe, the health of people, I am going to say, yes, let's have a hearing.

I wish to show you a picture of a child with asthma. She is beautiful. This is not a pretty picture.

I will show you another picture of a little boy with asthma. This is also a beautiful child and a terrible picture.

Let me tell you, we are trying to protect these children. We are trying to protect our families. We are trying to stop premature deaths. How do we do it? Yes, we have regulations. Have they worked? You bet they have. That is why I say, if you are going to change them, yes, I hope we would look at—you know, everybody is motivated in the right direction. Jobs? Absolutely. But I have to tell you, when you are sick, you cannot go to work. If a breadwinner dies prematurely, the family is destitute.

Let me show you just one act that would be impacted by this Snowe amendment and why I think we ought to have an alternative amendment. If you look at the study that was required by Congress, you find out that in just 2010 alone, the Clean Air Act prevented 160,000 cases of premature death; if you look at 2010 alone, 1.7 million fewer asthma attacks; if you look at acute heart attacks prevented, 130,000.

What happens in the Snowe amendment: All you are going to look at is the economic benefits, not the health benefits. It flies in the face of common sense and our moral responsibility.

Here is what I see wrong with this amendment: It hurts protection for families and communities. It stops or delays important protections for those people. It ignores public health and safety benefits. It only looks at the benefits of economics. Yes, we have to do that. But we also need a balanced approach. As I said, if someone is sick and they cannot go to work, they cannot keep a job.

It would also create additional, expensive litigation. The amendment allows polluters to sue Federal agencies during the public comment period on a proposed Federal safeguard that allows one polluter to hold up an important, let's say, drinking water or clean air protection standard for months, maybe years.

So I urge a "no" vote on this amendment. Let's get together and come up with something that balances economic growth with the protection of the health of our families.

I yield the floor and hope we would now go to a vote under the previous order.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

All time is yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 390.

The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. DURBIN. I announce that the Senator from Vermont (Mr. LEAHY) is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 53, nays 46, as follows:

NOT VOTING—1

Leahy

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 53, the nays are 46. Under the previous order requiring 60 votes for the adoption of the amendment, the amendment is rejected.

Under the previous order, the motion to reconsider is considered made and laid upon the table.

The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, Senator MCCONNELL and I discussed what we should do the rest of the day. We have a number of Senators who have come to both of us wanting to offer amendments. We think we need to have people offer amendments so that we can find the universe of amendments and work through them and come up with a reasonable way to proceed forward.

Having said that, I want people to offer amendments on my side, and I think Senator MCCONNELL feels the same way on his side. We will make a determination later today as to how we will proceed on this next week. I think it would be fruitless at this stage to have a bunch of votes—well, we need consent to do it, so I don't think there will be any more votes this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

The Senator from Texas [Mrs. HUTCHISON], for herself, Mr. BARRASSO, Mr. BURR, Mr. INHOFE, Mr. PORTMAN, Mr. RISCH, and Mr. HATCH, proposes an amendment numbered 423.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows.

(Purpose: To delay the implementation of the health reform law in the United States until there is final resolution in pending lawsuits)

On page __, between lines __ and __, insert the following:

SEC. ____ . EFFECTIVE DATE OF PPACA.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the provisions of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (Public Law 111-148) and the Health Care and Education Reconciliation Act of 2010 (Public Law 111-152), including the amendments made by such Acts, that are not in effect on the date of enactment of this Act shall not be in effect until the date on which final judgment is entered in all cases challenging the constitutionality of the requirement to maintain minimum essential coverage under section 5000A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 that are pending before a Federal court on the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) PROMULGATION OF REGULATIONS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Federal Government shall not promulgate regulations under the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (Public Law 111-148) or the Health Care and Education Reconciliation Act of 2010 (Public Law 111-152), including the amendments made by such Acts, or otherwise prepare to implement such Acts (or amendments made by such Acts), until the date on which final judgment is entered in all cases challenging the constitutionality of the requirement to maintain minimum essential coverage under section 5000A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 that are pending before a Federal court on the date of enactment of this Act.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, this amendment, I hope, will save our businesses and our States the millions of dollars they are now spending to implement the health care reform bill, which is in the courts.

Yesterday, the court in Atlanta—the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals—heard arguments from the government and the State about whether the Florida District Court ruling that the health care law is null and void because it is unconstitutional should be upheld. Since we are in this court fight and this will surely go to the Supreme Court—there is no doubt that either side that loses is going to appeal—my amendment would put a moratorium on the implementation of the law. So it would save the Federal Government and the taxpayers who are paying for it, and it would save the State governments that are trying to implement a law that may be unconstitutional and cost millions of dollars to adjust their system and the businesses across our country that are trying desperately to determine if they are going to be able to even offer health insurance or if they want to offer health insurance to their employees anymore.

We are in a time when there are unprecedented regulatory burdens on our businesses. We are facing a $14 trillion national debt in this country—trillion. We are looking at having to raise that debt limit if we don't severely cut spending and get our house in order.

In the past 2 years alone, this Federal Government has borrowed an additional $3.2 trillion. Washington passed a health care reform bill that cost nearly $2.6 trillion and a stimulus bill that cost $821 billion, which has only given us higher unemployment since the stimulus bill passed. The U.S. economy is frozen, job creators are facing new levels of taxes, they are looking at this health insurance cost going up and, on top of that, new regulations.

Heavyhanded government regulation is not what we need right now. The health care reform bill is a perfect example of government regulations hamstringing our businesses with more redtape and bureaucracy. It has been over a year since that bill was passed, and businesses are still facing unprecedented premium increases—as high as 20 percent. Employers are finding their policies being canceled because insurers are closing up shop due to new Federal regulations. Health care reform is requiring individuals and businesses to buy government-approved health care or they pay hefty fines. Health reform has discouraged businesses from hiring, because if you go over 50 employees, new Federal regulations that will be imposed on you are going to be costly.

A new study out this week confirms that health reform will not let you keep your health plan, as promised. This report found that when businesses fully understand all the new regulations required under health reform, as many as half of them say they will definitely or probably stop offering health insurance benefits to their employees. That would leave as many as 78 million Americans on their own to find health insurance for themselves and their families.

That is why I have filed amendment No. 423—to delay further implementation of health reform until the courts determine whether it is constitutional. My amendment would pause further implementation of this law so we don't spend millions more taxpayer dollars at the Federal and State levels, costing small businesses as well, when it could be struck down.

Twenty-six States have joined together to sue the Federal Government, and a Florida district court found in favor of these 26 States, saying Congress had overstepped and overreached its authority and that mandating individuals to purchase health insurance was unconstitutional. The 11th Circuit Court, as I said earlier, is considering this case as we speak and we should not burden any further businesses, States and taxpayers who support the Federal Government until we know if this law is constitutional. Let us put in place a moratorium, a pause, so that no one gets penalized for not continuing the implementation process. That is what my amendment would do. Let's clarify, and then, if the law is constitutional, there is plenty of time to go forward. But if it isn't, as I hope is the case, we will be able to start all over. We would make health care more available and more affordable in this country without cutting Medicare, overburdening our taxpayers and businesses, and maybe even get our economy going and stop this rising unemployment we are seeing in our country right now. Nine percent unemployment is too high, and health care reform is a part of the problem that is causing it.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

AMENDMENTS NOS. 417 AND 418 EN BLOC

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside, and that I be allowed to call up amendments Nos. 417 and 418 en bloc.

“(2) from the alternatives described under paragraph (1), select the least costly or least burdensome alternative that achieves the objectives of the statute.”.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. President, today we are considering a bill intended to promote economic development, and I think it is only appropriate we also talk about regulations, because, unfortunately, regulatory mandates are stifling economic growth today and keeping us from creating the jobs we so badly need.

I hear it all over my State, and I am sure my colleagues do as well. Companies are saying they want to expand. They say: We have a good idea, we have a business plan that works, but we are deterred by the cost of complying with regulations. It is the redtape and also the uncertainty. It is not just the bureaucracy and redtape, it is the uncertainty about future regulations.

This regulatory burden on employers, by the way, is growing, and it is already a mess. There is a recent study commissioned by the Small Business Administration and the Obama administration which estimates the annual toll now of Federal regulations on the American economy is $1.75 trillion. That is more than the IRS collects in income taxes in a year. With the unemployment rate now at 9.1 percent, we can’t continue to ask businesses to spend more on redtape. Instead, we want them to invest in job creation.

The current administration, unfortunately, I believe, is moving in the wrong direction on this score. We have seen a sharp increase over the past couple of years in new “major” or “economically significant” rules. These are regulations that impose a cost on the economy of $100 million or more.

According to the Office of Management and Budget, the Obama administration has been regulating at a pace of 84 of these new “major” or “economically significant” rules—costing the economy over $100 million—per year, including rules issued by independent agencies. By the way, that is about a 50-percent increase over the regulatory output during the Clinton administration, which was about 56 major rules per year.

I was very encouraged by the words of President Obama as he introduced his January Executive order on improving regulation and regulatory review, but now we need action. We need to be sure the agencies are actually taking the measures necessary to provide regulatory relief for job creators and reducing this drag on our economy.

One commonsense step we can take now is to strengthen a piece of legislation that is already in place. It is called the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act. It was passed by Congress and signed into law by President Clinton in 1995. It was bipartisan legislation. I was one of the authors of this legislation in the House of Representatives. UMRA, as it is called—Unfunded Mandates Reform Act—was a bipartisan effort basically to say that regulators had to evaluate a rule’s cost and find less costly alternatives before adopting one of these so-called “major” rules.

The two amendments I am offering today would improve UMRA in a way that is entirely consistent with the principles President Obama himself laid out in his January Executive order on regulatory review. The first amendment, 418, would require agencies specifically to assess the potential effects of new regulations on job creation and to consider market-based and non-governmental alternatives to the regulation. It would also broaden the scope of UMRA to require cost-benefit analysis of rules that impose direct or indirect economic costs of $100 million or more. It would require agencies to adopt the least costly or least burdensome regulatory option that achieves the policy goal set out by this Congress. A commonsense idea.

The second amendment, 417, would extend UMRA to independent agencies. In 1995, it was imposed upon the executive agencies but not on independent agencies. Those independent agencies have grown, and so have their regulations. This would be an agency such as the SEC—the Securities and Exchange Commission—or the CFTC or even the new Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, which has gotten a lot of attention here in the Senate in the debate over the Dodd-Frank Act. Right now they are exempted from the cost-benefit rules that govern all these other Federal agencies.

Major rules issued by what is called the “headless fourth branch” of government are not even reviewed for cost-benefit justification by OIRA, which is the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs at OMB which reviews regulations from all the other agencies.

Based on information from the GAO, it now appears that between 1996 and this year independent agencies issued nearly 200 regulations that had an impact of $100 million or more on the economy. So again, over 200 regulations were not subject to review under UMRA because they were from independent agencies. There is a clear need to extend UMRA to these independent agencies. Closing this loophole is a sensible reform.

By the way, this reform was endorsed by the President’s own regulatory czar, Professor Cass Sunstein, who wrote in a 2002 law review article that it only made sense to require independent agencies to undertake the same cost-benefit analysis that we require of executive agencies.

No major regulation, whatever its source, should be imposed on American employees or on State and local governments without serious consideration of what the costs are, what the benefits are, and whether there is available a less burdensome alternative. That is what these amendments are all about. Both would move us further toward that goal, and I urge my colleagues to support them both.

Madam President, I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. McCASKILL). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MERKLEY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 428

Mr. MERKLEY. Madam President, I rise to speak to amendment No. 428 on the regulation of mortgage servicing. We spend a lot of time in Washington talking about many topics but often not getting to the issue most important to American citizens; that is, getting them back to work, creating jobs. Creating jobs should be the paramount concern of every person in this town. We are not going to get job growth going again until we deal with the housing crisis that started this recession and that is blocking our recovery.

Three years ago, our economy was nearly destroyed by a combination of high-risk, high-cost subprime mortgages and reckless bets on Wall Street. Since then we fixed many of those problems in subprime mortgages. We have ended three of the key predatory practices. One of those was undocumented loans, otherwise known, commonly, as "liar loans," where the information was fictionalized.

Then we had the prepayment penalty. It was a steel trap in which a mortgage document would lock people into a loan with an exploding interest rate and would prevent them from being able to get out of that loan. We knew from a Wall Street Journal study that 60 percent of the families in these predatory loans with the steel trap prepayment penalties qualified for regular, ordinary, fully amortizing 30-year prime loans.

That leads us to the third point, which was the undisclosed bonuses, otherwise known as steering payments or kickbacks, that were paid to mortgage originators when they steered families from the prime loan with a fair interest rate and 30-year amortization into the predatory subprime loan with an exploding interest rate and a steel trap prepayment penalty.

It is good that we ended those practices for the future. But for the families who have been caught up in the flood of foreclosures, it is as though we rebuilt the levees but we have not done anything to take away the water that is still flooding their living rooms.

Just last week, new reports, the Case-Shiller Index, showed that home prices have reached their lowest level since 2002. If home prices are that low, it is also hard to build new homes. Indeed, a recent report said the number of new homes being built each month had reached the lowest level since 1965—that is almost 50 years ago. Simply, our economy is not going to recover until our housing market recovers. A home is the single biggest investment that most families make, and it is the key to their financial success. It is often the key to happiness in retirement.

In addition to the impact on millions of families—and we are looking at the possibility of 5 to 8 million more families facing foreclosure stemming from this predatory lending crisis that melted down our economy in 2008 and 2009—in addition to the impact on those families, it has an impact on our communities. When there is an empty house on the street, it pulls down the value of every other home on that street by as much as $2,000 to $5,000 per home. That further drives down prices, which means more foreclosures, more families underwater, less confidence in the recovery, more inclination to hold onto every dollar rather than to spend in our economy, so the consumer spending is suppressed and our GDP is directly linked, both to the amount of money invested—and we know many companies around America are sitting on vast sums rather than investing them—and on the amount of money families spend.

These things all tie together, whether our economy is going to succeed or remain in its current paralyzed shape. Often it is important to take these big numbers and translate them to individual stories. I would like to share today a story about Tim Colette and his son in my State of Oregon. We received this article from Economic Fairness Oregon. It is titled, "A Homecoming With No Home." I will read the first paragraph. Mr. Colette says:

My biggest problem now is, my son comes home from the military in August and my home is being foreclosed on in 18 days. He's been hit by an IED, people shooting at him and he just wanted to come home and sleep in his room in his bed and be safe for 15 days . . . and I told him I'd make that happen. I don't know how yet, but I will.

Mr. Colette shared his story with Oregon lawmakers in a recent hearing on foreclosure reform, and I thank him for sharing his story. For Tim and countless others, it did not need to be this bad. We have a program in America called the Mortgage Modification Program, or HAMP, Housing Affordable Modification Program. That program has not worked very well. Indeed, it is a voluntary program. It has been more or less a nightmare for the families who have been applying.

Often a servicer will encourage families to apply because they make more money when a family is behind on their payments than when they are current on their payments. So often the servicer will say: You know, you probably qualify. What you need to do is stop making your payments for a period of 3 months or maybe 6 months or what you need to do is cut your payments in half and that will show financial distress and you will qualify for this program.

So the family follows those directions, understands they are in the process of getting a modification, and then it turns out the servicer has a different story to tell, often saying: You know what. Your credit score is not very good because you have only been making half payments for 6 months. So, you know what, you don't qualify after all, and you owe us a lot of money. If you do not pay us, we are foreclosing.

That is the nightmare of a program that was supposed to help families but has often hurt families. Mr. Colette's story is one of these stories of going through the difficulty of this program. He bought his home in 2006. At the time it seemed like a great investment for him and his son, especially considering that he was in a position to put down more than $100,000 as a downpayment. It is a situation that very few families can emulate. He was able to afford his mortgage payments quite easily within his income.

But when Wall Street's bad bets sparked the national recession, everything changed. He lives in one of the hardest hit areas of the State of Oregon, Deschutes County, and the construction industry dried up overnight and therefore his business, his construction business, dried up overnight. He called his mortgage servicer to begin the mortgage modification process, and he did what the bank asked him to.

At the time the bank extracted partial payments, actually for years, on the false hope that Tim could receive a long-term fix. So month after month his equity, that original $100,000 downpayment, was siphoned away. It was siphoned away through bank fees, it was siphoned away through declining property values, until there was nothing left.

Had his request for a modification been processed promptly, either he would have been approved or denied. If he would have been approved, it would have been great. It would have locked in his payments, and he could have continued with that fine financial foundation. If he had been denied, he would have had the ability to say: I have to make a decision then. Do I put this home up for a short sale? Do I put it up on the market and try to sell it for what is owed to the bank? He would have had some savings left over to pick up and start over.

Tim did all that was right and he played by the rules, but he is in a precarious position today. In just 9 weeks, his son, serving our country overseas, will come home. Let's hope it is a homecoming with a home, not a homecoming without a home.

This amendment does three important things: The first is, it establishes a single point of contact so when a family talks to their servicer they do not have to start from scratch every single time, explaining their story.

With that single point of contact there will be somebody who has a coherent file. So often, each time a family talked to a different person at the servicer, that person had lost the file or lost key papers in the file or was sent additional information that had been requested but did not put it into the file. So a single coherent point of contact.

Second, this amendment ends the dual track on which servicers proceed to pursue foreclosure at the same time they are talking to the customer about a modification. Very simply, this amendment would set aside that dual track, that foreclosure track, until they make a decision. They can make it over a longer period of time, over a shorter period of time, but until they make the decision and tell the customer, they set aside the foreclosure track. That would reduce a lot of the stress, a lot of the confusion, a lot of the enormous frustration that families face.

The third point in this amendment is that it requires a third-party review before a servicer sends a home into foreclosure. That simply guarantees that the law has been followed, that there was a coherent examination of the paperwork and a foreclosure is in order at the same time a modification has been approved or a foreclosure is in order at the same time a modification is on the verge of being approved or that a foreclosure doesn't proceed because a document is missing from the file. Connecticut and Maine have such a program, and it has kept 60 percent of the families who would otherwise be out of their houses in their houses. So three basic, fundamental reforms.

I wish to thank my Republican cosponsor, OLYMPIA SNOWE, who stepped forward on behalf of homeowners across this Nation to say yes to fairness. I also thank the other dozen or so Senators who in the last day have signed up as cosponsors. Many of them have been real champions in their States, and some of them have worked very hard on these issues, including Senator REID and Senator WHITEHOUSE. In fact, I would note that Senators AKAKA, BLUMENTHAL, DURBIN, INOUE, LEVIN, MCCASKILL, SANDERS, SHAHEEN, WHITEHOUSE, and WYDEN, and I imagine many more will join us.

I encourage my colleagues to support fundamental fairness: single point of contact and a foreclosure dual track and have a third-party review so that homeowners get a chance, like Mr. Colette, to stay in their homes.

Thank you, Madam President.

AMENDMENTS NOS. 411 AND 412 EN BLOC

Mr. MCCAIN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to set aside the pending amendment and call up amendments Nos. 411 and 412.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MERKLEY. Reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous consent request is pending.

Mr. MCCAIN. Madam President, I still ask unanimous consent to call up both amendments. It is my understanding amendments are allowed, but if there are some amendments that are not allowed, I think we ought to understand that. I understand the strength of the ethanol lobby, but there was an agreement that amendments would be allowed to be called up. If that is not the case, then I would obviously have to resort to other parliamentary measures.

So I repeat my unanimous consent request to set aside the pending amendment and call up both amendments, Nos. 411 and 412.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN] proposes amendments en bloc numbered 411 and 412.

Mr. MCCAIN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendments be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendments are as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 411

(Purpose: To prohibit the use of Federal funds to construct ethanol blender pumps or ethanol storage facilities)

At the end of the bill, add the following:

SEC. ____ PROHIBITION ON USE OF FEDERAL FUNDS TO CONSTRUCT ETHANOL BLENDER PUMPS OR ETHANOL STORAGE FACILITIES.

Effective beginning on the date of enactment of this Act, no funds made available by Federal law (including funds in any trust fund to which funds are made by Federal law) shall be expended for the construction of an ethanol blender pump or an ethanol storage facility.

AMENDMENT NO. 412

(Purpose: To repeal the wage rate requirements commonly known as the Davis-Bacon Act)

On page __, between lines __ and __, insert the following:

SEC. ____ REPEAL OF DAVIS-BACON WAGE REQUIREMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter IV of chapter 31 of title 40, United States Code, is repealed.

(b) REFERENCE.—Any reference in any law to a wage requirement of subchapter IV of chapter 31 of title 40, United States Code, shall after the date of the enactment of this Act be null and void.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE AND LIMITATION.—The amendments made by this section shall not affect any contract in existence on the date of enactment of this Act or made pursuant to invitation for bids outstanding on such date of enactment.

Mr. MCCAIN. Madam President, I will be brief in discussing both of the amendments.

The first amendment, amendment No. 411, is a simple amendment that would prohibit the U.S. Department of Agriculture from funding the construction of ethanol blender pumps or ethanol storage facilities, which is the latest effort on the part of the ethanol lobby to take more and more of U.S. taxpayers' dollars.

I would remind my colleagues that taxpayers have already provided billions of dollars to ethanol producers over the last 30 years. Last year alone, the ethanol tax credit cost the taxpayers $6 billion. In the final hours of the last Congress, the ethanol tax credit was extended for an additional year and will likely cost taxpayers an additional $5 billion to $6 billion this year. Seeking to double-dip in the Federal Treasury, advocates for the ethanol industry are seeking taxpayer support for infrastructure for ethanol such as blender pumps and storage facilities.

The Department of Agriculture was happy to comply with the industry's request to fund infrastructure construction. On April 8, 2001, the Secretary of Agriculture issued a rule that—get this—would classify blender pumps as a renewable energy system. In other words, pumps are now a renewable energy system, which would qualify it for funding under the Rural Energy Assistance Program.

There is no one—no one—who believed the Rural Energy Assistance Program would apply to putting ethanol pumps and storage facilities in gas stations. When Congress created the Rural Energy Assistance Program, it didn't have any intention of paying gas station owners to upgrade their infrastructure and further subsidize the ethanol industry.

According to the USDA, an ethanol blender pump and tank could cost an average of $100,000 to $120,000 to install. With over 200,000 fuel pumps currently operating in the United States, it would cost over $20 billion to convert them all—a corporate welfare project of significant proportions.

I might point out that an amendment similar to this was overwhelmingly supported in the other body during the consideration of H.R. 1 by a vote of 261 to 158.

It is time we stop this. I am a well-known opponent of ethanol subsidies to start with because it has never been of any value. It has distorted the market, and it has been an incredible waste of taxpayers' dollars. But now they want to go further by having us pay as much as $20 billion so they can install, under the Rural Energy Assistance Program, blender pumps and storage facilities.

So the ethanol advocates today have issued a release opposing this amendment because it would enforce the foreign oil mandate over our transportation fuels marketplace by blocking a job-creating effort to promote the installation of flex pumps. So now this is all about jobs. We want to create jobs by spending taxpayers' dollars to build pumps.

I hope my colleagues will take a look at this and support this amendment.

The other amendment, amendment No. 412, basically eliminates Davis-Bacon requirements from this legislation. The issue of Davis-Bacon is well known. All it would do is, in my view, reduce costs by some 60 percent from market rates if we are indeed not imposing Davis-Bacon Act requirements.

While I am on the floor, I wish to mention to my colleagues that as we face increasing costs at the gas pump of $4 or more—there are predictions that the cost of gasoline and a barrel of oil will continue to increase—this administration continues to reject nuclear power in every possible way.

Yesterday, a House committee released the latest evidence detailing the administration's mishandling of the Yucca Mountain nuclear waste repository, providing further examples of this administration's blatantly political decision to terminate the Yucca Mountain project and close the facility.

I quote from the committee report:

Despite the President's continued assertions that his nuclear waste management policy decisions would be driven by sound science, the administration has repeatedly refused to provide a scientific or technical justification for its shutdown decision, instead simply stating that Yucca is not a workable option.

This coincides with an April 2011 GAO study that reported:

DOE decided to terminate the Yucca Mountain repository program because, according to the Department of Energy officials, it is not a workable option and there are better solutions that can achieve a broader national consensus. DOE did not cite technical or safety issues.

There is a simple reason that neither Department of Energy Secretary Chu nor any other member of the administration has put forth a single scientific justification on the decision not to move forward with Yucca Mountain—because there is none.

When the NRC's Atomic Safety and Licensing Board rejected the Department of Energy's request to withdraw the license application, it noted:

Conceding that the Application is not flawed nor the site unsafe, the Secretary of Energy seeks to withdraw the Application with prejudice as a "matter of policy" because the Nevada site "is not a workable option."

In fact, according to the House report, the NRC staff review of DOE's Yucca Mountain license application agreed overwhelmingly with the Department of Energy on the scientific and technical issues associated with the site, ultimately concluding that the application complies with applicable Nuclear Regulatory Commission safety regulations necessary for the site to proceed to licensing for construction.

The political interference orchestrated by the administration comes with a very real cost. As of 2010, the taxpayers have spent $15 billion to research and develop the Yucca Mountain site.

In addition, even while the administration is attempting to terminate the place, the energy industry and therefore the ratepayers are still contributing to the Nuclear Waste Fund that was established to pay for a nuclear waste repository. According to the Congressional Budget Office, the Nuclear Waste Fund is holding over $25 billion of ratepayers' money. To date, no one has stated whether the energy industry or the ratepayers will be refunded those fees, and it is likely the taxpayer will end up footing the bill for the lawsuits filed against the Federal Government by those who have been unfairly charged.

The need for a permanent waste repository remains clear. In fact, a draft subcommittee report from the President's blue ribbon commission on nuclear waste stated that "permanent disposal of nuclear waste is needed under all reasonably foreseeable scenarios" and that "we do not believe that new technology developments in the next three to four decades will change the underlying need for a storage strategy combining interim sites with progress toward a permanent facility," thereby completely refuting statements by the administration that technology and temporary storage sites are a sufficient replacement for permanent disposal. In fact, the administration and the Secretary of Energy himself have publicly stated that our most promising technology to lessen the burden of storage—waste reprocessing—is not even being considered as a viable option for addressing waste-storage needs. Unfortunately, it has been reported that members of the commission have been told that under no circumstances are they allowed to recommend Yucca Mountain as a permanent waste repository—regardless of where the scientific evidence leads them.

According to the Government Accountability Office, the termination of Yucca Mountain would set back the opening of a new geologic repository by at least 20 years and cost billions of dollars. Of course, these billions would be in addition to the $15 billion taxpayers have already spent to research and develop the Yucca Mountain site. It is really a sad day when we allow politics or political influence to cause us to allow at least $15 billion of the taxpayers' money to be wasted and to really doom, to a large degree, the future of nuclear power in this country.

We need to have energy self-sufficiency. I believe in wind. I believe in tide. I believe in solar. But nuclear power must be a part of any equation if we are going to be truly energy independent. And by closing Yucca Mountain and by wasting already $15 billion of the taxpayers' money, we have made that goal much, much harder to reach.

Madam President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. BROWN of Massachusetts. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 436, AS MODIFIED

Mr. COBURN. Madam President, I want to discuss for a minute the modification to my amendment.

Corn prices today are at their highest level since 1974. Corn supply is at its lowest level since 1974. We have tremendous problems with food inflation in this country. What we put forward this afternoon is a modification to the blending tax credit, as well as the import tax fee on ethanol, and we look forward to that debate as we go forward.

The Federal Government now spends $6 billion a year paying over 40 cents a gallon to have ethanol blended, which is already mandated by law that they have to blend it anyway. So this, in essence, will save $3 billion this year for the Federal Government.

No. 2 is, it will take significant pressure off corn prices, which will lower food prices both here and abroad.

With that, I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma, who wishes to speak as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. INHOFE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to set aside the pending amendment for consideration of the following three amendments: Nos. 429, 430, and 438.

Mr. MERKLEY. Madam President, I reserve the right to object.

I ask the Senator if he can hold off for a moment. We wish to consult with the chairwoman.

Mr. INHOFE. All right. While I am holding off, it is my understanding that some of the rest of them are getting in the queue, and I am trying to get these three in with the same treatment that has been afforded those before me.

AMENDMENTS NOS. 430 AND 438

Madam President, I amend my previous request and ask unanimous consent to set the pending amendment aside for the consideration of two of the amendments, Nos. 430 and 438.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, the clerk will report.

The assistant editor of the Daily Digest read as follows:

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. INHOFE] proposes an amendment numbered 430.

Mr. INHOFE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To reduce amounts authorized to be appropriated)

On page 27, line 6, strike "$500,000,000" and insert "$300,000,000".

The assistant editor of the Daily Digest read as follows:

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. INHOFE], for himself, Mr. BLUNT, Mr. JOHANNIS, and Mr. COCHRAN, proposes an amendment numbered 438.

Mr. INHOFE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Text of Amendments.")

Mr. INHOFE. Madam President, I ask by unanimous consent that I be allowed to speak as in morning business, which I know the Chair will honor.

However, I want to mention one of these two amendments. I think it is very significant. It is somewhat similar, I think, to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Maine. What it has to do with is these various regulations, and actually most of these are coming from the Environmental Protection Agency.

One of the serious problems we have in the committee on which I am the ranking member, the Environment and Public Works Committee—that is chaired by Senator BOXER from California—we have oversight over the Environmental Protection Agency, and we have been watching what has been happening in the last several months. Many of the things they have been trying to get through, they have been unable to get through legislation here on the floor of this Senate, so they are trying to do the very things they are unable to get done through legislation by regulation. And these are very expensive.

Right now, we have a problem with our economy. We have overregulation that is killing a lot of the businesses that are out there. What I am trying to do is an amendment—and that is what amendment No. 438 is—to get it into the RECORD. The bill sets up a committee to assess the effects of the EPA's regulatory mandates, including key provisions of the Clean Air Act, the Clean Water Act, and the Solid Waste Disposal Act. This would include greenhouse gas regulations, Boiler MACT, Utility MACT, ozone and particulate matter standards, coal ash disposal, and water discharge requirements.

The assessment includes an evaluation of the cumulative effects of the EPA's mandates on employment, economic development, and this type of thing.

It does not otherwise modify or affect the statute. The reason I wish to have this in here is we have now quantified what it is costing the American people in terms of employment, in terms of dollars, and just—greenhouse gas, for example. We know that the costs, if they do anything like the cap and trade that they have tried to do through legislation—and that is exactly what they are attempting to do right now through regulations at the EPA—are somewhere between $300 and $400 billion of loss in GDP per year. That is every year.

You can call that a tax increase if you want to because that is exactly what it is, the same as a loss in GDP. In my case, in Oklahoma, because it is confusing when we—and this administration has been talking about hundreds of billions and trillions of dollars. Nobody truly has a handle on what it costs.

I keep track as to how many families file tax returns. In my State of Oklahoma, if you take the number of families who file tax returns and divide it and do the math, that would be somewhere around a little over $3,000 per family if we were to pass a cap-and-trade regulation.

What is wrong with this? A lot of people are out there saying: INHOFE, you have been wrong all this time. Since you are wrong on the—you may be wrong or what if you are wrong. My response is this: We have a very fine Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, Lisa Jackson. I can remember talking to her about what would happen if we were to pass any of these bills where we are going back to maybe the Warner-Lieberman bill or Waxman-Markey bill or even by regulations, cap and trade, the costs would be excessive.

However, my question to her was: If we were successful in doing this, would this reduce the greenhouse gases? The answer was no. The reason it would not is because it only applies to the United States of America. So if we were going to pass a tax increase on every tax-paying family in my State of Oklahoma of $3,000 a year, and they admit we are not going to get anything for it, then we need to stop them from doing that.

I could do the same thing about the ozone, the National Ambient Air Quality Standards. That would be $676.8 billion lost in GDP by 2020; the boiler MACT rules and regulations, some $1 billion lost in GDP; utility MACT, $184 billion in compliance costs. That is just between the years of 2011 and 2030; the cement MACT, some $3.5 billion.

I am saying this because we need to have our eyes open and tell the American people what the cost is of all these things. This will be done by this amendment, No. 438, and we will hopefully be able to get a vote on that.

COTE D'IVOIRE

Madam President, I am going to take a little time on something else that has to be said, and that is what I have been on the floor six times already talking about. The only reason I am continuing to do this is because somehow the State Department, the French, the United Nations, and all of them seem to be laboring under this misconception that I will go away and I will not talk about it anymore.

I am not going to go away. I am going to keep talking about it. The problem we have right now started some time ago. I will share with you some of the new developments today.

We are talking about the rigged election that took place in Cote d'Ivoire and the fact that someone whose name is Alassane Ouattara—we have demonstrated very clearly—won the election by fraudulent means.

The President of that country is Laurent Gbagbo. He has been President now for a number of years. His wife, Simone Gbagbo, has been a gracious and great First Lady.

What I wish to do—this is the seventh time I have been on the floor talking about this—is give you the latest on this grave situation in Cote d'Ivoire. I can only say it continues to be a targeted genocide against supporters and perceived supporters of the deposed President of Laurent Gbagbo.

This will be, as I said, my seventh time speaking about this on the floor. The last time we talked about it was on April 4. When we first started talking about this, we were hoping we would be able to stop this, the State Department and others from going along with what is going on now in Cote d'Ivoire. I know it is complicated.

A lot of people do not remember the genocide in Rwanda of 1994. Now we look back and say what a horrible event that was. Sure, it was horrible.

But right now what is going on in the streets of Abidjan in Cote d'Ivoire is something that has to be raised to the surface in front of the American people. I have new information that proves what I have been saying for the last 7 weeks, that the rebel leader Alassane Ouattara is still carrying out death squads, killing people in the streets of Abidjan in Cote d'Ivoire. There they are. That is a death squad. These are the people who are murdering and torturing people in Abidjan as we speak.

I bet there are not a handful of people who even know where Abidjan is. But this is the city, the capital of Cote d'Ivoire, a beautiful country. These people, coming in from the north, under this Alassane Ouattara, are in there today. I do not know how many hundreds of people they are murdering just today, but they are doing it and they are torturing and they are raping.

Before I tell you the most recent information that came out from Human Rights Watch, I wish to remind you of what I said back on the May 27. That was when Amnesty International reported that a manhunt—I am quoting now from Amnesty International—they reported that “a manhunt”—what I said right here from this podium. “A manhunt was launched against Gbagbo loyalists in Abidjan and several senior officials close to him were beaten in the hours after his arrest.”

That was 2 weeks ago. I am further quoting now from Amnesty International. “In the west of the country, thousands of people who fled their homes are still living in the forest, too frightened to return.”

Look at this. There are the burned, charred bodies of people who have been tortured to death. This just happened. This is going on today, right now. Here is a man who was severely beaten. He died right after that. Here is a small child who was put to death in the same way. Here they are in the middle of executions. That is going on right now.

Gaetan Mootoo, who is Amnesty International's west Africa researcher, said:

Human rights violations are still being committed against real or perceived supporters of Laurent Gbagbo. Alassane Ouattara's failure to condemn these acts can be seen as a green light by many of his security forces, and other armed elements fighting with them, to continue. Ouattara must publicly state that all violence against the civilian population must stop immediately.

That is what the mandate was 2 weeks ago. That is what they were supposed to do 2 weeks ago. They went on to say from Amnesty International:

Attacks against villages inhabited by people belonging to ethnic groups considered supporters of Gbagbo—

The legitimate President—

continued in the first weeks of May. . . . Between 6 and 8 May several villages were burned and dozens killed. Ouattara's republican forces justified these acts by saying they were looking for arms and Liberian mercenaries.

They went on to describe this. There is an article in Guardian magazine that talked about this. This, again, was a little over 2 weeks ago. They said “an Amnesty delegation spent 2 months in Ivory Coast, gathering more than 100 witness statements from people who survived the massacre in Duekoue. . . .”

That is what this actually is in that small town of Duekoue and the neighboring villages on March 29.

All the statements indicated a systematic and targeted series of killings committed by the uniformed republican forces [loyal to Ouattara], who executed hundreds of men on political and ethnic grounds.

Before killing them, they asked their victims to give their names, show identity cards. . . . Some of these cards were found beside the bodies.

A woman who lived in Duekoue told researchers: “They came into the yards and chased the women. Then they told the men to line up and asked them to state their first and second names and show their identity cards. They then executed them. I was present—

Quoting a woman who was watching her husband—

while they sorted out the men. Three young men, one of whom was about 15, were shot to death in front of me.”

Amnesty's report also accuses the UN mission, which has a base less than a mile from Duekoue, of fatal inertia.

“Fatal inertia,” means they did nothing. They let this go on. We are talking about the United Nations.

People around here—there are a lot of liberals in this body who do not think that anything is worthwhile unless it comes from some big body such as the United Nations. That is what is happening right now. So I wish to go ahead—I know there is someone else on the floor who wants to speak, but I just want to be sure we are informed that what was going on then—what I talked about 2 weeks ago—is still happening today.

What happened today? The newly released report by Human Rights Watch states—this is a different group from Amnesty International and this came out today:

Armed forces loyal to President Alassane Ouattara have killed at least 149 real or perceived supporters of the former President Laurent Gbagbo since taking control of the commercial capital of Abidjan in mid-April, 2011.

The report goes on to describe the gruesome details, barbaric episodes of torture and the deaths at the hands of the Ouattara forces. This is happening today—right now. Here are a few examples. This is from Human Rights Watch.

Ouattara's Forces . . . sealed off and searched areas formerly controlled by pro-Gbagbo militia . . . and the majority of documented abuses occurred in the longtime pro-Gbagbo stronghold of Yopougon.

That is the town in that stronghold in the south part of the—you have to keep in mind Ouattara's forces came from the Muslim area up north.

Most killings were point-blank executions—

You are seeing a point-blank execution. That is what it looks like right there, the gun to the head.

Most killings were point-blank executions of youth from ethnic groups generally aligned with Gbagbo, in what appeared to be collective punishment for these groups' participation in Gbagbo's militias.

One man described how Republican Forces soldiers killed his 21-year-old brother: “Two of them grabbed his legs, another two held his arms behind him, and a fifth one held his head,” he said. “Then a guy pulled out a knife and slit my brother's throat. He was screaming. I saw his legs shaking after they'd slit his throat, the blood streaming down. As they were doing it, they said they had to eliminate all of the [Young] Patriots that had caused all the problems in the country.”

During the raid in Abidjan, the forces, the UN forces, the French and Ouattara, they went in—and it happens that the seated President, President Gbagbo, had not a lot of armaments, but he had a whole lot of young people. They were armed not with weapons but with baseball bats, with wooden clubs, and they surrounded the palace to try to protect him, knowing they would kill their President. This is where they are today. These are the young kids. That is in a gas station up here. They are all lined up there. They are executing some of them, starving, beating the rest of them. But look at that. There are the pictures of what is going on.

These young patriots were young supporters to President Gbagbo, who surrounded his palace in a human chain, armed with just sticks and bats against the UN and French attack helicopters, which were bombing Gbagbo's residence, now being searched out by Ouattara's forces for torture and death.

The report goes on. This report came out today.

Another woman who witnessed the killing of 18 youths . . . was brutally raped by a Republican Forces soldier after being forced to load their vehicles with pillaged goods. On May 23, an elderly man in the same neighborhood saw Republican Forces execute his son, whom they accused of being a member of the pro-Gbagbo militia.

Another witness described seeing the Republican Forces slit the throat of a youth in front of his father after finding an AK-47 and grenade in his bedroom during a 4 a.m. house-to-house search. The witness was stripped and forced to hand over his laptop computer, cell phones, and money.

And was murdered.

Human Rights Watch documented similar pillaging of scores of houses in Abidjan.

By the way, I personally talked to these people in Abidjan who witnessed this going on.

The witness, like many others interviewed by Human Rights Watch, wanted to flee

Abidjan to his family village, but had no money for transportation since the Republican Forces had taken everything.

Human Rights Watch says it documented 54 extrajudicial executions at detention sites, including police stations and the GESCO oil—

That is the station we just now saw. Those were the executions of the young kids taking place.

In addition to the killings—

I am reading now—

Human Rights Watch interviewed young men who had been detained by the Republican Forces . . . and arrested for no other apparent reason than their age and ethnic group. Nearly every former detainee described being struck repeatedly with guns, belts, rope, and fists . . . for alleged participation in the Young Patriots.

Those were the young people surrounding the palace.

Several described torture, including forcibly removing teeth from one victim and placing a burning hot knife on another victim, then cutting him.

Human Rights Watch reports “witnesses consistently identified the killers and abusers as the Republican Forces” of Ouattara, and they were “overseen” by Ouattara and Soros. Soros is a general of Ouattara. He is the one who is responsible for going into Duekoue. That is where they murdered all the people. The Soros they speak of is the one who was responsible for that under the supervision and direction of Ouattara.

So the Human Rights Report calls on Ouattara “to immediately ensure the humane treatment of anyone detained” by his forces. This is something I have been demanding for 7 weeks. I hope now this report is going to draw attention so at least the State Department knows what is going on because our State Department is going along with all of this. They had an opportunity to voice their opinions and come up with a solution. The solution is to offer amnesty or to send him to a country where he will be able to live.

I have been very critical of the State Department’s handling of the situation in Cote d’Ivoire. I sent them evidence months ago that showed Alassane Ouattara engaged in massive election fraud during last year’s Presidential election. I called for an election and then a new election. Of course, it was met with deaf ears. I called on the State Department to inquire as to the health and safety of President Gbagbo and his wife Simone. To date, we have heard nothing.

Last year, I urged the State Department to use its power and influence and allow the reconciliation process in Cote d’Ivoire by allowing Gbagbo to go into exile. I pointed out that at least half of the population of Cote d’Ivoire supports Gbagbo. I acknowledged one African leader who is willing to accept Gbagbo in his country—a Sub-Saharan African country. The State Department has been aware of this for over a month.

I strongly suggest that is a solution. It has been done before. It was done in Haiti with “Baby Doc” Duvalier. I know people are tired of hearing me talk about Cote d’Ivoire.

I had a pleasant experience yesterday. I met the nominee for the Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs, Bill Burns. I had a chance to visit with him about this and other problems. I found him to be very receptive. I am convinced he embodies the high traditions of the foreign service—selfless, nonpartisan diplomatic service. He indicated to me he will follow through with my requests of the State Department regarding the health and well-being of the Gbagbos. I appreciate that.

I will finish by letting you see a photo of the two Gbagbos. Here is the President, Laurent Gbagbo, who I believe should be the legitimate President of Cote d’Ivoire. The first photo was a happy guy I knew. This next photo was him right after they took him. This side of his face is bashed in. His wife is a beautiful lady, Simone. Here is a picture of her. I have known her for over 15 years. She is a gracious lady and everybody loves her. After Alassane Ouattara took her, here is what she looked like. They ripped her hair out by the roots and went dancing up and down the streets of Abidjan with the hair. You have to use your imagination.

This is what is going on today in Cote d’Ivoire. There they are, the death squad, and there is the First Lady, Simone.

The last thing is that I hope somebody in the State Department cares enough to intervene and allow that party to go into exile. There is already an operation for that. Almost every President of every African country who called me is in agreement to what we are trying to do.

I yield the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 427

Mr. MERKLEY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to set aside the pending amendment, and I call up amendment No. 427.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. KLOBUCHAR). Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MERKLEY. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

AMENDMENT NO. 441 TO AMENDMENT NO. 436, AS MODIFIED

Mr. MCCAIN. Madam President, I call for the regular order on amendment No. 436, as modified, and send a second-degree amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has the right to call for the regular order.

The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN] proposes an amendment numbered 441 to amendment No. 436, as modified.

Mr. MCCAIN. I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To prohibit the use of Federal funds to construct ethanol blender pumps or ethanol storage facilities)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. ____ PROHIBITION ON USE OF FEDERAL FUNDS TO CONSTRUCT ETHANOL BLENDER PUMPS OR ETHANOL STORAGE FACILITIES.

Effective beginning on the date of enactment of this Act, no funds made available by Federal law (including funds in any trust fund to which funds are made by Federal law) shall be expended for the construction of an ethanol blender pump or an ethanol storage facility.

Mr. MCCAIN. Madam President, I thank my friend from Illinois for allowing me to do that. I appreciate it and yield the floor.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Madam President, yesterday I voted for the Tester amendment on debit card interchange fees. This amendment would give the Federal Reserve more time to study the impact of proposed debit card fee regulations on consumers and the community banks and credit unions that serve them.

I vigorously support the intent of the original Durbin amendment, and I thank Senator DURBIN for working to bring an end to the gouging and the profiteering at the largest banks.

My No. 1 priority is consumers. I have always made sure I was on the side of consumers and Main Street and against unfair and abusive practices on Wall Street. I have a deep suspicion of how big banks treat the little people and what they do with the little people's money.

I voted for the original Durbin amendment during the debate over the Wall Street reform bill because something had to be done to rein in these hidden fees that kept rising and rising—and getting passed on to consumers. The amendment included an exemption for banks with less than $10 billion in assets to ensure that only the largest banks would be affected.

Since then, the community banks and credit unions in my State tell me that they are afraid that the current $10 billion exemption for debit card issuers will not protect them and that they will be forced to stop services, charge consumers new fees, or risk the stability of their institution if they are not adequately protected from the debit card fee limit. I take these concerns very seriously.

In this fragile economy, we have to be very careful about the stability of our community banks and our credit unions. Often, they are the only ones lending to our neighbors and small businesses. And making sure that Americans in the middle class are not denied access to these institutions is consumer protection, too.

After careful consideration, I am voting for Senator TESTER's amendment. I want to ensure that consumers are not hurt by unintended consequences of well-intentioned regulations. That is why I call for more study. It is the prudent thing to do. But I recognize that delay can be a tool to derail, and my intent is not to derail. We must be prudent, but we also must be prompt. Let me be clear, I will not let this drag on indefinitely. If, at the end of 12 months, this issue is not resolved—I will urge the Fed to act quickly and support legislation to force action.

I have a long history on this issue. My family has fought for generations to protect consumers and expand access to credit.

Before the stock market crash in 1929, when banks in downtown Baltimore wouldn't lend to people who they regarded as on the wrong side of the tracks, my grandfather, along with small businesses in the area, got together to start a savings and loan to serve the community. They lent to small businesses that didn't have access to credit and they lent to women when no one else would.

When the tough times came in the Great Depression this savings and loan was there so people didn't lose their homes. They refused to foreclose on homes and businesses. If you paid a nickel a week on your mortgage, you were considered current.

Later, in the heart of the African-American community in Baltimore, when there was no access to credit, community members would be targeted by Happy Harry. And why was Harry happy? Because he charged 18 to 20 percent interest for a loan and knew his customers had nowhere else to turn.

So I worked with the Parish Council at St. Gregory's Church to establish a credit union so that there would be access and to end the scamming, the scheming, and the gouging.

As a Senator, I continued these fights. When I heard that innocent people in Maryland and across the country were being gouged and ripped off, I vowed to stop it. I helped create a flipping task force in Baltimore that was to be a model for the Nation.

In 2003, after hearing that the Fairbanks Capital Corporation was threatening a number of Marylanders with foreclosure, I called for a Federal investigation of Fairbanks. The company paid $40 million into a restitution fund so victims could get their money back and innocent homeowners could get their good name back.

And in 2009, I put funding in the Federal checkbook to help the FBI investigate mortgage fraud so that they can have the resources to help stop the scamming, the scheming, and the gouging.

I said during the debate over the Wall Street reform bill that we had gotten into a financial situation where we bailed out the big banks. We bailed out the whales, we bailed out the sharks, and we had left the people in the community, the little minnows, to swim upstream and be on their own.

When I traveled around my State that summer, in diners and dry cleaners, I heard anger and frustration in people's voices. They watched Wall Street mortgage brokers profit off irresponsible lending while their husbands work an extra shift to make sure they could make the monthly mortgage payment. And they watched big firms take very risky gambles with their money without any regulation.

We need to put government back on the side of the middle class. The banks got their bailout; how about we make sure we protect the middle class against fraud, duplicity, and gouging?

But we don't just need effective regulations to keep Wall Street in line. We need to make sure our community banks and credit unions—the institutions where Marylanders have savings accounts and where the teller knows their name and their family—are not swallowed up by the sharks and the whales on Wall Street.

I want to see that consumers are treated fairly in the debit card marketplace. I want to be sure that the good guy community banks and credit unions—and the customers who rely on them—are not harmed by the unintended consequences of these regulations.

That is why I voted for the Tester amendment: to give the Federal Reserve the additional time it needs to finalize its regulations so that consumers, community banks, and credit unions are protected.

Ms. SNOWE. Madam President, I rise today to discuss a bipartisan amendment I have filed to S. 782, the Economic Development Revitalization Act of 2011. This amendment, the Small Business Contracting Fraud Prevention Act of 2011, is cosponsored by Senators MCCASKILL, GRASSLEY, HAGAN, COLLINS, MERKLEY, and ENZI.

In the past year, the Government Accountability Office, GAO, has identified vulnerabilities and abuses in virtually all of the SBA's contracting programs, including the 8(a) Business Development Program, the Historically Underutilized Business Zone, HUBZone, program, and the Service-Disabled Veteran-Owned small business, SDVOSB, program. Our amendment attempts to remedy the spate of illegitimate firms siphoning away contracts from the rightful businesses trying to compete within the SBA's contracting programs.

As ranking member of the Senate Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship, I take very seriously our responsibility of vigorous oversight. That is why, last December, Senator LANDRIEU and I sent a letter to the SBA highlighting the recent press headlines and GAO reports of fraud and abuse that have plagued the agency's contracting programs. That letter stated unequivocally that our committee's first priority this Congress is ensuring that all of the SBA's contracting programs are running efficiently, effectively, and free of exploitation. Adopting this critical small business legislation is an effective first step at ensuring all small businesses are competing fairly and honestly within the Federal marketplace.

The SBA has begun to take positive steps to address issues of fraud, but reports continue to surface showing additional tools are needed. As recently as Saturday, March 12, the Washington Post, as part of an ongoing investigation, published an article titled, "D.C. insiders can reap fortunes from federal programs for small businesses." This article states "Government officials were not monitoring contracts for compliance with rules." The report exposes a glaring deficiency in contract oversight. Moreover, an SBA spokesperson is quoted as saying the SBA "long ago transferred that authority to the Pentagon and other agencies." This hands-off attitude is unacceptable, and as I told the SBA Deputy Administrator at a recent Small Business Committee hearing, the ultimate authority for monitoring fraud lies with the SBA.

This amendment contains recommendations both from the SBA inspector general and the GAO for combating these reports of fraud and addresses vulnerabilities in the Service-Disabled Veteran-Owned small business program, the HUBZone program, and the 8(a) program. Additionally, the bill will work to change the culture at SBA to make the process of suspensions and debarments more transparent.

In order to effectively execute the small business contracting programs, the SBA needs a comprehensive framework to provide effective certification, continued surveillance and monitoring, and robust enforcement throughout the SBA's contracting portfolio. This bill aims to increase criminal prosecutions as well as suspension and debarments for businesses found to have attained contracts through fraudulent means, and requires the SBA to submit a report to Congress annually detailing the specific data on all suspensions, debarments, and cases referred to the Department of Justice for criminal prosecutions.

My amendment provides the SBA more stringent oversight capacity across all the SBA contracting programs. It is SBA's duty to utilize every fraud prevention measure at its disposal and this amendment puts the tools in place to punish the bad actors that have infiltrated the SBA contracting programs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed for a period of morning business, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THANKING BETTY HAMILTON

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, I think most of us involved in public life realize that few people meet us and many more people meet those who represent us. That is why if you are a success as a Congressman or Senator or as an elected official, you really have to rely on the people who work for you, who time and again will represent you. Their approach, their sense of caring, their promptness, their courtesy will reflect on you.

If you are lucky—really lucky—you will have some extraordinary people working for you who cover you with glory every single day—even when you don't know it.

I started in politics and was lucky to have two early mentors. As a college student, the Senator who held this seat, Paul Douglas, inspired me to take an interest in government. Later, there was a man he introduced me to, Paul Simon, whom I succeeded in the Senate. I spent more time with Paul Simon, and he truly was my mentor. I inherited many of my good habits from him.

I also inherited something else. I inherited one of his biggest fans and hardest workers, who came on my staff. Her name is Betty Hamilton. She first had her brush with public service in 1984 when she volunteered to work on the Senate campaign of Paul Simon. Paul had a way of bringing out the best in people and bringing the best people into politics. Betty sure fit the bill.

In that first campaign, Betty used to pull her two toddlers, Will and Ben, in a little wagon as she walked door-to-door in her neighborhood, knocking on doors and dropping campaign literature for Paul Simon. She was part of an army of volunteers who helped Paul score an upset victory in a very tough year, politically. Later, she signed on as volunteer coordinator and office manager for Paul Simon's reelection campaign.

After that election, Betty joined my staff when I was still in the House of Representatives. She has been with me ever since.

Betty works in casework. It sounds simple and routine, but it is not. Most of her work is with senior citizens. If an older person in southern Illinois calls my office because they are having a problem with Social Security or Medicare or some other Federal program or agency, Betty most often takes that call.

The people she works with often have no place else to turn. They can't afford lawyers. They just need someone who cares and who is competent. Maybe they have been incorrectly denied Medicare or disability payments or some other benefits they are entitled to, and they have tried but cannot cut through the bureaucracy to resolve their problems. Many of them are desperate. Some have spent every penny they have ever saved and have nothing left. They are on the verge sometimes of even losing their homes.

Betty Hamilton listens to them and she gets to work making phone calls, writing letters, sending e-mails, trying to make the wheels of government turn the way they should. She is an advocate for fairness and good government.

Over the years, Betty has talked with more than 8,000 people in Illinois. They are the lucky ones. She has saved hundreds of people from losing their homes. She has given them hope.

I go back on Fridays to Springfield, and I usually have a couple of thank-yous on my desk, and they always relate to staffers who have done a good job. Usually Betty's name is on them. I can't count the number of people who have written me about the work she has done. They say: Thank you for helping me. I greatly appreciate it. It is good to be able to pay my bills and take care of my kids, and a special thanks to Betty Hamilton.

I know Betty worries some nights about the people she tried to help. She has come in on many Saturdays to write one more letter or make one more call she thinks might help. Just last week she helped someone in my State collect $31,000 in disability payments that had been incorrectly denied them.

Like most people who grew up in St. Louis, Betty is a die-hard St. Louis Cardinals baseball fan. So she knows what I mean when I say I consider Betty Hamilton the Stan Musial of casework. Like Stan the Man, who played for the Cardinals for 22 years, she has worked for me for two decades. Like him, she is a modest person, and like Stan Musial, Betty has compiled a long and consistent record of success that is likely to remain unbroken for a very long time.

Betty didn't take to government initially. She has a master's degree in horticulture. Four years ago, she and her husband John, then retired from the State of Illinois, decided they would buy a farm near Springfield where they could raise produce—some of the best green beans and tomatoes you ever tasted. You could find them at the Springfield Farmers' Market downtown on Wednesdays and Saturdays. I know, I have seen them there the last two Saturdays. Don't miss their stand; it is the best. That is where I am going to be able to see her from now on.

Betty is retiring from my office, and I will miss her. More importantly, the people who have had her fine public service will miss her too. We are going to miss her greatly.

BEST WISHES TO SARA FROELICH

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, back in the year 2000, my wife Loretta and I went to the Democratic Convention in Los Angeles, and we ran into a young college coed from Illinois. She was a student at Wesleyan University in Bloomington, IL—originally from the Twin Cities of Minnesota. At that time, her name was Sara Nelson.

Sara Nelson had a class assignment to cover the convention for a weekly newspaper in Illinois. She was out there sleeping on the floor of somebody's apartment and wandering around trying to write a story for a weekly newspaper. She was a bright-smiling young woman, and Loretta and I liked her instantly.

As fate would have it, we ended up on the same plane flying back to Chicago when the convention had ended. We landed at Midway late, and as Loretta and I were leaving the baggage section, we saw Sara Nelson sitting on her bag by the curb. We said: Sara, where are you going?

She said: I missed my bus down to Bloomington—which is a little over 100 miles away—and I have to wait for one that will come later tonight.

I said: You're in luck because Loretta and I are driving down there. Get in the car.

She hopped in the car with us, and we drove down to Bloomington.

During the course of the trip, we got to know her and liked her even more. She told us how much she loved politics and government and that she was soon going to graduate from Illinois Wesleyan University.

So I said: Why don't you call me sometime. Maybe you can be an intern in my office.

She agreed. She was not only an intern, she was one of the best. As soon as she graduated, we hired her. A year later, she was promoted to handle immigration and citizenship casework, and she did a great job. Then there was an opportunity for her to work as my deputy director for the entire downstate portion of Illinois. This was in 2006.

So Sara Nelson took off and became my representative, going all over the State and speaking for me at meetings and representing me and working on projects as important as the new courthouse in Rockford, IL, and the new bridge across the Mississippi River connecting Granite City with downtown St. Louis. There was no project too daunting for her. She took them on.

In the meantime, to nobody's surprise, she found the person she wanted to marry, John Froelich. She and John got married several years ago, and we went to the wedding—a beautiful event. Her family came down from Minnesota, and the two of them were perfect. John was in medical school studying to be an orthopedic surgeon. Lo and behold, shortly, about a year or so after that, along comes baby Naomi. I cannot tell you how much she loves that baby. She replaced politics, soccer, and the World Cup in her list of most important things. I see Sara out in the park on weekends pushing the stroller, sometimes running behind it with little Naomi giggling along the way.

There is some good news for Minnesotans and bad news for Illinois as this story comes to an end. John Froelich is a medical student and will start his fellowship at Mayo Clinic in Rochester in a few weeks, so Sara and Naomi and John are moving on. I will miss her. She has been a terrific asset on my staff and a terrific person. She is a great mom and has been a great ally in the course of the years she has worked for me.

Loretta and I wish Sara and John and Naomi the very best and thank them for the wonderful years of service they have given to me and the State of Illinois.

THE DREAM ACT

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, 2 years ago, I embarked on a legislative mission to pass a bill called the DREAM Act. The purpose of the DREAM Act was to give to young people who came to this country as children, and who were raised in the United States, who have graduated high school, who have done a well and made a good life in this country, a chance to become legal residents in the United States of America. They are long-term U.S. residents. They have good moral character. They have graduated high school, and we say: If you will complete at least 2 years of college and military service in good standing, we will give you a chance to become legal.

There are thousands of young people who fit this description in the United States. They were brought here as kids. If their parents came to the United States and overstayed a visa or crossed the border when they shouldn't have, these children shouldn't be held accountable. They were children. We don't hold children accountable for any wrongdoing by their parents. They grew up here, they pledge allegiance to the flag in their classrooms here, they sing our national anthem, and many of them speak no other language other than English.

The purpose of the DREAM Act is that we should not punish children for their parents' actions. That is not the American way. Instead, the DREAM Act says to these students: America is going to give you a chance, a chance to continue living here and to make this an even better nation.

The DREAM Act is not just the right thing to do, it makes America a better country. The young people who would qualify for the DREAM Act are class valedictorians, star athletes, honor roll students, and ROTC leaders. They are the future doctors, soldiers, computer scientists, and engineers who will make this country even better.

The DREAM Act would strengthen our national security by giving thousands of highly qualified, well-educated young people the chance to enlist in the Armed Forces. The DREAM Act has the support of not only Secretary of Defense Robert Gates but also GEN Colin Powell.

The DREAM Act will help our economy by giving these talented young people the chance to become engineers and entrepreneurs, doctors, lawyers, teachers, small business owners, and nurses. That is why the DREAM Act has the support of business leaders from across the country, such as Rupert Murdoch and the CEOs of companies such as Microsoft and Pfizer.

The talented young people who would be eligible for the DREAM Act call themselves Dreamers. When I first embarked on this mission 10 years ago, they used to kind of hold back in the shadows of a meeting, kind of whisper to me as I went by that they would be saved if the DREAM Act were passed. Well, now they are stepping forward, and I am glad they are, so America can see who they are.

Every day these Dreamers contact my office to tell me their stories. These stories have energized me to keep up the fight. The last time we had a vote on this act on the Senate floor was last December. We had a majority. But when it comes to controversial issues, it takes 60 votes. I want to take this up again and give these young people a chance.

I want to tell you about two of these DREAM Act-eligible people.

Herta Llusho was brought to the United States from Albania when she was 11. She and her mother settled in Grosse Pointe, MI, a suburb of Detroit. Herta came here legally, but shortly after arriving, Herta's mother filed an application to stay in the United States.

Herta quickly learned English and became an academic star. She graduated from Grosse Pointe South High School with a 4.05 grade point average. In high school, she was a member of the varsity track team, won an Advanced Placement Scholar Award, and was a member of the National Honor Society.

Here is a picture of Herta at graduation. Herta is currently a junior at the University of Detroit Mercy, where she is an honors student studying to be an electrical engineer. She has a grade point average of 3.98 and has completed two internships at engineering firms.

She is also very involved in the community, volunteering at homeless shelters, tutoring programs, and her church. Listen to what one of her friends says about Herta:

I am humbled by Herta's willingness and desire to serve. I have had the privilege of going to the same church at which she faithfully serves. She spends hours tutoring kids and volunteering with the junior high Sunday school class. It is a joy to watch so many children run up to her at church because of the love they receive when they are with her.

In 2009, after 9 years of legal proceedings and deportation proceedings, here is what Herta said about being placed in deportation.

I was shocked. My friends are here, my education is here, my community is here. All of a sudden, I was asked to leave behind everything I know and go back to a country I barely know. When I lived there, I was little, so I don't remember much and I barely speak Albanian any more.

Herta's community rose to her defense. Thousands of people signed an online petition to stop her deportation. Last year, the Department of Homeland Security granted Herta a 1-year stay—just 1 year. The Department is now considering whether to delay it for another year. I sincerely hope they will.

Would it be a good use of taxpayer dollars to deport Herta? Of course not. There is so much discussion in America today about what we need from our young people for America to succeed in the future in the so-called STEM fields—science, technology, engineering, and math. Every year we issue thousands of H-1B visas to bring foreign workers to the United States in the STEM fields.

Herta is a straight-A student in electrical engineering, a STEM field. She doesn't need an H-1B visa. She is a homegrown American talent. Why in the world would we create a law to allow someone who has never lived in the United States to come here and legally reside to become an electrical engineer and tell Herta, who has lived here all of the life she remembers, she has to leave? That is just plain wrong.

Herta came to Capitol Hill to speak at a briefing I sponsored for the DREAM Act, and this is what she said.

I'm a typical story. There are thousands of stories out there just like mine. Please support the DREAM Act so students like me don't have to leave. We are worth it. This is a country we have come to love.

Herta is right. She and thousands of others are worth it. They have so much to contribute to America if we just give them a chance.

Let me introduce you to one other student. This is Julieta Garibay. Julieta was brought to the United States in 1992 at the age of 1. She graduated from the University of Texas with a bachelor's degree in nursing. She was on the dean's list and the president's honor roll and volunteered more than 500 hours at hospitals in Dallas and Austin. Julieta went on to earn a master's degree at the University of Texas in public health nursing. She is a member of Sigma Theta Tau, the international Honor Society of Nursing. She has been a registered nurse since 2004.

Here is the problem. Julieta is undocumented. She cannot legally work in the United States of America. Let me tell you something else about Julieta. She is married to SSG Armen Weinrick, who serves in the U.S. Air Force Reserves. Here is a picture of Julieta and Staff Sergeant Weinrick at Julieta's graduation. Staff Sergeant Weinrick is currently awaiting deployment. He will go overseas to defend our country, but while he is gone serving America, his wife could be deported. That is just plain wrong.

Julieta sent me a letter, and here is what she said about her dreams for the future.

I desperately need the DREAM Act to pass so I can practice my beloved profession—nursing. I have been dreaming of being a nurse for the past 7 years since I earned my nursing license. Once the DREAM Act passes, I will join the military in hopes of making up the lost time and serve the country I call home as a nurse.

Do we need more nurses in America? Of course, we do. In fact, the United States imports thousands of foreign-trained nurses each year to meet the needs of our country. What is wrong with this picture? This young lady has a master's degree in nursing from the University of Texas. I am sure my colleague on the Senate floor would acknowledge that is one of the most highly regarded universities in America. She has this master's degree, and they are planning to deport her. If they do, she will probably cross paths in the airport with a nurse coming here from some foreign country on a work visa to work in our hospitals. That isn't fair, it isn't smart, and it just doesn't make sense.

The DREAM Act would give Julieta the chance to serve the America she loves, the America she calls home.

I first introduced the DREAM Act in 2001. Since then I have met so many immigrant students who would qualify, such as Herta Llusho and Julieta Garibay. They are Americans in their hearts. They are willing to serve our country and to make it a better place. We have to give them a chance.

I ask my colleagues: Please, in your heart of hearts, think about the fairness and justice behind this legislation. Let's support and pass the DREAM Act. It is the right thing to do. It will make America a stronger nation.

Madam President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mrs. MURRAY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that following my remarks, the Senator from Texas, Mr. CORNYN, be recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Washington is recognized.

Mrs. MURRAY. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mrs. MURRAY pertaining to the introduction of S. 1166 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

MEDICARE

Mr. CORNYN. Madam President, I wish to speak briefly today about Medicare, about the law, and specifically a law that Congress passed in 2003 which provided for something called the Medicare trigger. This provided that when the Medicare trustees would indicate that a Medicare funding warning should issue according to that law, then the President of the United States under that law must, within 15 days, submit to Congress proposed legislation to respond to that warning.

What does all this mean? We know the Medicare trustees made the situation clear that Medicare will run out of money by the year 2024. Medicare's unfunded liabilities are more than $24 trillion and growing. In other words, there is a $24 trillion gap between the promises the U.S. Government has made to seniors and the funding to pay for it. Of course, as the Chief Actuary stated, this is actually an optimistic scenario, that we can fund Medicare through 2024.

The President of the United States has failed to comply with this law duly passed by Congress and signed into law. I do not really know why the President has failed to meet this legal responsibility of the law. I hope it is an oversight, and I hope it is one he will correct shortly. Having no plan while the President has criticized the House for the plan they passed is bad enough, but failing to submit a plan when the President of the United States is required to do so by law is a violation of the law, something the President has taken an oath to uphold.

There is no doubt about it, section 802 entitled "Presidential Submission of Legislation" uses the word "shall." It is not "may," it is not "can," and it is not "it would be a good idea." It says the President shall submit to Congress, within a 15-day period beginning on the day the budget submission to Congress is made, proposed legislation responding to this Medicare funding warning. March 1 marked the day 15 since the President submitted his budget, and the Medicare trustees, as we all know, have been ringing the alarm bell for years. But, unfortunately, this is not the only provision of the law the President has neglected.

We could talk about the Greek debt crisis. On Tuesday, the President talked about the Greek debt crisis in a joint press conference with Angela Merkel, the Chancellor of Germany. This is what the President said about the Greek debt crisis:

We have pledged to cooperate fully in working through these issues on a bilateral basis but also through international and financial institutions like the International Monetary Fund.

Obviously, Greece has suffered a debt crisis. They have the International Monetary Fund, funded by various nations, to bail them out. Unfortunately, when the United States has a debt crisis, if we do nothing about it, there will be no one left to bail us out.

The problem with the statement of the President about the International Monetary Fund is that the Congress has also spoken on that issue. Senator VITTER and I sponsored an amendment last summer that was incorporated into the so-called Dodd-Frank Act or the financial services regulatory reform bill. This amendment was approved unanimously by the Senate and became law by the President's hand. This provision, included in section 1501 of the Dodd-Frank Act, requires the Treasury Secretary to determine whether IMF loans to countries that are already deeply in debt will likely be repaid and certify that determination to Congress. Furthermore, if an IMF loan will not be repaid, the Treasury Secretary is required to direct the executive director to vote in opposition to the proposed loan. These provisions became Federal law for a reason—because we sought to protect U.S. taxpayers from being used by the IMF to bail out foreign nations that have been making irresponsible spending decisions.

As I said earlier, I hope the failure of the President to comply with this mandatory requirement under the Medicare law we passed in 2003 is simply an oversight. But we know that so far the President and the majority party in the Senate have not submitted—the President has actually submitted a budget that doubles the debt in 5 years and triples it in 10 years, but he has made no response to the Medicare trustees' statement that Medicare will be insolvent in 13 years. Instead, he has attacked the only people who have been responsible enough to come up with a proposal. Admittedly, the proposal may not be perfect, but it is a responsibility of all of us to do what we can to try to solve problems, not just attack people and use it for political advantage when other people try to step up and meet their obligations.

The issue is respect for the law, and the issue is whether the checks and balances in our Constitution are still in place. The question is whether the President somehow considers himself above the law or whether the law applies to him just as it does to each one of us.

I hope this is an oversight. I hope the President will remedy that oversight and he will submit proposed legislation to deal with this impending insolvency of Medicare forthwith.

I yield the floor. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARRASSO. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

A SECOND OPINION

Mr. BARRASSO. Madam President, I come to the floor again today, as I have week after week since the health care law has been passed, with a doctor's second opinion about the health care law. As you know, I have practiced medicine for 25 years in Wyoming, taking care of Wyoming families.

I have great concerns about this health care law that has been passed by this body as well as the House, signed by the President. The American people continue to learn more and more about this health care law, and the more they learn, the more concern they have about this law being bad for patients; bad for providers, the nurses and doctors who take care of the patients; and bad for the payers, the taxpayers of this country who are going to get hit with an incredible bill.

The main subject I wish to talk about today is a new report that has come out that says to me that the taxpayers are going to get hit with a bill much higher than they initially thought. It is a report from the McKinsey Quarterly called "How U.S. health care reform will affect employee benefits."

In the debate and speeches the President had given in the runup to the election and the vote on this bill, he said that if you had care you liked, you could keep it; that the American people, if they had a plan they liked, would be able to keep it. It was a promise he made to the American people, a promise the American people wanted to believe. But now this report shows that the American people were right in being skeptical, and, as we see, the more the American people learn about the health care law, the less they like it and the more they oppose it. What this report says is that a shift away from employer-provided health insurance will be vastly greater than expected and will make sense for many companies and lower income workers alike.

When we work our way through this report, what we see is that more and more private companies that today—today—provide health insurance for their employees will be much less likely to be willing to provide that insurance in the future. Why? Because it is going to be a lot more expensive to provide the insurance. The mandates, the quality, and the high level of expense involved with providing that insurance is going to be a significant burden to those companies. And if they don't provide the insurance at all, there are going to be other chances for those employees and it will actually be cheaper for the business to not provide insurance, give the people a raise, and pay the penalty of the health care law and leave people without the insurance.

When we take a look at this overall health care law, we see it as one where this body and this President raided Medicare. They took $500 billion away from our seniors on Medicare, not to save Medicare but to start a whole new government program. With the President's Payment Advisory Board, he additionally wants to ration Medicare—ration Medicare. They have raided Medicare and rationed Medicare. Is it any surprise that people on Medicare are having a much harder time finding a doctor as doctors refuse to see patients on Medicare?

So with all of this, now we get this report. This report says—and this is a very reputable national consulting firm. This report says they did a survey of 1,300 employers across the country—different industries, different geographies, different employer sizes—and the results ought to be a huge wakeup call for all workers and all families across the country, because what this group has seen from this study is that overall, 30 percent of all employers—30 percent of all employers—will either definitely or probably—so likely—stop offering employer-sponsored health coverage in the years after 2014. That is when ObamaCare goes fully into effect.

Among employers with a high awareness of how the program actually works for health care reform—who have actually studied what the law says—in that group, those who are most well informed, they are saying more than 50 percent and upwards to 60 percent will pursue other options. They will likely stop offering their employees health coverage. At least 30 percent of the employers would gain economically from dropping coverage even if they completely compensated the employees for the change of losing their insurance. This is very alarming for our country.

There was a well-written editorial in yesterday's Wall Street Journal by Grace-Marie Turner, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. BARRASSO. Grace-Marie Turner is president of the Galen Institute and coauthor of a book called "Why ObamaCare Is Wrong For America." Having read the book, I will tell my colleagues a lot of the things I have been talking about during the debate leading up to the vote on ObamaCare and that I have been talking about afterwards as a doctor's second opinion are included in her book. She specifically writes that no, you can't keep your health insurance. There are about 150 million Americans who get their coverage at work. We are not talking about people on Medicare; we are talking about nonelderly Americans who get their coverage at work.

The Congressional Budget Office, when we were debating the health care law, estimated that maybe 9 million, 10 million of those people, or about 7 percent of the employees who currently get their health insurance through work, may lose their health insurance at work, in spite of the fact that the President said if you like what you have, you can keep it. But this survey of 1,300 different companies—organizations that provide health insurance—30 percent of them say I don't think we are going to follow that route. We are talking about a significantly larger number than the Congressional Budget Office had even anticipated. The numbers are astonishing.

In a study last year, Doug Holtz-Eakin, who is the former director of the Congressional Budget Office, estimated not what the current CBO said—maybe 10 million—he thought maybe 35 million workers would be moved out of employer-covered plans into subsidized coverage, paid for by the taxpayers, and he thought by getting to that number, it would add an additional $1 trillion to the estimate of what the real costs were going to be for the President's health care law. If these numbers are true, this newer, higher number of 30 percent pulling out—and maybe 50 percent once they find out what is actually in the law, in the mandates on these businesses—the additional costs, at a time when we are looking at 9.1 percent unemployment in this country, are going to go even higher with the significant subsidies that exist for families making up to $88,000 a year.

So I come to the floor to say that the more we learn about this health care law, the more unintended consequences we find; that many of the predictions made about this health care law from this side of the aisle are now coming true.

I have spoken in the past about waivers. We now are at a point where 3 million people who get their health insurance through work—3 million people covered with health insurance in this country—have gotten waivers. Whole States have gotten waivers so they don't have to live under the mandates of the health care law, and they are going to be back for waivers again next year and the year after that.

We see additional concern with what is in this health care law. As NANCY PELOSI said, first you have to pass it before you get to find out what is in it. As more and more people find out what is in it, we are finding that more and more people who maybe had coverage they liked are not going to be able to keep that coverage and are going to lose that coverage, and the taxpayers are going to get stuck footing the bill.

That is why I come back to the floor week after week with a doctor's second opinion, because there is new information that comes out week after week, as this McKinsey & Company study and report came out this week. That is why I continue to say we need to repeal and replace this terribly broken health care law.

Thank you.

With that, I yield the floor.

[From the Wall Street Journal]
NO, YOU CAN'T KEEP YOUR HEALTH INSURANCE

(By Grace-Marie Turner)

A new study by McKinsey suggests that as many as 78 million Americans could lose employer health coverage.

ObamaCare will lead to a dramatic decline in employer-provided health insurance—with as many as 78 million Americans forced to find other sources of coverage.

This disturbing finding is based on my calculations from a survey by McKinsey & Company. The survey, published this week in the McKinsey Quarterly, found that up to 50% of employers say they will definitely or probably pursue alternatives to their current health-insurance plan in the years after the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act takes effect in 2014. An estimated 156 million non-elderly Americans get their coverage at work, according to the Employee Benefit Research Institute.

Before the health law passed, the Congressional Budget Office estimated that only nine million to 10 million people, or about 7% of employees who currently get health insurance at work, would switch to government-subsidized insurance. But the McKinsey survey of 1,300 employers across industries, geographies and employer sizes found “that reform will provoke a much greater response” and concludes that the health overhaul law will lead to a “radical restructuring” of job-based health coverage.

Another McKinsey analyst, Alissa Meade, told a meeting of health-insurance executives last November that “something in the range of 80 million to 100 million individuals are going to change coverage categories in the two years” after the insurance mandates take effect in 2014.

Many employees who will need to seek another source of coverage will take advantage of the health-insurance subsidies for families making as much as $88,000 a year. This will drive up the cost of ObamaCare.

In a study last year, Douglas Holtz-Eakin, a former director of the Congressional Budget Office, estimated that an additional 35 million workers would be moved out of employer plans and into subsidized coverage, and that this would add about $1 trillion to the total cost of the president's health law over the next decade. McKinsey's survey implies that the cost to taxpayers could be significantly more.

The McKinsey study, “How US health care reform will affect employee benefits,” predicts that employers will either drop coverage altogether, offer defined contributions for insurance, or offer coverage only to certain employees. The study concludes that 30% of employers overall will definitely or probably stop offering health insurance to their workers. However, among employers with a high awareness of the health-reform law, this proportion increases to more than 50%.

The employer incentives to alter or cease coverage under the health-reform law are strong. According to the study, at least 30% of employers would gain economically from dropping coverage, even if they completely compensated employees for the change through other benefit offerings or higher salaries. That's because they no longer would be tethered to health-insurance costs that consistently rise faster than inflation.

Employers should think twice if they believe the fine for not offering coverage will stay unchanged at $2,000 per worker. “If many companies drop health insurance coverage, the government could increase the employer penalty or raise taxes,” according to the new study, authored by McKinsey consultants Shubham Singhal, Jeris Stueland and Drew Ungerman.

The case for repeal of ObamaCare grows stronger every year. The massive shift of health costs to taxpayers thanks to the disruption of employer-sponsored health insurance will add further to the burgeoning federal budget deficit. Congress can and must develop policies that allow the marketplace to evolve and not be forced into ObamaCare's regulatory straitjacket.

Mr. BARRASSO. I note the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRANKEN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

MONTANA FLOOD HEROES

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, the Book of Matthew, chapter 23, verses 11 and 12, reads:

The greatest among you will be your servant. For those who exalt themselves will be humbled, and those who humble themselves will be exalted.

I rise today to recognize five of Montana's greatest servants—five Montana heroes.

Our State has faced severe flooding, unrelenting flooding for the past several weeks. As water levels rise, Montanans across the State are stepping up to help. This is the essence of what it means to be a Montanan: stepping up to help fellow Montanans, ordinary folks doing extraordinary things for their friends and neighbors. We are all in this together.

That is why I have begun calling attention to the Montana heroes going above and beyond the call of duty in the floods we are experiencing in our State today.

I want to recognize Pastor Cathy Moorehead of the United Methodist Church and Father Daniel Wathan of Saint Benedict's Church of Roundup. Last week, Cathy and Daniel showed me the flood damage caused by rising waters from the nearby Musselshell River. Most of the town of Roundup has been underwater for days.

I remember many times I had gone to the Busy Bee Cafe in Roundup. Never in my wildest dreams did I ever think that restaurant might be underwater. A few days ago, it was. The floods have come back again. It is not entirely underwater, but so much of it is, it is virtually destroyed.

Cathy and Daniel took it upon themselves to make sure their neighbors had a hot meal, a dry place to sleep, medical care, and a shoulder to cry on—and it is food not only for those displaced by the floods but also for the National Guard so the National Guard does not have to eat all those rations they otherwise would have to eat.

I have talked to the Guard. They are so appreciative that they do not have to eat the food they otherwise had been given. Ask anyone around, and they will tell you Cathy and Daniel's outstanding efforts continue to be indispensable.

Floodwaters have returned to Round-up, and our prayers are with them all today.

This month, the Crow Indian Tribe also faced devastating floods. Rising water has severed food and water supplies. There is no drinking water. Rushing water has swept away bridges and streets.

As soon as the floodwaters struck the Crow Reservation, Crow Tribe member April Toineeta got to work. April worked with the Red Cross to set up shelter for flood victims. She made sure the Indian Health Service had the latest information about where medical care was most urgently needed. She was universally recognized as the go-to person for help. April, April Toineeta. April has been working 18-hour days, sleeping on the floor of the Crow Housing Authority, doing whatever it takes to help her community. April's hard work inspires all of us to help each other through the floods in any way we can.

When Box Elder Creek burst its banks, floodwaters destroyed the Harris family home north of Mill Iron, just outside of Ekalaka. Neighbors Charlie and Gail Brence hopped on four-wheelers and went to rescue the Harris family of seven. When they arrived, the Harris home was under 6 feet of water, rapidly rising. They offered the Harris family a warm and safe place to stay, a shoulder to cry on, and a helping hand as they worked to save their cattle and salvage personal belongings from the destroyed home. Gail Brence said: "We're Montanans. This is what we do."

Pastor Cathy, Father Dan, April, and Charlie and Gail are the best of the best Montana has to offer. They represent our can-do attitude, our willingness to help our neighbor. Our belief is that when times are tough, we know we are the strongest when we work together.

There are hundreds of other unsung heroes across Montana. I am calling on all Montanans to share their stories of ordinary folks doing extraordinary things for their friends and neighbors, whether on Facebook or call my office. We want to hear these inspiring stories. We want to share them.

You know, some folks in our State say—and it is somewhat true—that Montana is really one big town. We tend to know each other. We are big in area, few in people. But we tend to know each other, about one or two degrees of separation. We are really one big small town. We are there to help each other.

In closing, I wish to share a humble thank-you for all Montana's heroes back home. I do not know what we would do without you. Thank you for your service.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

FLOODING IN MISSOURI

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. President, Missouri has withstood a number of tremendous natural disasters this spring. In fact, the flood our good friend from Montana just talked about is headed down the Missouri River from Montana, to the Dakotas, to Missouri right now.

We have had floods along the Mississippi. We have had floods of the Black River that required the evacuation of part of Poplar Bluff, MO. We have had tornadoes in both St. Louis and Joplin and now, as I said, the Missouri River floods.

The Missouri River flood is beginning to reflect what has happened upstream with the above-normal snowpack that we do not see much of, but we see it when it melts in the spring. And high rainfall amounts this spring have made the difference in what is happening in our State.

The flooding along the Missouri River, which is about to get to crisis stage, will now join floods along the Mississippi River, the Black River, and tornadoes in St. Louis and Joplin. River levels are expected to rise near record levels and remain there until early or mid-August. This, of course, will put a tremendous pressure on our levee system. The estimates I heard this week were that between now and 2 weeks from today, there will be at least two dozen levees underwater, which means the water will have gotten high enough to come over the tops of these levees, and maybe over 50 levees on the Missouri River before it gets to St. Louis will be underwater and will have water on both sides of them until well into the summer. Of course, that begins to undermine the very basis of the levee itself when it stands in water on both sides.

The Corps and local sponsors are working to reinforce the levees along the Missouri River. We see that the Department of Agriculture and the Corps also have to get engaged to get the damaged land cleared and rehabilitated for all this levee protection to be restored.

There is some discussion on the opening of the levee in the boot heel, a place called Birds Point. That had been the plan, to open that levee in a flood disaster, since 1937, but it had not happened since 1937.

Mr. President, 130,000 additional acres of farmland means at this moment we probably have 500,000 acres of farmland—a little more than that—underwater, and that number will be much higher than that by this time next week. But that 130,000 acres at Birds Point will still be underwater most of next year unless the Corps goes back in, as they committed they would, and gets a temporary levee that becomes a permanent levee in as soon as possible.

We also cannot underestimate—and it would be hard to even overestimate—the challenges Joplin, MO, faces, a city in which the death toll from the tornadoes has now exceeded any tornado in the last 50 years. I think the mid-1950s was the last time this much loss of life occurred in a tornado.

I live about 60 miles from Joplin in Springfield, MO. I represented both Joplin and Springfield in the House of Representatives for 14 years. I had an office in Joplin. I have been there literally hundreds of times. And as a southwest Missourian, I have seen lots of tornado damage, but I have never seen anything like this damage.

I went to the area Tuesday after the tornado hit over the weekend. I think the tornado hit on Sunday afternoon late. I was there most of the day Tuesday. I was riding with a veteran police sergeant down streets that both he and I had been down many times, and neither of us could ever really tell quite where we were because the devastation was that great. Every street looked like the street next to it. The buildings were ground up. The 2 by 4s had become toothpicks. It was almost unrecognizable.

This same tornado, if it would have hit and stayed on the ground for 6 miles in an area of farmland, would have done some damage, but there would not have been nearly as much damage. As it happened, it ripped through the city of Joplin in a swath that was at least half a mile wide and in some places three-quarters of a mile wide. It stayed on the ground for 6 miles and destroyed approximately 30 percent of the buildings in a town of 50,000 people. There were 141 people killed, including those who in the hospitals from injuries since the tornado, because of the tornado. More than 900 people were injured, and 8,000 homes and apartments were destroyed. And I think here the word "destroyed" is the right word. Others were damaged; these were destroyed. Mr. President, 8,000 places where people lived 3 weeks ago aren't there today, and more than 500 commercial properties were demolished by this devastating tornado.

Homes, churches, the high school, the vo-tech school, three elementary schools, and the Catholic school at all levels are all gone, and then other schools were damaged. How you get back to school in August and September of this year with those schools gone is a huge challenge, one that a community would assume it would never have to meet, but the community has been meeting it, as have people from all over the country and particularly from our State.

Rescue efforts, led by groups such as Missouri Task Force 1 and other public safety officials—fire departments, law enforcement, medical personnel, the volunteers—have up until now been tireless, but I can tell you they are getting pretty tired.

People in Missouri and across America have been overwhelmingly generous with their time and resources in the aftermath of this storm, and all Missourians are grateful for it. Large corporations and small community organizations and individuals have helped. People have responded to calls on the phone by doing whatever they were asked to do to make a small donation.

The General Motors Foundation announced a $100,000 grant to the Red Cross, along with two vehicles, full-sized vans, and free access to their OnStar service after the disaster.

The Ford Motor Company donated another $50,000 to Feeding America for Joplin, and their employees in the Kansas City plant are assisting as volunteers in relief efforts.

Walmart committed $1 million.

Home Depot and Walmart both had—there was a Walmart supercenter and a Home Depot store that were totally demolished, 100-percent demolished. In both cases, they had late-Sunday-afternoon shoppers in them.

In one store was a man and his 4-year-old and 1-year-old. I am not sure they were on the way to the Home Depot, but at the last minute they were running into the Home Depot, thinking that would be the safest place to be, and those big concrete walls collapsed inward, and the mom who sent them to get lightbulbs or whatever she had sent them to get never saw those three people who were so much of her life before.

The St. Louis Cardinals donated $25,000 to Convoy of Hope.

The Kansas City Royals and Kansas City Chiefs each gave $35,000 to Heart to Heart International.

Duracell opened a Power Relief Trailer.

Tide opened a Loads of Hope location, offering laundry services for the thousands of affected families.

Heart of Missouri United Way collected over $1 million and pledged that 100 percent of those funds that were raised in that drive would go to Joplin.

Target contributed $95,000 to relief.

AT&T and Verizon both gave $50,000.

Sprint, a Missouri company, a Kansas City area-based company, gave $100,000.

TAMKO gave $1 million. Their headquarters are in Joplin. Their headquarters were not affected, but many of their employees were.

Loves Travel Shop gave $150,000.

Great Southern and Southwest Missouri Bank both donated $10,000.

The Girl Scouts in Houston, MO, were collecting toys for the children of Joplin who had lost their toys.

The University of Missouri produced a tornado relief t-shirt with the slogan "One State. One Spirit. One Mizzou."

The Mizzou football team and D. Rowe's Restaurant partnered to fill a semi truck of groceries and other items to send to the location.

The American Red Cross, the Harvesters Community Food Network, sent 14,000 ready-to-eat meals.

The Kansas Speedway and the Highway Roadhouse and Kitchen collected items for victims.

The Ozarks Technical Community College is collecting funds to help people.

The students in a high school in St. Louis, which had its own tornado, sent things to Joplin as well.

FEMA is doing what it can.

We need to prioritize spending.

As I reach the conclusion of my remarks and mention the people who need to be mentioned—I sent President Obama a letter. I spoke with Secretary Napolitano shortly after this disaster insisting that the Federal Government do what we did in Katrina and reimburse taxpayers for their expenses at the 100-percent level. We have gone from 75 to 90, so only 10 percent more, and I will be happy with that number. Mr. President, 75 percent was the first number discussed, but we are at 90 now. The Federal Government needs to do this. And local utility companies need to get the same kind of assistance others have had in similar disasters.

In all cases, the first responders were people's neighbors. Their neighbors will still be there 6 months later when people are still struggling.

But with thanks to everyone who has helped, with appreciation for the Federal employees who have been there and absolute insistence that we do everything we need to do to treat this disaster as it needs to be treated because it truly is a disaster, I will be working with everything we can find to make this situation a challenge the community can meet.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that after I am recognized, Senator WHITEHOUSE be recognized—we are speaking on the same topic—for up to 10 minutes and, at the conclusion of that time, Senator ALEXANDER from Tennessee be recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

350TH ANNIVERSARY OF BLOCK ISLAND, RHODE ISLAND

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise today along with my colleague, Senator WHITEHOUSE, to help mark the 350th anniversary of the settlement of Block Island, RI.

Block Island sits 12 miles south of coastal Rhode Island, and for over three centuries has contributed to the economic and ecological vitality of my home State. It has a rich history.

In 1614, the Dutch merchant and explorer Adriaen Block charted the Island, which is named for him.

In 1661 colonists from Massachusetts sailed to Block Island and established a community that would later become the town of New Shoreham.

During the Revolutionary War, Block Islanders warned American soldiers of approaching British ships by lighting fires on Beacon Hill, the island's highest point. And, over the past 200 years, Block Island has constructed two lighthouses that have provided safe passage for countless sailors and travelers.

Today, Block Island is home to over 1,000 permanent residents and welcomes up to 20,000 visitors each day during tourist season.

Block Island has been graced by visits by two sitting Presidents—President Ulysses S. Grant in 1875 and in 1999 by President William Jefferson Clinton. I was pleased to have guided President Clinton as well as First Lady Hillary Clinton, who is now Secretary of State, around the Mohegan Bluffs and the historic Southeast Lighthouse, which overlooks the Atlantic Ocean, during their visit.

Throughout the years, the local community has worked hard to preserve the Island's natural beauty and landmarks. In the 1980s and early 1990s Captain John R. Lewis, a Block Island resident known to all as Rob, spearheaded a campaign to save the Southeast Lighthouse, which was threatened by an eroding shoreline. With a coalition of friends and local residents, Rob worked to secure nearly $1 million in Federal funding and he persuaded Block Islanders to help raise $270,000 through donations.

I must also applaud the efforts of John Chafee and Claiborne Pell, my predecessors—particularly Senator Chafee—who worked hard to ensure support for the movement of the Southeast Lighthouse. Their efforts, in conjunction with Federal and State leaders, saved this historic landmark, which still stands today.

Block Island is not only unique for its rich history; it also has a beautiful landscape.

Over 40 percent of the Island is now preserved land. The Island boasts dramatic bluffs, pristine beaches, and 25 miles of public hiking trails. Over 40 kinds of endangered species call Block Island home and thousands of migratory birds pass through each year making this a truly exceptional place.

Indeed, Block Island was included on the Nature Conservancy's list of "Last Great Places." This honor identifies sites in the Western Hemisphere with significant biodiversity and ecosystems with rare or endangered species.

Generations of Block Islanders have preserved what the Narragansett Indian tribe called "God's Little Island." As we celebrate the 350th anniversary of Block Island's settlement, it is fitting that we recognize and congratulate Block Islanders for all of their efforts to preserve one of our country's most treasured places.

I yield to Senator WHITEHOUSE.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Mr. President, I rise today to join my colleague Senator REED in commemorating the 350th anniversary of Block Island and thank him for his leadership in this moment of recognition.

Every Rhode Islander can recall their first trip to Block Island. For most it starts with a drive down to Galilee where countless visitors have boarded the Block Island ferries—the Carol Jean, the Block Island, and the Anna C. The ride from Galilee lasts about an hour, winding out of the Pt. Judith harbor of refuge and into the open ocean. And as the mainland—with all its cares and concerns—slips away off the stern a small speck on the horizon ahead grows larger with each passing minute. Soon the great bluffs of the island come into view, followed by the friendly hustle and bustle of Old Harbor.

As the ferry pulls into dock, the full scene unfolds: the National Hotel, Ballard's Inn, the docks and moorings, and all the shops and restaurants along Water Street. As you step ashore, you can't help but feel enchanted by the scene. A mere 12 miles separate the island from the mainland of our Ocean State, but it can easily seem a world away.

Generations of young Rhode Islanders have made that trip, and most of them will continue returning, year after year, only to find with a sigh of relief that the scene is just as they left it. It is no wonder that the Nature Conservancy has named Block Island as one of the Earth's "Last Great Places."

Formed by a receding glacier thousands of years ago, the land was first inhabited by the Narragansett Indians, who named their home "Island of the Little God." It took its modern name from Adrian Block, a Dutch explorer who charted the island in 1614. It was later settled by a group of families from Massachusetts in 1661—350 years ago this year. In the centuries since, Block Island has been occupied by British Redcoats during the War of 1812, served as home to artillery spotters in World War II, and become a favorite destination for sailors, fishermen, and families across the region.

Today the island is a mainstay of Rhode Island's tourism industry. The Southeast Lighthouse is one of the many "must-see's" for Ocean State tourists, right up there with historic Newport and Slater Mill. And the jobs generated by Block Island—from the ferry workers to the shop owners—are a real help to our economy in these tough times.

Today I join with Senator REED to commemorate 350 years of history for the people of New Shoreham. Congratulations on this historic milestone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

RIGHT-TO-WORK LAW

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. President, next Tuesday, the Nation's largest exporter and employer of more than 150,000 Americans will be appearing before an administrative judge in Seattle to defend itself against a claim brought by the acting general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, NLRB. The claim is that a corporate decision to expand production of its next generation airliner in South Carolina, a right-to-work State, was a violation of Federal labor law.

Since 1947, Federal law has affirmed the right of States to enact what we call right-to-work laws, which prevent unions and employers from requiring employees to join a union, as well as pay dues or fees, in order to obtain or keep their job.

In Tennessee, for example, manufacturers such as Nissan, Volkswagen, and General Motors have built factories and increased their production of cars made and sold in the United States, in large part due to the environment offered by Tennessee's right-to-work law.

The President recently visited a Chrysler plant in Toledo, OH, where he stated that the auto bailout helped to restore the American automobile industry. I respectfully disagree. I think that what restored the American automobile industry was the right-to-work laws in 22 States, by creating a more competitive environment in those 22 States, as well as in the Midwest and other States where the laws don't exist, and permitting manufacturers to be able to make the cars and trucks in the United States that they sell in the United States.

Unfortunately, American companies and our 22 right-to-work States are under assault from a government agency that is driven by an antibusiness, antigrowth, and antijobs agenda. This may be the most important battle over labor laws in the United States today. That is why Senator GRAHAM, Senator DEMINT, and I—actually, we have 35 Senators cosponsoring the bill—introduced legislation to preserve the law's current protection of state right-to-work laws and prevent the NLRB from moving forward in their case against this company and others.

The Job Protection Act will prevent the NLRB from ordering a company to relocate jobs, will guarantee employer rights to decide where to do business, and will protect employer free speech associated with the costs and benefits of a unionized workforce.

The company that will be tried on Tuesday is Boeing—a solid and upstanding American success story. Over the last century, Boeing has built the passenger planes that allow Americans to travel the world; built the warplanes and weaponry that enable our soldiers, sailors, marines, and airmen to defend freedom; built the spacecrafts that send our astronauts into orbit and to the Moon; and built the satellites that deliver communications around the globe.

Boeing's newest commercial passenger airliner is the 787 Dreamliner. It is a shining example of American innovation and entrepreneurship. It has been designed with a paramount focus on efficiency and performance, to allow a mid-sized aircraft to travel as far as a jumbo jet, while using 20 percent less fuel and producing 20 percent less emissions than today's similarly sized aircraft, and while traveling at roughly the same speed as a 747 or 777.

It has also been a tremendous commercial success despite these difficult economic times. Since 2004, 56 customers, spanning 6 continents, have placed orders for 835 Dreamliners, valued at $162 billion.

President Obama has recognized the leadership of this company. He named the chief executive officer of Boeing, Mr. Jim McNerney, as cochairman of the President's Export Council. And more recently, he nominated Mr. John Bryson, who serves on the Boeing Board of Directors, to be the Nation's Commerce Secretary.

The Dreamliner's success prompted Boeing to decide in 2009—2 years ago—to establish a second assembly line for the airliner in South Carolina. This is in addition to its current assembly line in Washington State. South Carolina is a right-to-work State and Washington is not.

On Tuesday, the NLRB acting general counsel will ask an administrative judge in Seattle to stop Boeing from expanding production in South Carolina, arguing that the decision was made in retaliation for past strikes by union employees in Washington. That claim ignores these facts: No union jobs are being lost here; nobody is being demoted; no personnel are being moved; and no benefits, salaries, or work hours are being cut back as a result of this expansion. It further ignores the fact that Boeing's decision was announced, as I have said, nearly 2 years ago.

Down in South Carolina, 1,200 construction jobs have been created and over 500 new workers have been hired by Boeing to work at this assembly plant, which is supposed to open next month, in July. At the same time, Boeing has actually added 2,000 new jobs in Washington State since the announced expansion in South Carolina. That is 2,000 new union jobs in Washington State.

South Carolina, of course, is a right-to-work State, where employees may choose to join or not join the union. Suspending Boeing's expansion will result in billions of dollars of lost economic development and jobs to that State. But, the NLRB's acting general counsel doesn't seem to care about these facts, or the impact of this case on those jobs. Recently, several Boeing employees in South Carolina, whose jobs are hanging in the balance, asked to intervene in the case. The acting general counsel opposed the request, stating that "these Boeing employees in South Carolina have no cognizable interest in participating in the proceeding sufficient to justify their intervention."

It is hard to imagine anybody with a more direct interest in this than the Boeing workers in South Carolina.

Facts like these don't seem to matter when you have an agenda. This case is about more than airplanes, more than Boeing, and more than South Carolina. This case is about the future of our economy and our competitiveness as a nation. It is the latest attempt by this administration to chip away at right-to-work laws, to change the rules and give unions more leverage over employers, and to allow politically influenced bureaucrats in Washington determine the means of production for private industry in the United States.

If the acting general counsel's request is affirmed following next week's hearing, it will be prima facie illegal for a company that has experienced repeated strikes to move production to a State with a right-to-work law. The CEO of Boeing pointed out that this will not only hurt the 22 right-to-work States. It will also hurt States that do not have right-to-work laws. Those non-right-to-work States will suffer because a company that operates in their State and is unionized will effectively be prevented from growing or expanding to a right-to-work State, therefore hindering the ability of any State to attract new manufacturers and create new jobs.

So, instead of making it easier and cheaper to create jobs in the United States, manufacturers will be further incentivized to expand or open new facilities in Mexico, China, or India to meet their growing needs. Boeing and its 787 Dreamliner are shining examples of what is right in America and what is necessary to rebuild and grow our country's economy.

This new jetliner assembly plant in South Carolina is the first one to be built in the U.S. in 40 years. We need to remember that Boeing sells airplanes everywhere in the world and it can make airplanes anywhere in the world. But, we would like for Boeing and other manufacturers to make in the United States what they sell in the United States, so that jobs can stay and grow in this country, instead of moving overseas.

As this Administration's Commerce Secretary, Gary Locke, correctly observed in his March testimony before the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation:

Manufacturing is essential to America's economic competitiveness. . . . [it] is a vital source of good middle-class jobs. It is a key driver of innovation.

With 9.1 percent unemployment, with a soft economy, government and Washington must allow manufacturers such as Boeing to prosper, innovate, and create jobs. We need to make it easier and cheaper for those manufacturers to make in the United States what they sell in the United States.

Expanding new production lines in South Carolina was a business decision made by Boeing's executives and board members, on behalf of their shareholders, who believed it was in the company's best interests. As I mentioned, those board members and executives are well respected, including by the President of the United States, who has invited many them to be a part of his Administration.

But under this Administration, the NLRB Acting General Counsel seems only concerned about the interests and agenda of organized labor—an agenda that has been soundly rejected by the vast majority of private sector workers in both right-to-work and non-right-to-work States across the country in recent years.

All eyes will be on Seattle next Tuesday, when one of our Nation's greatest assets and contributors to our economic future will be put on trial for investing, creating, and innovating at a time when we are in the middle of an economic recession. This will be a true test of whether manufacturers are able to make in the United States what they sell in the United States, or whether they will be encouraged to make overseas what they sell in the United States. It will test whether they put jobs over there, instead of creating them here. And it will test whether the Administration's economic policy is exporting airplanes or exporting jobs.

Mr. President, I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BEGICH). Without objection, it is so ordered.

GLOBAL WARMING

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Mr. President, I am here this afternoon because, on May 12, 2011, the National Academy of Sciences released a significant report entitled "America's Climate Choices." In 2007, Congress directed the academy to write this report. The researchers who contributed to the report include scientists, economists, and policymakers from world-class institutions such as the Oak Ridge National Laboratory, DuPont, and MIT. The list of the States from which the committee comes is very broad: California—scientists came from—North Carolina, Maryland, Georgia, Virginia, Michigan, Wyoming, Washington State, Tennessee, Arizona, Missouri, Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Colorado, and Texas. The report was peer reviewed.

I ask unanimous consent that at the end of my remarks the list of the committee, which is page V of the report, be printed as an exhibit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1)

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. The report was peer reviewed by academic reviewers from such universities as Stanford, the University of Texas, the University of South Carolina, Harvard, and Carnegie Mellon. Yet this significant report, requested by Congress, drafted by experts, peer reviewed by science, has fallen on deaf ears in our Nation's Capital. Why is this? Is it because the report addresses a problem we have already solved? No. Is it because the report tells us not to worry? No; it is not that either. The report, "America's Climate Choices," adds to the body of climate science evidence and reflects the clear consensus of the scientific community, which is that carbon pollution is creating dangers across our planet and must be addressed if we are to avoid its most disastrous consequences.

These are the facts in the report:

Climate change is occurring. It is very likely caused by human activities and poses significant risks for a broad range of human and natural systems.

Are we prepared for these significant risks? No, we are not, concludes the report. I quote again:

The United States lacks an overarching national strategy to respond to climate change.

The report warns further:

Waiting for unacceptable impacts to occur before taking action is imprudent because the effects of greenhouse gas emissions do not fully manifest themselves for decades and, once manifested . . . will persist for hundreds or even thousands of years.

Starkly, the report calls on us now to begin mobilizing for adaptation. The precise quote: "Begin mobilizing now for adaptation."

The report is an urgent call to action by a widespread group of our most responsible scientists, peer reviewed by our most responsible universities. Why, then, is it being ignored? I believe many of my colleagues are ignoring this report because they are hoping this problem of carbon pollution changing the atmosphere and the climate of our planet will go away. They are hoping that somehow, if we don't discuss it—indeed, if we deny it—climate change will not happen. If we ignore the laws of physics and chemistry and biology, those laws may cease to apply to us. We can repeal a lot of laws in this Senate, but we cannot repeal the laws of nature, and we are fools to ignore them.

Some even attack the underlying science; this is a strategy that is as old as industry reaction to science industry does not like. A recent book looked at the EPA efforts to protect us from secondhand smoke at a time when the tobacco industry wanted the unregulated ability to smoke and did not want people protected from secondhand smoke and pretended secondhand smoke was not dangerous. The writers conclude:

Most of the science upon which the EPA relied with respect to secondhand smoke was independent, so attacks on the EPA wouldn't work alone. They have to be coupled with attacks on the science itself.

A memo from Philip Morris's communications director, Victor Han, said the following:

Without a major concentrated effort to expose the scientific weaknesses of the EPA case, without an effort to build considerable reasonable doubt, then virtually all other efforts will be significantly diminished in effectiveness.

In other words, in order to create doubt, they had to attack the science directly, and they have done so, to the point where Mr. Han said the EPA is an agency that is, at least, misguided and aggressive and, at worst, corrupt and controlled by environmental terrorists.

So it is not a news story for industry to try to deny the science that shows the danger of what an industry is providing. But these attacks simply will not stand. The facts are too strong against them.

Over the last 800,000 years, Earth's atmosphere has contained CO<sub>2</sub> levels of 170 to 300 parts per million. That is solid science. That is a fact. That is not a theory. It is not in dispute. That is the range within which humankind has lived for 8,000 centuries. By the way, it is not clear that 8,000 centuries ago mankind had yet mastered the art of controlling fire. Essentially, the entirety of human history has taken place within that bandwidth of 170 to 300 parts per million of carbon dioxide in our atmosphere.

In 1863, the Irish scientist John Tyndall determined that carbon dioxide in the atmosphere trapped heat and trapped more heat as the concentration of carbon dioxide increases. That is textbook science. It has been textbook science for generations. That is not in dispute either.

Since the Industrial Revolution, our industrialized societies had burned carbon fuels in measurable amounts, usually measured as gigatons or metric tons. A gigaton, by the way, is a billion, with a B, metric tons. We now release, depending on the year, up to 7 or 8 gigatons—7 or 8 billion metric tons—each year. That is not in dispute either.

We now measure carbon concentrations going up in the Earth's atmosphere. Again, that is a measurement. This is not a theory. The present concentration exceeds 390 parts per million. Remember, for 8,000 centuries, humanity has existed in a bandwidth of 170 to 300 parts per million, and we are now at 390 parts per million—well outside the bounds we have inhabited for the last 800,000 years. That also is not in dispute. That is a fact.

"America's Climate Choices" documents the changes in climate that have already been observed and measured in the United States. Again, not theory but documented, measured, and observed. These are also not in dispute. Over the past 50 years, our U.S. average air temperature has increased by more than two degrees Fahrenheit. Our total U.S. precipitation has increased, on average, by about 5 percent. Sea levels have risen along most of the U.S. coasts. Heavy downpours have become more frequent and more intense in the Southeastern and Western United States and the frequency of large wildfires and the length of the fire season have increased substantially in both the Western United States and in the Presiding Officer's home State of Alaska.

If we take a look at the increase in carbon concentrations in our atmosphere, they can be plotted. Today is one of the last days our pages are with us after many months, and they have been here in school in the very early mornings. They have been learning mathematics, and it wouldn't surprise me if our pages were able to take a series of points and plot a trajectory off of those points. That is not a complicated scientific endeavor. If we plot the trajectory of our carbon concentration, it puts us at 688 parts per million in the year 2095, and 1,097 parts per million in the year 2195. That is a pretty long way off, but when we think that for 800,000 years we have inhabited a planet in which the carbon concentration in the atmosphere was between 170 and 700 parts per million and in a matter of a century and a little more we will have more than doubled that concentration and another century hence another 300 points up, that is a very significant—indeed, an epic—shift. These carbon concentrations are outside the bounds not of the last 8,000 centuries but of millions of years of this planet's history.

The National Academy of Science report warns us this way as well:

In addition to the potential impacts that we are able to identify, there is a real possibility of impacts that have not been anticipated.

Let me say that again:

In addition to the potential impacts that we are able to identify, there is a real possibility of impacts that have not been anticipated.

When we travel outside a range that has protected our species and our planet for 8,000 centuries, we create forces that are hard to anticipate and, consequently, could create dangers that are hard to anticipate.

This National Academy of Sciences report does not just stop at cataloging the effects of climate change, however. As requested by Congress and as indicated by the report's title—"America's Climate Choices"—the report lays out the choices we have moving forward, if only we will acknowledge the facts of this problem and act responsibly.

The laws of nature, of course, do not care if we are paying attention. Climate change is happening and it poses grave risks to us and it will go forward whether or not we choose to acknowledge it. As I said earlier, we can do a lot of repealing of laws in this Senate, but we don't get to repeal the laws of nature. There are real risks we are facing, but there are also many positive reasons we should address the problem of carbon pollution. Developing clean and truly renewable energy sources and working to run our American businesses more efficiently will help us retain our economic leadership in the global marketplace, and that means jobs for Americans.

Here is the report again on the potential harm to our economy if we don't invest in a clean energy future:

The European Union has already increased its reliance on renewable energy and put a price on CO<sub>2</sub> emissions from major sources without detectable adverse economic effects. China has placed low carbon and clean energy industries at the heart of the country's strategy for industrial growth, and is making large scale public investments (for instance, in "smart grid" energy transmission systems) to support this growth. . . . Firms operating in the United States could find themselves increasingly out of step with the rest of the world and without the same robust domestic markets for climate-friendly products. Moreover, U.S. firms in energy-intensive sectors could be disadvantaged relative to their more energy efficient foreign competitors if energy prices rise in coming decades. . . .

That is no idle speculation. We are already seeing the United States fall behind in clean energy technologies. We invented the first solar cell. We now rank fifth among the countries that manufacture solar components—fifth. The United States has only 1 of the top 10 companies manufacturing solar energy components and only 1 of the top 10 companies manufacturing wind turbines.

Half of America's installed wind turbines were manufactured overseas. Portsmouth, RI, has installed two wind turbines. One was manufactured by a Danish company. The other was manufactured by an Austrian company, its components delivered to Rhode Island by a Canadian distributor. Imagine if we drove demand for domestic manufacturing of wind turbines, of solar cells and panels, of rechargeable batteries. Imagine the people we could put back to work, the factories we could reopen, the energy this growth would infuse into our economy.

The new energy economy that beckons us has been described in congressional testimony as bigger than the tech revolution that brought us our laptops and our iPads and these BlackBerries, and the Internet services that are now such an important part of our daily lives, whether we Twitter or go on eBay or shop Amazon or do Facebook. In 15 years, that Internet grew from nothing to a $1 trillion economy—a $1 trillion economy. By comparison, the global energy economy is $6 trillion. We do not, as a country, want to fall out of the race to control that new energy economy. Yet that is exactly what we are doing.

America designed much of the underlying energy technology the world is using. But other countries have set smart policies and provided financial incentives to their industries, and now they are pulling away from us in bringing those new technologies to market. A $6 trillion market, and our foreign competitors are pulling away from us in bringing our own technologies to that market. Our competitors are seizing the advantage in the development and deployment of new energy technologies, and we are letting them.

But we can still change this trajectory. We can face up to the facts of climate change, see the opportunity in that looming threat, strengthen our economy, and create jobs. The National Academy of Sciences report is just one more reminder of this historic charge to our Congress—a historic charge at which right now we are failing in our duty.

I thank the Presiding Officer.

I yield the floor.

FLANDERS FIELD ADDRESS

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. President, on May 29 our colleague, the senior Senator from Vermont, commemorated Memorial Day with a visit to Flanders Field American Cemetery and Memorial in Waregem, Belgium. The Flanders region, of course, was made famous by Canadian physician and LTC John McCrae, who wrote the poem "In Flanders Fields" on May 3, 1915, after he witnessed the death of his friend, LT Alexis Helmer, 22 years old, the day before. While Senator LEAHY visited the cemetery, which serves as a resting place for many American soldiers killed during World War I, he made brief but eloquent remarks in honor of those brave men and women who have made the ultimate sacrifice for freedom and justice. His remarks follow and I commend them to my colleagues and everyone else who reads the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a most fitting Memorial Day tribute:

We are gathered in a cemetery consecrated by the sacrifice of soldiers of our countries who died in the final days of what, in their time, was called the "Great War" and "The War To End All Wars."

It was a battle so fierce that almost a century later, as we gaze across their places of rest, we can still feel their valor and their anguish. These crosses, row on row, carry remembrance forward, and so does the annual reappearance of the poppies in these fields.

Like the Vermonters who have fallen in Afghanistan and Iraq, and their numberless comrades in conflicts before and after the strife of these nearby battlefields, these brave soldiers made no appointment with death. We hail these fallen patriots for braving the violence and tragedy of war.

But more than that, we honor our fallen here because they sacrificed all for a cause larger than themselves—defending humanity, freedom, and the ties of family and friendship that irrevocably bind our countries together.

They were of a generation of Americans, Belgians, British, and French who fought, shoulder to shoulder, and gave their all so we and others could live in freedom.

Four of them were sons of the states of Alabama and Iowa, which two of my Senate colleagues, who are here today, represent.

I am the second United States senator to speak at this solemn resting place. The first was Senator Francis Ryan Duffy of the state of Wisconsin, who came to dedicate the chapel, 74 years ago.

It is worth recalling what Senator Duffy said here in 1937, as the spreading shadow of war was once again darkening Europe:

He said:

"If the boys who are buried out here could sit up in their graves and speak to us today, it would be to give voice to the agonizing question—'Cannot some other means be found to settle international disputes?'"

Just two years later the world was plunged into the Second World War, and every generation of Americans since has known war's brutality.

Across the globe, in the century since then, innocent civilians increasingly have joined the ranks of those in uniform as the victims of war.

Over the years, standing with families from Vermont as they bid farewell to loved ones sent away to fight, I have seen the terrible costs: wives and children left alone, parents who must bury a child.

Lives with so much possibility suddenly cut short, as were those of the soldiers we honor here.

The men who sacrificed everything at Flanders Field—and who are commemorated so vividly through Colonel John McCrae's poetic tribute, heard 'round the world—believed that some things are worth fighting for.

They knew that vanquishing tyranny, and defending the ideals our countries share, were among them. Of course those same values are worth pursuing peacefully. Our obligation to our fallen, and to all of humanity, is to use every peaceful means at our disposal before committing any of our countrymen to battle.

We are here today to solemnly affirm that we remember their sacrifice, and that we will never forget.

RECOGNIZING THE CARBONE AUTO GROUP

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I would like to bring to the Senate's attention the hard work, dedication, and perseverance of the Carbone Auto Group in Bennington, VT. The Carbone Auto Group is celebrating its recent showroom expansion, where they have merged their Ford, Hyundai, Honda, and Toyota dealerships.

From its first garage in 1933, to its 25 franchises currently running across Vermont and central New York, the Carbone Auto Group is an award-winning business that has garnered many regional and national accolades. Approaching eight decades in business, the Carbone Auto Group deserves recognition for its diligence in running such a prosperous family-owned business. The company's longevity and success is a testament to its dedicated staff members and management—particularly the founding partners, Joe Carbone and Phil Sacco. The hub of the auto group, Don-Al Management Company, Inc., is now managed by third-generation family members Joe, Don, Jr., Enessa, and Alex.

The Carbone Auto Group has helped hundreds of Vermonters purchase vehicles over the years, and it has created numerous Vermont jobs. I am pleased to see this local business celebrate its recent expansion, and I wish them continued success in the future.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

REMEMBERING JAMES J. HAGGERTY

• Mr. CASEY. Mr. President, today I wish to pay tribute to the late James J. Haggerty of Dunmore, PA. Jim was my good friend and on Sunday, June 12, he would have celebrated his 75th birthday. He died this past February 8.

Jim and his wife Celia were married for 40 years and they were the parents of seven loving children: Jean, Mauri, James, Matthew, Cecelia, Daniel and Kathleen.

Jim was raised in Dunmore and graduated from Scranton Preparatory School. After graduating from the College of the Holy Cross in 1957, Jim graduated with honors from Georgetown Law School. He returned home to northeastern Pennsylvania to become the first law clerk to U.S. District Court Judge William J. Nealon. Jim's passion for public service led him to run for Congress in 1964 and State senate in 1966. While he was not successful in those campaigns, Jim was undeterred in his efforts to serve the people of Pennsylvania. For the next 40 years, he was a close friend and an ever-faithful supporter of my father Robert P. Casey and me in all of our campaigns for public office in Pennsylvania. Jim was a brilliant lawyer and he had a very successful law practice in Scranton for many years.

When my father was elected Governor in 1986, Jim came to Harrisburg to serve the people, first as secretary of the Commonwealth and then as general counsel. Jim's friendship and counsel served Governor Casey well during his two terms. He handled his responsibilities with integrity and a deep commitment to public service. He believed, as the Scriptures tell us, that "to whom much is given, much is expected."

After his years in State government, Jim welcomed me as a law partner. He mentored me in life as much as in the law. He understood the call to serve and supported me generously when I decided to seek public office.

Jim's life was a life of hard work and service, faith and family. No personal or professional accomplishments outweighed the love he had for Celia, his children and 18 grandchildren.

While we are all saddened that we cannot spend his birthday with him, we will be comforted that he leaves us his example. As his good friend Frank J. McDonnell said at Jim's funeral mass, Jim embodied the words from scripture that "a faithful friend is a sturdy shelter; he who finds one has found a treasure." For my family and many others in northeastern Pennsylvania, Jim Haggerty was our faithful friend and, for his family, a sturdy shelter of caring and love.

Happy Birthday, Jim. We miss you every day.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD the Scranton Times obituary from February 11–13, 2011.

The information follows.

JAMES J. HAGGERTY

Attorney James J. Haggerty of Dunmore died Tuesday in Naples, Fla. His wife is the former Cecelia Lynett. The couple would have celebrated 45 years of marriage on Feb. 19.

Born in Scranton, son of the late James J. and Margaret Kearney Haggerty Cummings, he was a graduate of Scranton Preparatory School, the College of the Holy Cross and Georgetown University Law Center, where he was a member of the Law Review. He received honorary degrees from Villanova University and the University of Scranton. Jim served active duty in the Army Infantry and as a member of the Pennsylvania National Guard and Army Reserve. Jim served as law clerk to the Honorable William J. Nealon, chief judge, U.S. District Court, Middle District of Pennsylvania. A lifelong friend and adviser to former Gov. Robert P. Casey, Jim served as the secretary of the commonwealth and later as general counsel to the late governor. At the time of his death, Jim was a partner in the Scranton law firm of Haggerty, McDonnell & Hinton, formerly Casey, Haggerty & McDonnell and later Haggerty, McDonnell & O'Brien. He also served as president of the Lackawanna County Bar Association and was a permanent member of the Third Circuit Judicial Conference. Jim served as chairman of the board of trustees for the University of Scranton and Scranton Preparatory School. He was president of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick of Lackawanna County and served as director of the Greater Scranton Chamber of Commerce and the United Way of Lackawanna County. Jim was also a member of the board of directors at the Country Club of Scranton and First National Community Bank.

Jim was a loving and vibrant man, known to close friends as "the Big Fella," and recognized by countless others who had the privilege to befriend him as larger than life. Jim had a renowned sense of humor and an ease with people that endeared him to all whose lives he touched. His infectious personality was outdone by his impressive professional accomplishments as a successful lawyer. He was respected by his peers and revered by fellow members of the bar for his honesty, ethics and fair dealing. He ranks among the most loyal Dunmoreans and Democrats of all time. Loyalty was paramount to his very being. Above all, Jim was a devoted husband, father and grandfather and the most positive role model to those he loved so dearly. His favorite times were spent with his sons and friends golfing at the Country Club of Scranton, and he most relished time spent with family. Summers in Avalon, N.J. with his wife, children and grandchildren brought him indescribable joy. Jim's generosity in life continued as an organ donor.

Also surviving are seven children, Jean McGrath and husband, Christopher, Dunmore; Mauri Collins and husband, Joseph, Scottsdale, Ariz.; James J. Haggerty, Jr. and fiancée, Wendy Lettieri, Scranton; Matthew and wife, Christina O'Brien Haggerty, Scranton; Cecelia O'Rourke and husband, James, New York, N.Y.; Daniel Haggerty and fiancée, Meghan Stott, Wilkes-Barre; and Kathleen James and husband, Brian, Scranton; 18 grandchildren, James, Christopher, Cecelia, Nora and Margaret McGrath; Clare, Catherine, Cecelia, Rita and Elizabeth Collins; Abigail, Caroline, Cecelia and Matthew Haggerty; Brian, Patrick, Edward and Margaret James; and several nieces and nephews. He was also preceded in death by a brother, Joseph O. Haggerty; and his stepfather, John P. Cummings.●

HONORAIR

• Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I wish to speak about a very special flight that just took place. The Louisiana HonorAir flight that came into Washington on Saturday, May 28, included a group of 77 World War II veterans from Louisiana. These veterans visited the various memorials and monuments that recognize the sacrifices of our Nation's invaluable military members.

Louisiana HonorAir, a group based in Lafayette, LA, sponsored this latest trip—its 22nd flight—to the Nation's Capital. The organization honors surviving Louisiana World War II veterans by giving them an opportunity to see the memorials dedicated to their service. On this trip, the veterans visited the World War II, Korea, Vietnam and Iwo Jima memorials. They traveled to Arlington National Cemetery to lay a wreath on the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

World War II was one of America's greatest triumphs, but was also a conflict rife with individual sacrifice and tragedy. More than 60 million people worldwide were killed, including 40 million civilians, and more than 400,000 American servicemembers were slain during the long war. The ultimate victory over enemies in the Pacific and in Europe is a testament to the valor of American soldiers, sailors, airmen and marines. The years 1941 to 1945 also witnessed an unprecedented mobilization of domestic industry, which supplied our military on two distant fronts.

In Louisiana, there are roughly 21,000 living WWII veterans, and each one has a heroic tale of achieving the noble victory of freedom over tyranny. The oldest in this HonorAir group was born in 1915 and 7 veterans on this HonorAir flight were women. These veterans served in various branches of the military—20 Army, 26 Navy, 12 Army Air Corps, 11 Marines, 1 Coast Guard, and 7 in women's services.

Our heroes served across the globe, participating in major invasions such as those at Iwo Jima, Okinawa, Guadalcanal, Leyte, the Philippines, and southern France. One was a prisoner of war who also received the Army of Occupation medal, while others fought in the historic Battle of the Bulge or at Pearl Harbor during the infamous attack in 1941. Many of these veterans have been decorated with honors such as the Purple Heart or the Bronze Star Medal.

These men and women, who have given so much for our country, truly represent our greatest generation. I ask the Senate to join me in honoring these 77 veterans, all Louisiana heroes, that we welcomed to Washington on May 28 and Louisiana HonorAir for making these trips a reality.●

TRIBUTE TO DAVID CRAIG

● Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President on behalf of Senator CANTWELL and myself, it is with great privilege that I congratulate a hard-working Washingtonian, Mr. David Craig, on his well-deserved retirement on June 23, 2011, after forty seven years of dedicated service to the students of Highline High School.

Mr. Craig taught business in classroom 216 at Highline High School for his entire career. To put his extraordinary longevity in perspective, Mr. Craig's first graduating class were 18 years old during the 1964-1965 school year. During that same year, President Lyndon Johnson declared war on poverty and signed the 1964 Civil Rights Act; Beatlemania was sweeping the globe, and Muhammad Ali was named the heavy weight champion of the world. Today, those 18-year-old students are now senior citizens.

Over the course of five decades, Mr. Craig has touched the lives of over 10,000 students. He had the pleasure, as few teachers do, of having his children, Michael and Shelley, as students. He taught Royce Badley, now his co-worker and Academic Dean of Students for the Highline High School, and Shaya Calvo, now senior prosecuting attorney for King County. He has also seen his share of tragedies, including losing students to conflicts in Vietnam, Iraq, and Afghanistan. Yet he is consistently reminded of the joy of teaching, seeing it not only in the young people he continues to help today, but also in the frequent encounters he has with former students in his day-to-day life.

It is important moments such as the retirement of a great teacher that we reflect on their impact on their school and community. In assessing the legacy of a teacher like Dave Craig, Henry Adams perhaps said it best: "a teacher affects eternity; he can never tell where his influence stops." The legacy that Dave Craig leaves is one that has positively affected the lives of thousands of young people, giving them one of the greatest gifts America can bestow upon its citizenry: the gift of education. As a teacher, Dave Craig has served his school, his community, his country and most importantly his students with enthusiasm and dedication. We should all be very thankful for his selfless devotion to Highline High School.

On behalf of all Washingtonians, we commend David for his many years of commitment to our State. His knowledge, experience, and loyalty to education will be sorely missed. We congratulate David and wish he and his wife Paula the best of luck in their future endeavors.●

RECOGNIZING TOWLE'S HARDWARE AND LUMBER STORE

● Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, while our efforts here in Washington regarding small business are often focused on how to help start new companies, our economy also relies on those small firms which have been in operation for generation after generation. One such small business, Towle's Hardware & Lumber Store in Dixfield, this week celebrates its 100th anniversary. Today I commend Towle's for its remarkable achievement and highlight its tremendous story.

Towle's Hardware and Lumber Store opened its doors in 1911 as C.H. Towle's Hardware, when Charles Towle purchased the former Stockbridge Hardware Store on Weld Street in Dixfield. At that time, Towle's offered its customers a wide variety of basic necessities, from paint, lumber, and tools, to cast iron stoves, electric and gas refrigerators, and even John Deere tractors.

The Towle family considers the company's long-term success and longevity as byproducts of its work ethic, attention to customer service, and decision to sell quality products at reasonable prices. Indeed, over the years, the business has expanded in size, installed an elevator, and opened a package shipping operation in the 1980s. In the 1960s, Towle's joined American Hardware, one of the Nation's earlier co-operative hardware companies, and to this day it remains a member of True Value, with which American Hardware later merged. In 2008, Towle's Hardware moved into a new 6,000-square-foot location just a few yards from the old location. That same year the family also opened the Towle's Corner Store to serve the community in even more ways.

This week, Towle's is holding a week-long celebration of the company's centennial. Events include free product giveaways, raffles for Towle's gift certificates and other prizes, and a recognition ceremony for the company, which includes the presentation of a special plaque to Towle's in honor of its centennial by officials from the town of Dixfield and True Value.

Small businesses like Towle's Hardware are the heart and soul of our Nation's communities. Main Streets across America are chock full of restaurants, grocery stores, and shopping boutiques which provide citizens with the goods and wares they need. Towle's Hardware and Lumber is a prime example of a small business that has persevered through turbulent economic times—from the Great Depression to the most recent recession—time and time again. I congratulate everyone at Towle's for their major milestone and wish them many more years of accomplishment.●

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. GRASSLEY (for himself and Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota):

S. 1161. A bill to amend the Food Security Act of 1985 to restore integrity to and strengthen payment limitation rules for commodity payments and benefits; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I come to the floor to introduce a piece of legislation that I have introduced many times in past Congresses. I have made some progress on the goals I seek but have not gotten 100 percent finality of the policies I want. I am always able to do this with a bipartisan piece of legislation.

Today, I present this with Senator JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will let Senator JOHNSON speak for himself, but I want to give the reasons I am introducing this bill in my remarks. First, I want people to know this deals with farm policy, and on farm policy the Senator from South Dakota, Mr. JOHNSON, and I agree on most everything.

Mr. President, this is a piece of legislation that is probably going to come up not so much as a stand-alone, as when we discuss the reauthorization of the farm bill—which generally could start this year and probably go into next year—but as an effort that I am not going to give up on. It deals with the issue of how much one individual farmer should get from the farm program. My approach is to put what one might call a hard cap on the amount of money that one farmer can get, and my remarks will explain why.

Also, though, at a time when we have great budget deficits, people might think I am introducing this bill just because I am concerned about the budget deficit. It is true this bill, if enacted, will save about $1.5 billion, but that is not my main purpose for doing it. My main purpose is to have the historical basis for a safety net for farmers; to espouse the principle that our safety net ought to be targeted toward small- and medium-sized farmers. So today, Senator JOHNSON and I are introducing the Rural America Preservation Act.

America's farmers produce the food that feed our families. The bill helps ensure that our farmers are able to provide a safe, abundant, and inexpensive food supply for consumers around the world while maintaining the safety net that allows small- and medium-sized farmers to get through tough times.

Everybody sees tough times that are out of their control, but the importance of the farm safety net can be seen no further than the dinner table each of us sits around, as recently as last night. Stop to think what you would do if you were unable to feed your children for 3 days. There is an old adage that says something like this: You are only nine meals away from a revolution. Maybe in those circumstances, if you love your children—and maybe you wouldn't think this could happen to you because we have such an abundance of food in America, but we are all aware of the fact a lot of countries do have food riots when there is a shortage of food—you might do just about anything—steal, riot, whatever it takes—to give your children the food you want them to have to keep them alive after not having food for 3 straight days.

So the cohesion within our society, the social cohesion, that is one of the reasons it is vitally important we maintain a farm program that will make sure there is a readily available food supply.

Another reason I am not going to go into in these remarks is that food is very essential to the national security of our country—in other words, the defense of our country. All we have to do is rely upon an old adage Napoleon used to use: An army marches on its belly. More recently, however, we can look at the farm programs in Germany and Japan where they recall the mistakes made in their war effort during World War II—and, thank God, they didn't succeed—when they did not have enough food for their military people. So I also want to think in terms of a sure supply of food not only for social cohesion but also for national security purposes.

To ensure the family farmer remains able to produce a food supply for this cohesive and stable society that I have talked about, we need to get the farm safety net back to its original intent—to help small- and medium-sized farmers get over the ups and downs of farming that are out of their control. As an example, it could be a natural disaster, it could be grain embargoes such as those put on by the President of the United States, it could be the situation where President Nixon froze the price of beef and ruined the beef industry in the Midwest.

The original intent of the Federal farm program was not to help a farmer get bigger and bigger. But the safety net has veered sharply off course, and that is why I talk about the necessity for a hard cap on any one farmer getting help from the farm program. We are now seeing 10 percent of the largest farmers actually getting nearly 70 percent of the total farm program payments coming out of the Treasury of the United States.

There is no problem with a farmer growing larger in his operation. Let me make that clear. If you want to get bigger and bigger in America, that is an American right to do so. But the taxpayers should not have to subsidize that effort, and that is what is happening today. There comes a point where some farms reach levels that allow them to weather the tough financial times on their own. Smaller farmers do not have that same luxury, and these same small farmers play a pivotal role in producing the Nation's food.

I have been approached time and time again by farmers concerned about where the next generation of farmers will come from when the price of farmland is shooting up or the price of cash rent is shooting up, particularly when the Federal taxpayers are subsidizing that effort. It is important that we keep young people on the farm so they can take the lead in producing our food when the older generation of farmers is ready to turn over the reins. But the current policies that allow 10 percent of the largest farmers to receive nearly 70 percent of the total farm program payments creates a real barrier for beginning and small farmers.

The current system puts upward pressure on land prices, making it more difficult for small and beginning farmers to buy a farm or to afford the cash rent. This allows the big farmers to get even bigger, and this is not unique to my State of Iowa. I am sure it is not unique to the State of South Dakota, where my cosponsor friend, Senator JOHNSON, comes from. This upward pressure on land prices is occurring in many States. It is simply good policy to have a hard cap on the amount a single farmer can receive in the farm program payments. We will keep in place a much needed safety net for the farmers who need it the most, and it will help reduce the negative impact farm payments can have on land prices and cash rent.

Our bill sets the overall cap at $250,000 for married couples. Now, people listening in the Senate, or people listening back home on television, probably think it is outrageous to have a figure that high and call it a hard cap. But this is something that is national policy and may not be applicable just to my State, so it is necessary to reach some sort of common ground in the Congress. I recognize that agriculture can look different around the country, so this is a compromise.

Just as important as setting the payment limits is the tightening of the meaning of "actively engaged." I will not go in depth as to what actively engaged is about at this point, but it generally means, if you are a farmer, you ought to be a farmer and not a city slicker from New York City benefiting from the farm program. This will help make sure that farm payments only go to those who deserve them.

In light of the current budget discussions, everyone should agree that we don't want money going to those who fail to meet the criteria set for the program. This bill will help do that.

I hope my colleagues will agree this bill takes a common sense approach to improve our farm safety net, and a help to make sure the dollars spent go to those who need it most.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. ROCKEFELLER (for himself and Mr. PRYOR):

S. 1165. A bill to protect children and other consumers against hazards associated with the accidental ingestion of button cell batteries by requiring the Consumer Product Safety Commission to promulgate consumer product safety standards to require child-resistant closures on remote controls and other consumer products that use such batteries, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I rise to introduce the Button Cell Battery Safety Act of 2011. This bill will protect the most vulnerable members of our society from the hazards of button cell battery ingestion. These small batteries, which are present in more and more consumer products each year, can be deadly if swallowed. While most swallowed batteries pass harmlessly through the body, a toddler who puts one in her mouth can be severely injured in just two hours and the damage can be fatal after only eight hours.

Button cell batteries are small, round, and are approximately the size and shape of common coins. Just the sort of thing a curious child might put in his mouth. When ingested, these batteries can become lodged in the throat or elsewhere in the digestive system and cause permanent damage to the tissues.

Between 2007 and 2009, more than 3,400 button battery ingestion cases were reported to U.S. poison centers annually. The number of ingestions that result in serious injury or death have increased sevenfold since 1985 due to the higher voltage of newer batteries. Hundreds of children have been severely injured and six have died from these ingestions in the last two years alone.

Despite the severe risk, most parents and caregivers remain unaware of the danger.

Imagine not realizing a child has swallowed one of these batteries. It gets lodged in the esophagus, begins to cause severe burns, and stays there for days with parents and doctors not realizing something is terribly wrong. It may seem like a respiratory infection, or a stomach virus. But it is not. It is the chemical reaction of a button cell battery, lodged in the esophagus. Even if the battery is removed within several hours, the damage is done. The child can end up in the intensive care unit for weeks, following hours of surgery. There can be permanent damage to the vocal cords, or to the gastrointestinal tract, meaning the child would require feeding tubes, home nursing care, and multiple surgeries. As severe and painstaking as this is for the child and for the parents, the child is fortunately given a second chance at life.

For a small number of the 3,400 cases of button cell battery ingestion reported to poison control centers every year, the damage from the battery proves to be fatal. Aidan Truett of Hamilton, Ohio, had a battery surgically removed after nine days of severe symptoms and doctor visits. The doctors found the battery when they ordered an X-ray, looking for pneumonia. Two days after his surgery, Aidan died from his injuries. He was 13 months old.

Two year old Elaina Redding, from Fort Lupton, CO died after the current from a swallowed battery set off a chemical reaction that eroded her esophagus and aorta. Four days after clutching her chest in pain, she was taken to the hospital and the battery was removed. Two weeks after being sent home, Elaina suffered a bloody coughing fit that sent her back to the intensive care unit where she bled to death.

These stories are horrifying and compel us to act. Small batteries which are in multiple products in our houses—in remote controls, toys, and musical greeting cards—are highly dangerous in the hands of toddlers who may swallow them. We have the ability to protect children and we must do so.

We need to make sure that these batteries are securely enclosed in products and cannot be removed by curious children. And we must also make sure that parents and caretakers are aware of the danger. No parent should leave batteries lying around the house after removing them from a product, or hand them to a small child.

This legislation would require the Consumer Product Safety Commission to promulgate a safety standard requiring child-resistant closures on consumer products that use these types of batteries. We already have Federal safety rules that require toys that use batteries to have such compartments; now it is time to make sure all products that utilize these particular batteries are secured in a manner that will reduce children's access to these potentially harmful batteries.

In addition, the legislation will require warning labels that alert adults of the danger of these batteries. Such labels will be required on the packaging for replacement batteries, in the user manual of products that use these batteries, and where appropriate, on the product itself. Too many injuries occur because batteries are left out and accessible after they have been replaced.

Today, I ask my colleagues to support this simple and straightforward bill that will save lives and prevent unnecessary injuries.

By Mrs. MURRAY (for herself, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. BLUMENTHAL, Mr. BROWN of Ohio, Mr. FRANKEN, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mrs. SHAHEEN, and Mr. WHITEHOUSE):

S. 1166. A bill to amend the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 to expand coverage under the Act, to increase protections for whistleblowers, to increase penalties for high gravity violations, to adjust penalties for inflation, to provide rights for victims of family members, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I come to the floor today to talk about our obligation to protect workers across America and to urge my colleagues to support the Protecting America's Workers Act, which I am very proud to introduce today.

Mr. President, middle-class families across this country are struggling. So many of them have lost their homes or their jobs and are fighting to keep their heads above water. We are working hard here to create jobs and get the economy back on track, but we also owe it to middle-class families to make sure those jobs are safe and healthy.

In 2009 alone there were 4,340 deaths in workplaces across America, and over 3 million more were injured or sickened while on the job. If more than 4,000 Americans were killed in 1 day, it would be on the front page of every newspaper in this country. If an epidemic in this country claimed 4,000 lives, it would lead the nightly news each week. But that is not the way it works with workplace injuries. They happen a few at a time, spread out across the country, in communities such as Anacortes in my home State of Washington, where a fire broke out last year at the Tesoro Refinery and killed seven workers.

These were men and women who were taken too young, with so much life to live and with so many people to live it with; workers who took on tough jobs and worked long hours during difficult economic times to provide for their families. They were people who made tremendous sacrifices and who embodied so much of what is good about their communities and their States. They have been dearly missed.

Washington State investigators looked into that incident and determined that the tragedy could have been and should have been prevented. The problems that led to what happened were known beforehand. They should have been fixed, but they weren't. That is heartbreaking.

Every worker in every industry deserves to be confident that while they are working hard and doing their jobs, their employers are doing everything they can to protect them. That is why I am proud to reintroduce the Protecting America's Workers Act. This legislation is a long overdue update to the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970, or the OSH Act.

Since that groundbreaking law was passed over 40 years ago, we know American industry has changed significantly. Businesses and workplaces have become much more complex, and workers are performing 21st-century tasks, but the government is still using a 1970 approach to regulations to protect employees. It doesn't make sense, and it needs to change.

We need to update the way we as a country think about our worker safety regulations, and this law is a very important step in that direction. This is not about adding more regulations, it is about having smarter regulations. It is about having regulations that protect workers and make sense for business.

Mr. President, the Protecting America's Workers Act makes a number of key improvements to the OSH Act, but I want to highlight just a few.

First of all, it increases protections for workers who blow the whistle on unsafe working conditions. Protecting workers who tell the truth is just common sense. In fact, in other modern laws, such as the Consumer Product Safety Improvement Act of 2008 and the Food Safety Modernization Act of 2010, they do exactly that. But since the OSH Act has not been updated, the vast majority of workers today don't have similar protections.

An important part of my bill would make sure a whistleblower's right to protection from retaliation cannot be waived through collective bargaining agreements, and they have the option to appeal to the Federal courts if they believe they are being mistreated for telling the truth about dangerous practices.

The Protecting America's Workers Act also improves reporting, inspection, and other enforcement of workplace health and safety violations. It expands the rights of the victims and makes sure employers who oversee unsafe workplaces are pushed to quickly improve them to avoid further endangering worker health and safety.

This is a good bill. I am proud to have a number of cosponsors in the Senate, as well as the support of many prominent national groups in our efforts to improve workplace safety.

Nothing can bring back the workers we lost in communities such as Anacortes, but we certainly owe it to them to make sure workers everywhere are truly protected on the job. So I urge my colleagues to support the Protecting America's Workers Act and to keep working with us to make workplaces safer and healthier across America.

By Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota (for himself and Mr. BINGAMAN):

S. 1167. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to improve the diagnosis and treatment of hereditary hemorrhagic telangiectasia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, today I join with my colleague and friend from Iowa, CHUCK GRASSLEY, in introducing the Rural America Preservation Act of 2011, which will provide for common-sense, meaningful farm program payment limitations. Particularly given our country's budgetary constraints, this is a straight-forward and fiscally responsible proposal that would target our farm program payments and safety net.

The current farm program payment structure has, quite frankly, failed rural America. According to the United States Department of Agriculture's Economic Research Service, in 2008, the largest 12.4 percent of farms received 62.4 percent of farm program payments. The current rules permit the most capitalized farming corporations to receive massive subsidies and deprive small and medium-sized family farmers of the opportunity to thrive. The farm bill is intended to provide programs that function as a safety net for farmers, in contrast to the cash cow they've become for a few producers. It is important that we maintain a safety net for producers, but such a system must be targeted to family farmers instead of large agribusinesses.

The 2008 farm bill took some important first steps in strengthening the integrity of our farm programs. Under the law, anyone making more than $500,000 in non-farm Adjusted Gross Income will not receive farm payments and producers making over $750,000 AGI will lose their direct payments. Additionally, the law eliminates the triple-entity loophole and farm payments now go directly to an individual, rather than a corporation or general partnership, through direct attribution. I support direct attribution and elimination of the triple-entity loophole; however, I believe these provisions should have been much stronger and I have consistently pressed for a hard payment cap of at least $250,000. The bill we introduced today would finally provide for meaningful payment limitations and ensure that assistance goes to small and medium-sized family farms.

Our legislation includes several specific limits. Direct payments would be capped at $20,000 per producer and counter-cyclical payments would be limited to $30,000. Additionally, the bill would establish a cap of $75,000 on loan deficiency payments, LDPs, and marketing loan gains. There is currently no cap on LDPs and marketing loan gains, essentially meaning there is no effective payment limitation.

Just as important as establishing a hard payment limitations cap is how we define whether an individual is actively engaged in the operation of a farm. Current law lacks a defined active management test, and therefore someone could participate in no more than a yearly conference call and be eligible to receive payments. Our bill closes the management loophole which has allowed "paper partners" to collect payments without contributing any real or meaningful role in the operation. This proposal will improve the management standards determining payment eligibility by requiring that management be provided on a regular, substantial, and continuous basis through direct supervision and direction of the operations of the farm. These are reasonable and common-sense requirements which seek to further ensure the integrity of the farm safety net.

Agriculture is the economic engine that drives our rural communities, and without viable family farmers, our small towns and Main Street businesses throughout South Dakota would face significant financial hardships. I am proud to join with my friend from Iowa, Senator GRASSLEY, who has also been a longtime champion of family farmers, in introducing this important legislation.

By Mr. WYDEN (for himself and Mr. CRAPO):

S. 1173. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to modernize payments for ambulatory surgical centers under the Medicare program; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I rise today, once again, to advocate for patients and their access to more choice and competition in providing good quality health care by introducing The Ambulatory Surgical Center Quality and Access Act of 2011 with my colleague, Senator CRAPO.

Advocates for health care reform and a healthier nation continue to emphasize the importance of keeping patients "out of the hospital." ASCs can help do that by providing cost-effective services in an outpatient setting.

There are more than 5,200 Medicare-certified ASCs across all 50 States, with 83 in Oregon alone. These facilities, that employ the equivalent of 117,700 full-time workers nationwide, ensure that patients from Portland to Hermiston, from Klamath Falls to Coos Bay, have access to safe, effective, and quality surgical care.

But ASCs can do more than provide the same services found in a Hospital Outpatient Department; they can do it at lower cost. Medicare saves an estimated $3 billion each year when surgical procedures are performed in ASCs rather than hospitals due to ASC reimbursement equaling 56 percent of what a hospital receives.

Currently, Medicare uses two different factors to update reimbursement: one for ASCs and a different one for hospitals. ASC payments are updated based on the consumer price index, while hospital rates are updated using the hospital market basket, which specifically measures changes in the costs of providing health care. Both facilities can provide identical surgical procedures, so why aren't their respective reimbursements linked to the same update mechanism? Why should there be a double standard?

This inequity could have significant consequences for both patients' access to services and Medicare's rate of outpatient expenditures if facilities begin consolidating or hospitals begin acquiring these practices in an attempt to reimburse for the same services at a higher rate—and cost to the taxpayer.

The legislation Senator CRAPO and I have introduced today, however, begins to address this in two ways: First, this bill creates parity by allowing ASC payment rates to be updated using the same market basket update hospitals use; and second, the bill goes a step further by establishing a Value-Based Purchasing program which will disperse shared savings payments based on quality reporting and improved performance.

The Ambulatory Surgical Center Quality and Access Act puts common-sense policies in place that will enhance patients' access to quality care in a cost-effective way. I urge my colleagues to join us in cosponsoring this important legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

“(B) PROGRAM START DATE.—The Program shall apply to payments for procedures occurring on or after January 1, 2015.

“(C) MEASURES.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of the Program, the Secretary shall select measures from the measures specified under paragraph (7).

“(ii) AVAILABILITY OF MEASURE AND DATA.—The Secretary may not select a measure under this paragraph for use under the Program with respect to a performance period for a calendar year unless such measure has been included, and the reported data available, on the website ‘Medicare.gov’, for at least 1 year prior to the beginning of such performance period.

Using such methodology, the Secretary shall provide for an assessment (in this subsection referred to as the ‘ASC performance score’) for each ambulatory surgical center for each performance period. The methodology shall provide that the ASC performance score is determined using the higher of its achievement or improvement score for each measure.

“(G) APPEALS.—The Secretary shall establish a process by which ambulatory surgery centers may appeal the calculation of the ambulatory surgery center’s performance with respect to the performance standards established under subparagraph (D) and the ambulatory surgery center performance score under subparagraph (E). The Secretary shall ensure that such process provides for resolution of appeals in a timely manner.

“(H) CALCULATION OF VALUE-BASED INCENTIVE PAYMENT.—

“(i) VALUE-BASED PERCENTAGE AMOUNT.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall specify a value-based percentage amount for an ambulatory surgical center for a calendar year.

“(I) ANNUAL CALCULATION OF SHARED SAVINGS FUNDING FOR VALUE-BASED INCENTIVE PAYMENTS.—

is at least the percent specified by the Secretary below the applicable benchmark determined for such year under clause (ii). For purposes of this subparagraph, such sum shall be referred to as ‘estimated expenditures’. The Secretary shall determine the appropriate percent described in the preceding sentence to account for normal variation in volume of services under this title and to account for changes in the coverage of services in ambulatory surgery centers and hospital outpatient departments during the performance period involved.

“(ii) ESTABLISH AND UPDATE BENCHMARK.—For purposes of clause (i), the Secretary shall calculate a benchmark for each year described in such clause equal to the product of—

“(I) estimated expenditures described in clause (i) for such year, and “(II) the average annual growth in estimated expenditures for the most recent three years.

Such benchmark shall be reset at the start of each calendar year, and adjusted for changes in enrollment under the Medicare fee-for-service program.

“(iii) PAYMENTS BASED ON SHARED SAVINGS.—If the requirement under clause (i) is met for a year—

“(I) 50 percent of the total savings pool estimated under clause (iv) for such year shall be made available for shared savings to be paid to ambulatory surgical centers under this paragraph;

“(II) a percent (as determined appropriate by the Secretary, in accordance with subparagraph (H)) of such amount made available for such year shall be paid as shared savings to each ambulatory surgery center that is determined under the Program to have met or exceeded performance scores for such year; and

“(I) the conversion factor for such year determined by the Secretary under the payment system under paragraph (2)(D) divided by the conversion factor calculated under subsection (t)(3)(C) for such year for covered OPD services, multiplied by 100, and

“(II)(aa) the product of the estimated Medicare expenditures for surgical services described in clause (i)(I) furnished during such year to Medicare fee-for-service beneficiaries (as defined in section 1899(h)(3)) for which payment is made under subsection (t) and the average annual growth in the estimated Medicare expenditures for such services furnished to Medicare fee-for-service beneficiaries (as so defined) for which payment is made under subsection (t) in the most recent available 3 years, less

“(bb) the estimated Medicare expenditures for surgical services described in clause (i)(I) furnished to Medicare fee-for-service beneficiaries for which payment was made under subsection (t) in the most recent year.

“(J) NO EFFECT IN SUBSEQUENT CALENDAR YEARS.—The value-based percentage amount under subparagraph (H) and the percent determined under subparagraph (I)(iii)(I) shall apply only with respect to the calendar year involved, and the Secretary shall not take into account such amount or percentage in making payments to an ambulatory surgery center under this section in a subsequent calendar year.”

SEC. 4. APC PANEL REPRESENTATION.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 5. ENSURING ACCESS TO SAME DAY SERVICES.

The conditions for coverage of ambulatory surgical center services specified by the Secretary of Health and Human Services pursuant to section 1832(a)(2)(F)(i) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395k(a)(2)(F)(i)) shall not prohibit ambulatory surgical centers from providing individuals with any notice of rights or other required notice on the date of a procedure if more advance notice is not feasible under the circumstances, including when a procedure is scheduled and performed on the same day.

By Ms. LANDRIEU (for herself, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. BEGICH, Mr. BROWN of Massachusetts, Mr. CARPER, Ms. COLLINS, Mrs. GILLIBRAND, Mr. KIRK, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. MENENDEZ, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. SANDERS, and Mr. SCHUMER):

S. 1176. A bill to amend the Horse Protection Act to prohibit the shipping, transporting, moving, delivering, receiving, possessing, purchasing, selling, or donation of horses and other equines to be slaughtered for human consumption, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, today I join my colleagues in introducing the American Horse Slaughter Prevention Act. This bill will prohibit the slaughter of horses for human consumption, a practice that the majority of Americans oppose and of which many are unaware. The last American horse slaughterhouses were closed in 2007, and there is virtually no demand for horse meat for human consumption in the United States. Unfortunately, tens of thousands of American horses are still being inhumanely transported to foreign processing plants, where they are brutally slaughtered.

Horses are domestic animals that have served men and women as loyal, hard working companions for thousands of years; and today, they are used primarily for recreation, pleasure, and sport. Horses differ from other livestock animals in that we do not raise them for the purpose of slaughter. We raise and train them to trust us, perform for us, and allow us on their backs. As such, they are entitled to a sense of human compassion, of which the practice of horse slaughter is void.

Throughout the development of this country, human consumption of horse meat has not been a widely accepted activity. This is undoubtedly due to the unique relationship enjoyed between mankind and horses for thousands of years. Horses were there in our work, on our farms, for transportation and communication in the taming of a vast American Frontier, and on every battlefield prior to World War II. They have proven their loyalty and nobility, and without them, the development of our country might not have been possible and at the least, would have been significantly more difficult. In modern time, horses provide joy and entertainment. Through racing, jumping, recreation, and even therapy to the disabled, horses touch the lives of many Americans. Clearly, they hold a special place in our culture, and it is for these reasons, that so many people are strongly opposed to horse slaughter in America.

Unfortunately, horse owners do have to face the realities of infirmity, age, or other reasons that may necessitate putting down their animal. However, this calls for humane euthanasia, and slaughter is simply not an appropriate alternative. The average cost for humane euthanasia and disposal is about the same as the cost of one month's care, so it is not unreasonable to expect horse owners to accept responsibility and incur this minor expense.

Additionally, because we do not raise horses with the intent to slaughter for human consumption, they are frequently treated with drugs not approved for use in animals raised for human consumption. These drugs can be toxic when ingested by humans. We have no system in the United States to track which medications a horse has received throughout its lifetime, and as such, American horse meat poses a food safety and export risk.

It is for all of these reasons that I am committed to ensuring that this bill is brought to the attention of all of our colleagues here in the Senate. I look forward to working with the senior Senator from South Carolina and others to address this important issue and pass a commonsense bill that reflects the desires of many of our constituents, who support the humane treatment of our horses and the prohibition of their slaughter for humane consumption.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. BINGAMAN:

S. 1177. A bill to provide grants to States to improve high schools and raise graduation rates while ensuring rigorous standards, to develop and implement effective school models for struggling students and dropouts, and to improve State policies to raise graduation rates, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a series of education bills S. 1177, S. 1178, and S. 1179, that reflect many of my legislative priorities in K–12 education policy and the reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. As Chairman HARKIN, Ranking Member ENZI, and my Senate colleagues on the Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee continue negotiations on the reauthorization of ESEA, I feel that it is appropriate to introduce legislation that I have developed for inclusion in the reauthorized legislation. While the bills I have introduced today do not address all of the many changes that I feel are necessary to fix No Child Left Behind, they do emphasize areas of particular and longstanding concern to me and my constituents.

I strongly believe that there must be a continued federal role in education in the United States. I have great respect for State and local school officials, and as such I believe that they continue to require Federal support to improve student achievement and improve graduation rates. Given the severe education funding challenges in my home State of New Mexico and across the country, Congress has a particular obligation to retain its focus on student achievement, especially among low-income and disadvantaged youth.

Federal education policy should prioritize ending the nationwide high school dropout crisis; supporting the effective use of education technology, especially in high-poverty schools; ensuring that students benefit from high expectations, rigorous standards and curriculum; and extending the school day, week, and/or year to ensure that

U.S. students do not continue to fall behind our global competitors.

Each year in the United States, approximately 1.2 million students drop out of school without receiving a diploma, at an estimated annual cost to the country of over $300 billion. My home State of New Mexico has one of the lowest statewide graduation rates in the country. The Graduation Promise Act, which I am introducing today, authorizes a new Federal focus on helping underperforming high schools improve student achievement and increase graduation rates.

The Federal Government should support teachers using the most up-to-date technology to prepare students for success in college and 21st century careers. Today, I reintroduced the Achievement Through Technology and Innovation Act of 2011. This bill would renew and strengthen the existing education technology program in ESEA. The ATTAIN Act recognizes that learning technologies are critical to preparing students for the 21st century workforce, ensuring high quality teaching, and improving the productivity of our Nation’s educational system. The Act would provide Federal funds to states and local school districts to train teachers, purchase education technology hardware and software, and support innovative learning methods and student technological literacy.

All students, regardless of their income levels, should be able to benefit from high expectations, high academic standards, and college-level academic opportunities. The Advanced Programs Act of 2011 would renew the current ESEA program, which provides Federal funding to pay low-income students’ AP exam fees and incentive grants to expand student access to AP courses and exams.

Finally, I wish to highlight my cosponsorship of the Time for Innovation Matters in Education Act, which Chairman HARKIN introduced on April 14th of this year. The TIME Act authorizes Federal funding to support expanded learning time, ELT, initiatives in public schools. American students spend about 30 percent less time in school than students in other leading nations, which hinders our students’ ability to succeed and compete. ELT programs typically provide extra time for academic student, enrichment activities, and teacher collaboration. Studies show that programs that significantly increase the total number of hours in a regular school schedule can lead to gains in academic achievement, particularly for students who are furthest behind.

Taken together, these four bills present a coherent, consistent vision for the Federal role in education reform. We must turn around struggling high schools and improve our high school graduation rates. We must use the best technology available to provide solid instruction and develop the student technological literacy necessary for success in the digital age. We must provide all students with access to high standards and college-level academic opportunities. We must support schools adding the school time necessary to allow our students to keep pace with students in high-performing countries.

Now is not the time for the Federal Government to back away from its commitment to helping disadvantaged students succeed in school and in life. While the Elementary and Secondary Education Act needs to be reconsidered and substantially reworked, we must not roll back Federal policy and ignore the persistent achievement gaps that limit our national competitiveness and deny millions of our children access to the American dream.

SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 23—DECLARING THAT IT IS THE POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES TO SUPPORT AND FACILITATE ISRAEL IN MAINTAINING DEFENSIBLE BORDERS AND THAT IT IS CONTRARY TO UNITED STATES POLICY AND NATIONAL SECURITY TO HAVE THE BORDERS OF ISRAEL RETURN TO THE ARMISTICE LINES THAT EXISTED ON JUNE 4, 1967

Mr. HATCH (for himself, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. RUBIO, Mr. NELSON of Nebraska, Mr. JOHANNES, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. MORAN, Mr. TOOMEY, Mr. INHOFE, Mr. BARRASSO, Mr. KIRK, Mr. BURR, Mr. CORNYN, Mr. KYL, Mr. THUNE, Mr. PORTMAN, Mr. COATS, Mr. COBURN, Ms. AYOTTE, Mr. BOOZMAN, Mr. BLUNT, Mr. BROWN of Massachusetts, Mr. VITTER, Mr. ROBERTS, Mr. ENZI, Mr. ISAKSON, Ms. MURKOWSKI, Mr. WICKER, Mr. LUGAR, and Mr. CHAMBLISS) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 23

Whereas, throughout its short history, Israel, a liberal democratic ally of the United States, has been repeatedly attacked by authoritarian regimes and terrorist organizations that denied its right to exist;

Whereas the United States Government remains steadfastly committed to the security of Israel, especially its ability to maintain secure, recognized, and defensible borders;

Whereas the United States Government is resolutely bound to its policy of preserving and strengthening the capability of Israel to deter enemies and defend itself against any threat;

Whereas United Nations Security Council Resolution 242 (1967) recognized Israel's "right to live in peace within secure and recognized boundaries free from threats or acts of force";

Whereas the United States has long recognized that a return to the 1967 lines would create a strategic military vulnerability for Israel and greatly impede its sovereign right to defend its borders; and

Whereas Prime Minister of Israel Benjamin Netanyahu correctly stated on May 20, 2011, that the 1967 lines were not "boundaries of peace. They are the boundaries of repeated war": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That—

(1) it is the policy of the United States to support and facilitate Israel in creating and maintaining secure, recognized, and defensible borders; and

(2) it is contrary to United States policy and our national security to have the borders of Israel return to the armistice lines that existed on June 4, 1967.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, today I am pleased to rise and offer, with my good friend, the senior Senator from Connecticut, a concurrent resolution which reaffirms our Nation's steadfast and unshakable commitment to the security of Israel, specifically through the establishment of secure, recognized, and defensible borders.

It is unfortunate that I am compelled to offer such a resolution. For years, both Republican and Democratic administrations have recognized that Israel's boundaries of June 4, 1967 are indefensible and if reestablished will create a strategic military vulnerability for our staunch ally.

That is why President Obama's recent comments were so dumbfounding. The President's prepared and thoroughly considered remarks called for the starting point of negotiations to be what we all know are the militarily indefensible 1967 lines.

Remember, if Israel returns to the 1967 lines its territory will, in some locations, be only 9 miles wide.

As Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu correctly stated in a friendly and appropriate correction to the President's remarks, the 1967 lines are not boundaries of peace. They are boundaries of repeated war.

Israel would have to give up the Golan Heights, the strategic elevated location which dominates northern Israel. Does the President not remember during the 1973 War the Syrians launched a massive armored attack on the Golan Heights which almost succeeded?

This raises the question of who President Obama was attempting to appease with his ill-advised statements, which unnecessarily drove a wedge between the United States and Israel?

The fact is the national security interests of the United States and Israel are linked. The threats Israel faces are the threats the United States faces. Whether it is Hezbollah in Lebanon, Hamas in the Gaza Strip or these groups' benefactor, Iran, we share a common foe.

Unfortunately, that foe, Iran, appears to be growing stronger and more capable. Iran has repeatedly stated it wishes to wipe the United States and Israel off the map. Iran's obvious aim is to establish strategic dominance over the entire region. Their relentless pursuit of nuclear weapons and ballistic missile technology is of grave concern.

Much has been said about Iran's nuclear program, but much less has been articulated about its ballistic missile program. In order to achieve its strategic objectives, Iran has embarked on a significant ballistic missile program. Iranian officials have boasted they have the ability to produce a ballistic missile with a 1,250 mile range. In 2009, the Iranians were able to launch a multistage space launch vehicle that the Air Force concluded "can serve as a test-bed for long-range ballistic missile technologies."

Even more troubling the Iranians appear to be developing a new long-range multistage solid rocket motor missile. Why is that important? If the Iranians successfully field this type of technology, they will be able to launch, almost instantaneously, missiles which carry warheads over great distances.

With these ominous developments emanating from Israel's and the United States common foe, do we really want to be seen as distancing ourselves from one of our staunchest allies—especially on such a pivotal issue as Israel's borders. This issue of these borders is only underscored by the constant attacks on Israel's borders by Iran's surrogates, Hezbollah and Hamas.

That is why I believe this Concurrent Resolution is so important. It reaffirms the long-held, bipartisan policy of the United States, that we will "support and facilitate Israel in maintaining defensible borders and that it is contrary to United States policy and our national security to have the borders of Israel return to the armistice lines that existed on June 4, 1967."

The United States has no greater friend than Israel and Israel has no greater friend than the United States.

Israel too often finds herself alone in the world, unjustly singled out by the left as a nation uniquely without the moral authority to defend itself.

From my perspective, Israel does not need to apologize to anyone for defending itself against those who would do her harm, and I will always stand by Israel as she seeks to protect her citizens against terrorists and their state sponsors.

Having said that, I also believe many Iranians, especially the young people, know Iran is causing problems in the Middle East. We must support those people who are searchers for freedom.

The security of both our nations is irrevocably linked. This bipartisan concurrent resolution removes any harmful ambiguity the President's remarks last week might have caused.

The United States must stand by Israel. With his remarks last week, President Obama undermined her.

Israel faces consistent unprovoked aggression by longtime supporters of terrorism. But Israel is not a victim. All she asks is the ability to defend herself and for free people to support her right to self-defense.

This is no time for the United States to distance itself from Israel, and I will do everything I can to affirm Israel's territorial integrity and ability to protect her citizens against the unprovoked attacks of terrorist and state actors.

Because Israel is a true friend, I am not surprised that this resolution has strong bipartisan support. My colleague, Senator LIEBERMAN, and I will be joined by members of both parties who want to remind the world the United States is steadfastly committed to the security of Israel and especially our ally's ability to maintain secure, recognized and defensible borders.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

CELEBRATING 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF LAS VEGAS VICTORY MIS- SIONARY BAPTIST CHURCH

HON. SHELLEY BERKLEY

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 9, 2011

Ms. BERKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and celebrate the 50th Anniversary of Victory Missionary Baptist Church in Las Vegas, Nevada.

On June 11, 1961, Rev. Abner J. Thompson, along with his wife, Mother Christine Thompson, founded the Victory Missionary Baptist Church under his pastorate. The Church was originally organized at the Zion United Methodist Church dining hall. Shortly after, a permanent place of worship was established on the west side of Las Vegas.

Under Reverend Thompson's leadership, several area families cultivated this newly formed church. From the earliest beginnings, the church and its choir became well known throughout Las Vegas and in other parts of the country. As the church continued to grow, the congregation outgrew the original location. Between 1981 and 1984, the pastor and families made plans to construct a new sanctuary that would include an education building, kitchen, dining area and Sunday school.

After 35 years of ministering, Reverend Thompson retired in February 1996. That following November, Dr. Robert E. Fowler, Sr., from Lawton, Oklahoma was installed as pastor. In 1998, Pastor Fowler outlined a plan for Victory Missionary Baptist Church that included a clear vision for the church. Within a year, membership grew more than 200 percent from previous years. Victory Missionary Baptist Church was a "Church on the Move" and acquired the entire block where it is now located. These acquisitions were historic, as this was the first church on the west side of Las Vegas.

In 2003, Victory Missionary Baptist Church looked outward and focused on improving the community with programs designed to provide stimulation for the physical and recreational needs of the members. The health education ministry provided free health screenings and health education programs to the community at no cost, directly benefiting over 600 people.

In 2005, the church renewed its focus on Christian improvement, with Pastor Fowler instructing various ministries on how to better evangelize and become leaders in the church. In 2006 and 2007, the church went through a paradigm shift, with the ministries growing and adding new meaning and new challenges for the congregation.

In 2009, the church expanded its focus on vision and voice. The goal for the year was to challenge the congregation on a personal and spiritual level. While the national and local economies remained unsteady, this focus ensured the congregation that their positive relationship with God would remain unwavering.

As the Representative for Nevada's First Congressional District, I proudly recognize Victory Missionary Baptist Church for 50 years of dedicated service to the community of Las Vegas. Victory Missionary Baptist Church continues to be a beacon of light for its members and the community as a whole. I ask my colleagues to join me in celebrating Victory Missionary Baptist Church's 50th Anniversary.

CONGRATULATING TINE VALEN- CIC, WINNER OF THE 2011 NA- TIONAL GEOGRAPHIC BEE

HON. KENNY MARCHANT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, June 9, 2011

Mr. MARCHANT. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride and pleasure that I rise today to recognize and congratulate Tine Valencic for winning the 2011 National Geographic Bee. Tine's remarkable achievement is a testament to his discipline, perseverance, and extraordinary knowledge of the world's geography. I am proud to represent Tine, who attends 7th Grade at Colleyville Middle School and founded the Geography Club at the school.

This year, 5 million students, ranging from fourth to eighth grade, studied and perfected their geographic skills as they competed in nationwide geographic bees. Students like Tine spent many months preparing by studying landscapes, and physical features around the globe.

As the 13th place finisher in the 2010 National Geographic Bee, Tine prepared for this year's competition by studying 24-page spreadsheets filled with facts and information about geographic areas and cultures. Competing against 53 semi-finalists, Tine flawlessly answered 119 questions, including five final tiebreakers. Tine was awarded a scholarship for his hard work.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to congratulate Tine on this significant accomplishment. I ask all of my distinguished colleagues to join me in commending Tine Valencic, winner of the 2011 National Geographic Bee.
